Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill now before the House, known as the Transportation Act of 1939, is to fix a national transportation policy that will unify or coordinate the several transportation agencies—railroads, trucks, and water carriers—into a national transportation system under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission with power to regulate each of them in the public interest.

THE NEED FOR A NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY

The present distressed condition of railroads throughout the Nation is known to all. Over 63,390 miles of class I railroads—those earning $1,000,000 or more of gross revenues—are in the hands of receivers or trustees. This represents nearly one-third of the entire railroad mileage of the Nation. More than 60 roads, with an approximate mileage of 140,000, have during recent years showed a deficit of nearly $160,000,000 per annum.

Railroads are not the only agency of transportation in distress. In recent years the trucking industry and water carriers on the Great Lakes, in coastwise and intercoastal trade have likewise suffered continual and heavy losses. Aviation has had a similar experience.

The chaotic condition of transportation became a problem that could no longer be ignored. Numerous investigations and surveys, both governmental and private, have been conducted. The problem has been studied from every angle by men of experience and training. Varied recommendations and solutions have been offered, but, practically all are of the opinion that first and above all the thing most necessary to be done, regardless of what else might be done, was to coordinate our different transportation agencies under common regulatory control so that all forms of transportation might operate as a unified system in serving the public.

VIEWPOINT OF PRESIDENT

On September 17, 1932, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in his campaign for the Presidency, at Salt Lake City, recognized the need of a national transportation policy that would coordinate all carrier service and in that speech forcibly advocated the development of such a policy.

In conformity with this viewpoint, President Roosevelt in a message to the House of Representatives on May 4, 1933, said among other things:

> Our broad problem is so to coordinate all agencies of transportation as to maintain adequate service.

In another message to Congress on June 7, 1935, the President said:

> It is high time to deal with the Nation's transportation as a single, unified problem. For many years in the past transportation meant mainly railroads. But the rise of new forms of transportation, great expenditures of Government funds for the development of waterways, and for the building of great highways, and the development of invention within the railroad system itself, have enlarged the problem far beyond that conception which dominated most of our past legislation on the subject. In some instances, the Government has helped a little. In others it retarded. In still others it has given special assistance from time to time—in many instances without rhyme nor reason—in all instances without considering every aspect of the problem in the light of all the conditions. It is small wonder that it is a transportation picture so confused the public have been inadequately served.

Continuing, and I invite your close attention to his words, he said:

> I have from time to time, in this session, addressed the Congress as to the necessity of various forms of Government aid and regulation of transportation. * * * I can see no reason why the responsibility for the regulation of intercoastal, coastwise, and inland waterways should not be vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, with proper provision for the departmentalization of the work of the Commission * * *.

In a radio address from the White House, on April 28, 1935, the President said:

> Not only business recovery, but the general economic recovery of the Nation will be greatly stimulated by the enactment of legislation designed to improve the status of our transportation agencies. There is need for legislation providing for the regulation of interstate transportation by bus and trucks, to regulate transportation by water, new provisions for strengthening our merchant marine and air transport, measures for the strengthening of the Interstate Commerce Commission to enable it to carry out a rounded conception of the Nation's transportation system in which the benefits of private ownership are retained, while the public stake in these important services is protected by the public's Government.

FORMULATION OF NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY

The first step toward bringing all the transportation agencies of the Nation into unified control under the Interstate Commerce Commission, as suggested by the President in his declaration for a national transportation policy, was taken in 1935 when the Interstate Commerce Commission was given the power to regulate trucks and busses engaged in interstate operations.

Then, in 1938, the President recognizing that the transportation problem, particularly with reference to railroads, was becoming exceedingly serious he requested Chairman Splawn, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Commissioners Eastman and Mahaffie to consider the transportation problem and present recommendations for legislation.

No one who is familiar with the character, ability, and experience of these three members of the Interstate Commerce Commission would doubt the wisdom of the President in selecting them for this important task, nor question the soundness of their findings.

This committee of three after careful consideration and study presented to the President a report. The report was transmitted to Congress on April 11, 1938, House Document 583, accompanied by a message from the President.

In his message to Congress the President stated that during the past month he had "consulted with a large number of individuals on the increasingly difficult problem of our railroad transportation" and pointed out that it was "important for all of us to cooperate in preventing serious bankruptcies among a large number of railroad companies, great and small." In the same message the President further stated:

The troubles of the railroads are not new, but they have been getting, on the whole, steadily more difficult since before the World War. It is true that a general upturn in business would undoubtedly help to keep many railroads from actual receivership. But it is also true that resumption of traffic at last year's level would not solve their growing difficulties permanently.

On September 20, 1938, the President appointed another committee to consider transportation problems and recommend legislation. This committee comprised six men who knew the practical side of railroading. Three of the committee represented railroad management and three represented railroad labor. Every member of that committee is recognized as having outstanding ability in his particular field of activity. The character, ability, and experience of these men was sufficient to justify confidence in their findings and conclusions. On December 23, 1938, this committee submitted its unanimous report and recommendations to the President.

A reading of the reports submitted to the President by these two committees reveals that each had made a profound study of the transportation problem; and it is not surprising that in many particulars similar recommendations were made as a part of a program to solve some, though not all, of the difficulties with which the different agencies of transportation were faced. Both of these committees, as well as every other responsible person or group making a study of the question, have recommended the formulation of a national transportation policy that would unify under one single regulatory governmental body the several agencies of transportation. Both the Committee of Three and the Committee of Six recommended that the regulatory body should be the Interstate Commerce Commission.

PROBLEM STUDIED BY COMMITTEE AND REPORT MADE TO HOUSE

Upon the convening of this session of Congress the appropriate committees of the Senate and the House undertook the study of the transportation problem and the formulating of legislation to meet the existing needs. This task in the House was undertaken by your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. For 10 weeks the committee conducted hearings on the proposed legislation. Numerous witnesses were heard, representing every conceivable interest. Never has any committee of this House been more zealous and earnest in the desire to obtain all possible information and every worthwhile opinion and viewpoint. The one and only thought that dominated the committee was to formulate legislation that would be helpful to all forms of transportation and in the public interest and that would justify the confidence that this House has always had in its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. At no time did political partisanship divide us in either thought or action. Consequently this bill comes before the House with practically the unanimous approval of the committee. Only two members have dissented, and their objection is only to one or two features of the bill.

Nothing could more clearly set forth the fundamental purpose of this legislation and the desire to preserve the inherent advantages of every form of transportation than the declaration of this committee in the bill as to what should be our national policy in this important matter. Permit me to read from the bill:

It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, adequate, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices; and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions established through collective bargaining. All to the end of insuring the development and preservation of a national transportation system adequate at all times to meet most economically and efficiently the full needs of the commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense.

That declaration of policy is the foundation upon which this bill has been drawn. In no particular does any provision of this bill deviate from it in the slightest degree; each provision and all of them taken together do nothing other than make that declaration effective as a national policy. With the administration of the act in accordance with the spirit and intent of the act no unfair or unjust advantage can be gained by one means of transportation over another. And certainly there is neither probability or possibiltiy that water carriers will be ruined or wiped out as has been so extravagantly stated by some Members during the course of this debate. The same arguments were made and fears expressed when motor carriers a few years back were brought under the regulatory jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The short time that has intervened has been sufficiently long to disprove the foundation of such fears and to demonstrate the advantages and resultant benefits that have been gained by that industry. This in itself is sufficient to answer every argument that has been made against the extension of regulatory power to the Interstate Commerce Commission over water carriers. [Applause.]

OPPOSITION NOT JUSTIFIED BY FACTS

Now, a word or two to those Members of the House who are members of the President's own party, and who have spoken bitterly against this bill. Men who have been and now are ardent, zealous, and perpetual followers of the President, if we are to judge by the fervent manner in which they pledge to him their allegiance—I have been astounded by the manner in which some of them have attacked this measure as a railroad bill, as a bill in the interest of Wall Street, as an effort to destroy water carriers throughout the Nation. When they make these and similar attacks upon this bill they are thereby impugning the motives of their own leader, the President. For it was he who as a candidate for the Presidency pointed to the necessity for this type of unified regulatory control. It was he who, as President, on numerous occasions in messages to Congress and in addresses to the Nation advocated and sought from Congress just what your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has presented to this House in this bill. It was he who in these recent days requested the consideration and passage by Congress of this legislation at this session of Congress. Thus, when you condemn this bill as being based upon ulterior motives you are making your charges against the President. The members of the committee that reported this legislation, Democrats and Republicans, were only fulfilling a task laid upon them by the President. They have responded whole-heartedly and to the best of their ability because, casting aside all considerations of partisanship, we have believed the President to be right in the policy he has advocated for a coordinated system of transportation under the regulatory jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Let me remind these erring brothers "that so long as the light holds out, the vilest sinner may return," and you still have an opportunity to repent and show your contrition by voting for the bill in its entirety.

Unfortunately, the time at my disposal does not give me an opportunity to address my remarks to all the baseless charges that have been made by the opponents of the bill.

WATER CARRIERS WILL NOT BE DESTROYED

First. The charge has been made that the purpose of the bill is to destroy water carriers. I challenge any Member of this House to point to one provision, or, any combination of provisions, that could effect such a purpose even if the desire to do so existed. The charge is so ridiculous that I doubt whether it should be dignified with an answer. If this charge be true then the President in suggesting this regulatory policy was planning for their destruction. If this charge be true then the Committee of Three, composed of three of the Government's most trusted and able public servants, and the Committee of Six were in conspiracy to effect a purposeful destruction of water carriers in the interest of the railroads of the country and in similar fashion such a charge lays at the door of the membership of the House committee a willingness, either through ignorance or intent, to accomplish by legislative means what otherwise could not be accomplished. And if none of these were imbued with the intent to do this thing then who is guilty of having led the President to recommend and your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to cooperate in such an enterprise. Of course, there is no foundation for such a charge either in the provisions of the bill or the intent and purpose behind the bill.

It may be that those who make such a charge do so upon the theory that the power to regulate is the power to destroy. This reduced to plain language would mean that they believe the Interstate Commerce Commission would use the power of regulation to destroy the water carriers. If the charge is made seriously, then I ask, why would the Commission do so? They have not done so with reference to that portion of water-carrier transportation that is now within its jurisdiction. They have not done so with respect to motortrucks and busses that are now within its regulatory power. On the contrary, the trucking industry is on a more stable basis than at any time in its history. With the experience already gained additional benefits will accrue in the days ahead.

The Interstate Commerce Commission needs no defense at my hands. Its faithful, conscientious, and able handling of the powers and duties committed to it, for the more than 50 years of its existence, is a guaranty of the high quality of service that can be expected in the future as additional powers and increased jurisdiction is given to it.

BILL WILL NOT RAISE WATER RATES TO LEVEL OF RAIL RATES

Second. Those less antagonistic than the class of opponents to which I have just referred, express fear that the Interstate Commerce Commission if given the power over rates as provided for in this bill will raise water-carrier rates to the level of rail rates and thereby divert the traffic to the railroads. Neither reason nor logic would justify such a charge. The provisions of this bill would preclude the possibility of such a result. Everyone recognizes that under certain circumstances transportation by water is cheaper than by rail. In fact, this bill recognizes that in many instances that it is so cheap that actual competition between rail and water carriers does not exist. The exemption of bulk carriers under the provisions of this bill is a recognition of this principle. Remember, this bill specifically requires that the regulation shall be "fair and impartial" as to all modes of transportation, and, the act so administered "as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each."

Furthermore, I direct your attention to the results of regulation of motor carriers engaged in interstate operations. The same fear was expressed when that bill was under consideration by this House. There is a striking similarity to the arguments then and now made. Already the administration of that regulatory act has not only proved generally satisfactory to the parties affected, but it has not resulted in increasing rates. Shippers today, because of the stabilizing effect of the regulation of the motor industry, are receiving better and more economical service than at any previous time. Likewise, it might be pointed out that regulation of railroads has shown a gradual and continual dropping of rates over a period of 15 years. The fear of increased rates to drive business away from water carriers to the railroads is a myth without any substance of justification. [Applause.]

All water carriers are not opposed to regulation

Third. Some of the Members opposing this bill have sought to make it appear that all water carriers are opposed to regulation. Such is not the case. Many of them, through their representatives, have made known to the committee their desire for the stabilizing influence of regulation. Regulation invariably cuts out the "chiseler" whether it be a carrier or a shipper seeking some unfair advantage over a competitor.

As evidence of this desire upon the part of some of the established water carriers, I direct your attention to the testimony of General Ashburn, president of the Federal Barge Line, a Government-owned and operated water carrier. In testifying before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on May 8, 1935, with reference to a bill similar in effect as that now before the House, he said:

> The fact that I bring these matters up does not alter my belief that the Interstate Commerce Commission is the proper body to administer the regulation of all forms of transportation.

Testifying further, he said:

> I advocate all forms of shipping should be placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Similar views as to the necessity and advisability of regulation of water carriers were expressed by L. W. Childress, president of the Mississippi Valley Barge Line, a privately owned company operating on the Mississippi River. At a joint hearing held by the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and a subcommittee on merchant marine of the Senate Committee on Commerce in the Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, when a bill to regulate rates of water carriers by the Interstate Commerce Committee was under consideration, Mr. Childress testified:

> Conditions prevailing in the transportation industry persuade me to believe that stabilization of rates—a matter in which the public has a very vital interest—can come only through Federal regulation. I am informed that this is also the view of those responsible for the management of the Inland Waterways Corporation, a Government-owned enterprise. More than 95 percent of the common-carrier traffic on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers is handled by that company and ours.

Continuing, he said:

> That the shippers are overwhelmingly in favor of regulation appears to be evidenced by the vote on a referendum on the subject taken by the United States Chamber of Commerce. One thousand six hundred and fifty-four local chambers of commerce voted in favor of regulation, while but 286 voted in opposition to regulation. It is significant that the votes of the chambers of commerce of St. Louis, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, Memphis, and New Orleans, which are served by river transportation, were in favor of regulation.

Now, with respect to the coastal or intercoastal shipping viewpoint, there is a similar expression of approval of regulation by Edward P. Farley, of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. In his testimony before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries at a hearing on a bill for the regulation of water transportation during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, he said:

> I can only say that at the Senate hearing I appeared for a number of common-carrier companies who were in favor of the bill. I have not inquired of them or asked them whether they have changed their opinion. So far as our company is concerned, we still believe that coordinated regulation, as provided in this bill, is valuable and helpful and a necessary clarification of the regulation we are now under. Putting such regulation under the Commission will enable the regulating body to be more helpful in regulating transportation as a whole.

There is much more testimony of similar character that could be presented if time permitted. All of this indicates that the water carriers themselves are anxious for regulation because of its stabilizing effect on an industry that at times has bordered on chaos.

As a concluding statement on this question of whether or not water carriers are opposed to regulation, and, to refute the statement so frequently made that they are opposed, permit me to make reference to the testimony of Mr. John J. Burns, counsel for the American Merchant Marine Institute, before the Senate committee on S. 2009. The association for whom he appeared represents 49 percent of the total tonnage operating out of Atlantic and Gulf ports under the American flag. He testified:

> I am informed that several of the intercoastal and several of the coastwise operators are in favor of the general provisions of this bill and some of the ones you mentioned are members of the association. Eastern Steamship Co. is, the Luckenbach is not, but an affiliated company is, and the American-Hawaiian is.

Continuing, he said:

It may be conservatively stated, therefore, that a majority of the substantial waterway carriers are in favor of regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I am certain that these references to the favorable attitude taken by the substantial water carriers of the Nation is sufficient to show that the charge that the water carriers do not want regulation is without any foundation in fact.

FARMERS ARE NOT OPPOSED TO REGULATION OF WATER CARRIERS

Fifth. The charge that the farmers of the Nation are opposed to regulation of the water carriers is likewise without justification. It cannot be truthfully said that the farmers have at any time so expressed themselves. As a complete answer to such a charge of opposition upon the part of farmers I direct your attention to that very able, complete, and informative speech of our colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], appearing upon pages 9197–9202 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This speech contains a compilation of the resolution adopted by recognized farm organizations in some 15 or more of our so-called farm States expressing their opinion that all forms of transportation, including water carriers, should be brought under governmental regulation.

In this same connection I wish that time would permit me to dwell at length upon the splendid speech of Senator REED, made in the Senate when the Wheeler bill was under discussion a few weeks ago. He plainly and emphatically showed that there was no reason either in principle or in the language of the bill that made regulation of water carriers harmful to the best interests of the farmers. In that speech he said:

I am saying that nobody has ever been able to point out how any benefit has been derived by a farmer in the State of Kansas from the water rate. I think this statement applies equally to Minnesota, to North and South Dakota, and the rest of the so-called grain States. It has never been possible for anybody to show that the farmer got any benefit out of the water rate and General Ashburn's letter to me dated May 10, 1939, is a complete demonstration of that fact.

That is the statement of a Senator who spoke, as he said—

Without fear of successful contradiction, having tried for 20 years the class of cases in which the question of marketing costs and the effect of water transportation rates upon the price of grain to the farmer is involved.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION IS APPROPRIATE REGULATORY BODY

Sixth. In concluding my answer to the charges that have been made by opponents of this bill, I wish to make slight reference to the claim that has been argued with such fervor by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, namely, that regulation of water carriers should come under the jurisdiction of the Maritime Commission instead of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He does not argue that water carriers are not a proper subject of regulation. In fact, he has introduced, and the committee of which he is chairman has favorably reported, a bill, which is now on the calendar of the House, providing for the complete and effectual regulation of water carriers. Thus we have the opinion of this distinguished chairman and the committee over which he so ably presides, expressed both by appropriate bill and written report, that regulation of water carriers is necessary and advisable. What better answer could be made to those who are opposing any regulation? It is irrefutable and unanswerable, coming as it does from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House.

Thus the only question at issue is with reference to the particular body or governmental agency that can most appropriately exercise the regulatory jurisdiction to be conferred.

If there was to be no effort to provide a unified transportation system and policy for the Nation; if each mode of transportation was to be given unbridled leave to compete by means fair or foul; if the policy was to be inaugurated to let "dog eat dog" in a wild effort to procure traffic—then there would be some justification in permitting each form of transportation to have its own particular governmental agency. The mere statement of the issue is sufficient to demonstrate the fallacy of providing separate control boards if the public interest is to be served in the highest sense. The spirit and purpose that underlie every effort to reorganize the departments of government to promote efficiency of operation protest against the suggestion of separate commissions for differing modes of transportation.

The President, in recommending a single regulatory body for all transportation, is right. He can clearly see and appreciate the tremendous difficulties that would be encountered in working out a national transportation policy based upon a coordinated and unified system of transportation, hence his recommendation that in the public interest this regulatory power should be conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, that already exercises jurisdiction over railroads, motortrucks and busses, pipe lines, and a considerable portion of water carriers. This Commission already has under its jurisdiction nearly 90 percent of all traffic moving in interstate commerce. Consequently what commission could more fairly and reasonably serve the best interests of all—railroads, motors, water carriers, shippers, and consumers—to better advantage? The President is right in urging the enactment of legislation for a national transportation policy to provide unification and coordination of all transportation facilities throughout the Nation. He is equally right that this important task can be best accomplished by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Most of my time has now been consumed. There is much of a worthwhile character within this bill. I wish that time was available to enable me to go into the details of the bill. I am certain that a study of this bill will demonstrate to any impartial mind that a great task has been accomplished in a most commendable way, and the results will prove most beneficial to all methods of transportation, and likewise beneficial to the public.

In conclusion, I do wish to acknowledge with appreciation, the fine compliment that has been paid by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to those who have labored with him in the drafting of this legislation. As one of those to whom he has made reference I wish to express my high regard for the chairman of the committee. In the fulfillment of the arduous duties incident to the consideration and writing of this legislation he has displayed outstanding ability that will ever distinguish him as one of the great chairmen of this great committee. His fine sense of justice and fairness and always judicial attitude has enabled the committee to bring to this House legislation on this important subject that will be harmful to none, and we believe, helpful to all. As such it is entitled to the support of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, yesterday was Friday—to many people just another ordinary day—but to railroad labor it was black Friday, to maritime labor it was black Friday, to the producers and consumers of America it was black Friday, to the young and ambitious of our Nation who may have real hopes of gaining a foothold in the water transportation field it was black Friday, to the organized trucking interests of this country of ours it was black Friday, to the taxpayers of the United States it was black Friday.

I make this statement because, on Friday, we had presented to us this transportation bill which should be renamed the railroad management bill. We have already been told that this bill incorporates many of the suggestions of the Committee of Six, but we should be told again that the Committee of Six was entirely and wholly imbued with the railroad complex and atmosphere, and we should continue to keep in mind that this legislation is doubtlessly the quid pro quo resulting from agreements reached during the railroad wage reduction conference of several months ago—arguments which were reached between railroad management and some branches of railroad labor but evidently not all branches as is evidenced by the opposition of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen to this bill. It is my opinion that the trainmen have analyzed the pending legislation correctly. They have recognized the fact that when consolidations, mergers, and coordinations of railroad carriers or divisions within the railroad carriers are effected, then their interests as employees are necessarily jeopardized. In this connection I quote from a statement made to house members of the Maine delegation by Mr. W. E. Easler, who is the able and conscientious chairman of the Maine legislative board of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. In a communication dated May 3, 1939, Mr. Easler stated:

> At that time I advised that the provisions of the Lea bill were not favorable to either the public interest or the employees of the railroads in the different districts of the State of Maine, because of the consolidation features incorporated therein, as well as the coordinating of service possibility which would allow railroads to combine among themselves, eliminating a large number of employees because of the changes of divisional lines.
> By further analysis of the matter contained in the Wheeler bill we find that this bill contains the same consolidation features, and the possibility of the throwing out of employment of a large number of railroad employees, if the provisions are maintained as outlined in the bill. For this reason, we are not in favor of the Wheeler bill any more than we were for the Lea bill, unless these provisions covering consolidation and coordination of service are eliminated in the interest of both the public and the employees.

Referring to the New England situation with particular reference to Maine and the interests of the port of Portland, he further states:

> As you know, we now have had over some period of time considerable difficulty as between the port of Portland and Boston, with relation to the matter of water transportation, into which from time to time there has come a question as to how much influence has been exerted by the railroads in diverting of traffic and the handling of business.
> You should also know the possibility of what consolidation might mean when you realize that one management now operates the Boston & Maine and the Maine Central properties. If it were possible to eliminate divisional lines on these railroads, they could make flag stations of a lot of our towns and run trains over twice the distance, through which half of the employees would be put out of service, which I do not believe is what the trouble is with the railroads for they are still at the old trough, seeking additional advantages where the private interests can still further sacrifice and create additional unemployment through legislative procedure.

It is my opinion that the railroad experience and the labor-organization activity of Mr. Easler eminently qualify him as one in whom great confidence and reliance may be placed in matters pertaining to the welfare and best interests of railroad labor.

I note that the pending bill pays some lip service to the interests of railroad employees, but it is not my opinion that the language contained in the pending bill adequately protects such interests. There can be no doubt that consolidations and mergers desired by railroad management will be made without too great consideration of the interests of employees affected. We who have observed and experienced such consolidations of control and operations as are vividly portrayed by the merging of operating control of the Boston & Maine and Maine Central Railroads fully appreciate the significance and the merit of the criticism made by Mr. Easler in this connection. Certainly those railroad employees who were thrown out of employment by the merging of operations of the two roads to which I have referred stand as concrete symbols of the results which may be expected when, as, and if this legislation is finally passed by this House. Because of the consolidation and merger authorization in this bill, railroad labor will look back upon yesterday as a truly black Friday, indeed.

Maritime labor also appreciates the vital significance of this legislation to their welfare. Communications from maritime unions, from the International Longshoremen's Association, and other individuals who obtain their livelihood along the water fronts of our port cities, our lakes, and our rivers, indicate the alarm which this legislation is occasioning them. They are fully aware of the fact that this is a railroad-management bill and they know that the incorporation of the maritime industry under the rate-regulating powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission can have only one effect, which is that of increasing the rates of water-borne transportation. These men who for years have fought to obtain working conditions satisfactory to them in the maritime industry know that the natural effect of increased transportation rates will be to deprive them of productive hours of labor and will also increase the cost of living to them.

The longshoremen of Portland, Maine, are fully aware of the loss which they have incurred not only in dollars and in jobs, but in increased taxes as a result of the loss of business to our community because of the transportation discriminations resulting from the dual control and management of the Maine Central Railroad, a trunk line in our State, by the Boston & Maine Railroad which has been subject to the banking and financial connections of the New Haven and the Pennsylvania Railroad interests. So it was a black Friday for maritime labor all over the country when we realize that similar conditions will develop as a result of this legislation, not only because consolidations and mergers with dual control will follow, but because competitive modes of transportation will be forced by the I. C. C. to raise their freight rates and thereby cause a diversion of traffic from water to rails.

The producers and consumers of America will also feel the heavy effects of this legislation which is, in my opinion, designed to satisfy to a material extent the wishes and desires of the banking and financial interests which have been milking the railroad systems of this Nation. Producers and consumers will be compelled to pay the increased cost of transportation which must be inflicted on them as a result of this bill. But every Friday is black Friday for them because they are not organized to protect their own interests as are those who dictate the policies of the railroad operations of this country. Certainly, the consumers of our Nation are not in a position to send lobbyists to Washington to protect themselves against the impact of this rate-raising attempt to take more dollars out of their pockets in the form of increased transportation rates. Water-borne transportation has been a boon and a tremendous benefit to the consumers of this country and now this natural advantage is to be taken away because railroad management finds itself unable to cope with its problems without the assistance of Federal legislative compulsion. This was just another black Friday for the producers and consumers of every locality of this country who now have available the facilities of water-borne transportation.

To those in our Nation who are imbued with youth and ambition and who have vision and the hope of engaging in the business of transporting commerce by water, this bill establishes an almost insurmountable barrier. Any owner of a vessel which he desires to use in the transportation field, in the event that this bill, as it is now written, becomes a law, must appear before the I. C. C. and obtain a certificate of necessity and public convenience before he is entitled to develop the vision of transportation which he has had. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I may be pardoned if I indulge briefly in a recital of the facts surrounding an enterprise in my own State which vividly illustrates the point which I am making.

In the great potato empire of Aroostook County in the State of Maine, we have portrayed for us the all-too-usual example of the farmer being exploited by a railroad transportation system controlled by the financial interests of Wall Street. Here, in a county which at one time was the second greatest wealth-producing county of the entire Nation, we find farmers and potato producers literally driven to the wall by exorbitant costs of transportation. One railroad has been able to operate through this area and wax fat on profits while the producer of real wealth, the potato farmer, has taken the rap and today stands as a dramatic illustration of the results of monopolistic exploitation by an entrenched financial control of the railroad transportation system of this community. The Bangor & Aroostook Railroad, under the financial domination of a New York investment banking and securities-brokerage corporation, has operated for years, extending its monopolistic service to the potato farmers of Aroostook County. It has operated wholly intrastate and, although presumably under the regulations of the State public utilities commission, has, in my opinion, written its own ticket for the most part. It has charged high rates for the transportation of potatoes out of this region and has charged higher rates for taking back to the inhabitants of Aroostook County from the rest of the Nation those commodities which they had needed and used. The Bangor & Aroostook Railroad is one of the few railroads of the Nation which, because of its peculiar operation and because of its peculiar monopolistic position in the transportation field, has been able to meet the demands of its financial control because it has had no competition from other modes of transportation. It is true that the advent of the truck did cause some little disturbance to the financial manipulators of this natural railroad monopoly, but since 1935 the Motor Vehicle Act has been quite effective in handicapping this type of competition. So it is that the usual picture of financial exploitation has been developed and the farmer-producer has paid the bill and is now flat on his back.

But, within the past year, two young men, realizing the possibilities available for a venture in water-borne transportation of potatoes from Aroostook County to markets in New York and along the Atlantic Seaboard to the South, started with a relatively few dollars of capital to establish a coastal service for the distribution of this commodity. They purchased an obsolete fishing vessel of the beam-trawler type, solicited cargoes from the potato growers of Maine and began to transport these potatoes to the Eastern Seaboard. As a result, the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad immediately petitioned for a schedule of lower freight rates for potatoes although they had previously denied that they could operate on a lower schedule. This was granted and today, as a result of this venture of these young men in this field, we find the producers and the consumers of this area benefited. Now, then, the point is, that if this legislation which we are today considering had been in effect when these young men visualized the possibilities of this operation, there would have been no such operation and the old freight rates would still be in effect. I say that there would have been no such water-borne competition for the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad because, under the provisions of this bill these potential business men would have been compelled to file their application with the I. C. C. for a certificate of public convenience and necessity and this certificate would have been required before these young men could have started. Naturally, it is easy for a person to contemplate and appreciate the strenuous objections on the part of the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad to such an application. We all realize the delays which would have occurred in the granting of such a certificate. We all know the time that would have elapsed while hearings were held before the I. C. C., while briefs were filed, while arguments in opposition were made by highly paid railroad attorneys and we all know the tremendous expense which would have been necessitated on the part of these young men before they could have even started on their venture. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, if this bill had been in effect at the time these men had this typical American vision of making their way in the commercial world, they would not have been able to extend to the farmers of Aroostook County this valuable service during the past year. This example, briefly outlined, is only one case of thousands of similar cases that exist today and will come into existence tomorrow provided that this legislation is adopted. As a matter of fact, I am advised that a group of individuals has already considered a similar development of water transportation in the potato area of Aroostook County and stands ready to finance a modern streamlined refrigerated service for this purpose. They are waiting, Mr. Chairman, to check the final results of this pending legislation because they realize that the necessity for obtaining a certificate of necessity and public convenience may well be the millstone which may too heavily weigh down their hopes and aspirations for the inauguration of such a venture. They know that railroad attorneys obstructing such an application for a certificate before the I. C. C. can delay them almost indefinitely. It is my honest opinion that the inclusion of water carriers under the regulating power of the I. C. C. will seriously impair the possibility of this great development in the transportation activities of our State and the Eastern Seaboard.

The trucking interests, particularly the small operators, in a similar manner have felt the restraining hand of the I. C. C. during the past few years and the maritime and water interests will feel that same paralyzing effect if this legislation is adopted. Certainly today in this country we do not wish to close the door to the youth of our Nation who should have the same opportunity to engage in the water transportation field as we and as our fathers have had. This legislation means the end of small operations in the maritime industry. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that every move which has been made during the past several years in the Congress of the United States has been effective in strangling the initiative, the opportunity, and the chances for a man with small capital to start in any field of commercial activity and this holds particularly true of the transportation field.

Additional opportunities by new operators to engage in trucking are seriously impaired. Maybe this is justified because of the so-called chaotic condition of trucking operations before the Motor Vehicle Act was adopted. I do not know whether or not this is true, but this is the representation of those who sponsored and supported the Motor Vehicle Act. But certainly no such chaos or confusion exists today in the maritime industries. The same arguments that led to the adoption of the Motor Vehicle Act certainly do not apply to water-borne transportation as it exists today in this country. If this bill passes with title II included as it is now written, it will be black Friday, indeed, for those who have the ambition, intestinal fortitude, and a few dollars to engage in water-transportation activity.

Mr. Chairman, a communication dated July 17 from the American Trucking Association, Inc., of Washington, D. C., indicates that today will be noted as "black Friday" for the trucking interests of this country, provided that language originally used in this bill, which is to be deleted for the time being, as I understand, is incorporated once again when this bill goes to conference. Can anybody doubt after he has read the original language of this bill that the railway express agency was given the right-of-way in intercity operations over all other trucking interests? Why was this the fact? Why was the railway express agency—a railroad affiliate—granted such an extension of privilege? Naturally this is a railroad-management bill and naturally we can expect that other language in this bill has been designed to give other activities of the railroad industry an extension of privilege and of discrimination against other modes of transportation.

Of course, this language granting the railway express this advantage has been temporarily deleted as a sop to the trucking interests of the country, and I certainly am pleased that this growing type of transportation has been able to exert the influence necessary to obtain this proposed deletion. But those who are guarding the destiny of the trucking interests fully appreciate the fact that they cannot rest easy in this present deletion because it is only a matter of time when this approach will be made again by the railroad-management lobby, and once again legislation will come before this House granting to the competitive railway express a privilege and an advantage over the other trucking interests of our country. So, indeed, it was black Friday for the truckers of the Nation as they realize this attack which has been made upon their interests and which doubtlessly will be continued when the conferees meet to discuss further this legislation.

And then, Mr. Chairman, as one scans the provisions of part III of the bill, which outline amendments to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, there is certainly evidenced the fact that this was black Friday for the taxpayers of our country. Here we find provisions making it possible for the R. F. C. to aid by loans or by direct purchase in the financing, reorganization, reduction, or readjustment of principal or interest charges of the railroads of America. Here we find that a Government agency is authorized to make loans to railroads or their receivers or trustees for the purpose of purchasing the financial obligations which are now on the financial markets of the United States. In other words, any of these securities which may be purchased which do not liquidate themselves by repayment will eventually be paid for by the taxpayers of this Nation. The depreciation of these obligations has been a vital loss to the investors of our country, and now the taxpayers are called upon to make loans for the purpose of repurchase of these obligations and depreciated values. If these values depreciate further, the taxpayers and the investors once again as taxpayers must pay the bill. Financial and legal exploitation of the railroads of this Nation is so well known and so well established that further words are unnecessary in this connection. Certainly this Congress should not be called upon to aid and assist further in this financial debauchery.

For these reasons and many others, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill.

The statements have been made that title II is necessary because chaos and confusion exist in the water-borne transportation; because water commerce is not now regulated; because we need a coordinated and unified regulatory system of transportation. As a matter of fact, confusion does not exist; water commerce by water is regulated for the most part and that which is not is willing to be regulated by the Maritime Commission. Why do we need a unified system of transportation? Who is asking for it? Who demands this legislation other than railroad management? Unified control means higher rates, higher cost of living, more unemployment, loss of opportunity for those with the ambition and vision to establish new transportation ventures.

It has been stated that intercoastal and coastal interests have asked for the bill. I am told that the Eastern Steamship Line of New England, the Merchants & Miners Transportation Co., operating out of Boston and other shipping concerns have joined in this request. That is most easy to understand when one realizes that a partner of Hayden & Stone, investment bankers of Boston, is a director of the Eastern Steamship Lines and at the same time is vitally interested in the Boston & Maine Railroad. I do not know whom the Merchants & Miners may have as directors on their board interlocking with railroad financiers but it is most probable that some such affinity of interests exists. The only requests of shipping interests for regulation under this bill doubtless come from similar interlocking interests and financial combinations of that character.

Certainly farmers have not asked for the legislation and for the most part know nothing about it. The National Grange, through its national office, opposes it.

Certainly shippers have not asked for it and when they find that rates will be increased as a result of it, will condemn any Member who votes for it.

Truckers, maritime labor, and a large segment of the Railroad Brotherhoods' membership have not asked for it and are opposed to it.

No person, except railroad management, Mr. Chairman, who fully appreciates the eventual effect of this bill wants it, and by the same token all such strongly oppose it.

Therefore, because it will reduce railroad and maritime employment; because it will raise transportation rates; because it will stifle any further development by the small fellow in water transportation; because it will use the taxpayer through Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance the repurchase of depreciated railroad debt; because it will serve to assist one type of transportation at the expense of another, I am opposed to this legislation at this time. Let us make this past Friday a good Friday rather than a black Friday in our legislative annals by determining to kill off this bill.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN].

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent an agricultural district. The east part of my district is bounded by the Mississippi River, and when we started the discussion of this bill I was inclined to be opposed to it, but after reading the provisions of the measure and listening to the arguments I am convinced the committee has done a wonderful job in bringing to the Committee, and I hope ultimately to the House, this splendid, coordinated plan of transportation which will inure to the benefit of the entire Nation in the years to come. It seems to me that our transportation problem has reached the point where we must consolidate all forms of transportation, abandon regulation altogether, or resort to Government ownership. The only logical solution is to place all forms of transportation under one regulatory body, the Interstate Commerce Commission. It appears to me that the arguments against the bill are based upon fear of something that may happen and distrust in the honesty and integrity of a great governmental body, the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Therefore I shall support this bill, because I believe it is the only solution of this very difficult problem that confronts us.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, transportation has been called the circulatory system of commerce.

Commerce would be impossible without it.

Transportation must be over ways or roads which are the common property of all the people. If they were private property, commerce could be obstructed and prevented. All roads or ways, whether of one kind or another, are held and must be held in trust for the benefit of all the people.

The equal benefit of highways, canals, rivers, and railroads can be assured to the people in only two ways. They must be either regulated in the common interest or they must be publicly operated for the benefit of the people. At this time we need not discuss the relative advantages or disadvantages of the two methods since regulation is at present the accepted public policy.

My colleague on the committee, Mr. WADSWORTH, inveighs against interference or regulation on the theory that it is an improper and therefore unjust interference with individual effort and freedom. The assurance of the greatest possible freedom of individual effort and initiative in the use and management of private property I approve.

Highways and roads are not, however, private property, and that fact and that distinction must be kept in mind in any consideration of the subject now before the House. Since canals, highways, rivers, and railroads are public highways, they must be so utilized as to assure as far as possible to all of the people equal rights in the benefits of the same.

In fact, it is only by control of transportation agencies by the public in order to assure all the people equal opportunity on equal terms, that private efforts and private business can progress and thrive and commerce develop.

Regulation is one form of operation by the public. The public stipulates certain duties and conditions to be observed by the persons entrusted with its property, the different kinds of highways, just as it places certain obligations upon a person to whom it pays a salary to operate such property.

Now those who do the actual work of operating agencies of transportation of whatever kind are important factors in the business. The safety of the traveling public, and the care of property requires that competent and intelligent persons shall operate the motive power and guide the instruments used in transportation. Proper working conditions and just compensation for service must prevail in order to attract to the service such competent and intelligent persons as I have mentioned. On the other hand, inferior mechanism and less-skillful workmen could be employed to operate similar agencies of transportation. In such cases, however, the degree of safety to both passengers and property would be greatly lessened. If allowed to continue uncontrolled and unregulated they would not only jeopardize the safety of passengers and cargo but would also drive out of business those who endeavor to observe the requirements for efficient and safe operation of transportation agencies.

We are told that the regulation of waterways would retard the development of transportation thereunder. That same argument was made in the past in regard to the operation of railroads and yet no one would think of saying to the railroads, now do just as you please. It seems to be assumed by the opponents of regulation that those who are to be entrusted with the duty of regulation would be persons of neither intelligence nor enterprise, and therefore would be unable, if not unwilling, to provide for a proper and prompt development of such agencies of transportation.

As already stated, the use of any kind of highway must be subject to public regulation, either through the public's own direct action or as applied to private persons entrusted with the management of such agencies. The more complex becomes our civilization and the more concentrated becomes the population the greater the need for rules of traffic. If we are to regard the means of transportation as the circulatory system of commerce, certainly there must be a power, as in the body, to assure the natural and proper circulation. Proper regulation must prevail in all of the agencies of transportation in the interest of justice to all of the persons engaged in such particular line of transportation.

It is true, of course, also that as between one kind of transportation and another, the same principle applies. If we are to encourage highway transportation for example, and provide for regulation, from the standpoint of the public welfare, certainly the same principles should apply to water and railroads. To compel any type of transportation agencies to observe sane methods of operation and to provide fair conditions for employees engaged by them while allowing all others to run riot would simply mean that you destroy the agencies compelled to follow proper methods and to provide proper conditions for those actually doing the work.

If we compel the greatest agency of transportation in the country, namely, the railroads, to observe as far as possible standards of modern civilization we should not allow other types of transportation to disregard all such standards. If we should do so we shall not only wreck and destroy the main agency of transportation in the Nation, but ultimately destroy private industry, commerce, and even the unregulated kinds of transportation themselves. Transportation agencies must be considered as a whole in order to be properly operated. That being true, there must be a single authority exercising jurisdiction over all. There should be a single authority for the reason that we should have one kind of judgment, one interpretation of the principles which are applied to regulating all forms of transportation. To do otherwise is to apply one standard to this and another standard to that form of transportation according to the conceptions of the different regulating authorities.

Nor must it be assumed, for a single moment, that regulating the different kinds of transportation agencies requires the fixing of the same rates for each of the transportation agencies. Applying the same principles to the different kinds of transportation agencies in the matter of rate-making might, and very likely would result in entirely different rates from the standpoint of dollars and cents. That being true, we will find each agency of transportation carrying the particular traffic to which it might be naturally adapted. This is as it should be in any comprehensive system of regulation.

It has been urged, however, that legislation is now pending for the regulation of all waterways by the Maritime Commission and that the regulation there proposed, as far as rate-making is concerned, is substantially what is proposed in the present Lea bill. The Bland bill also proposes, however, that a kind of board of arbitration be established to reconcile rates that may be fixed by the Maritime Commission and those fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the other forms of transportation.

Now since the Interstate Commerce Commission has been in existence for 52 years, being the oldest regulating agency of the Government, thoroughly familiar with the whole subject of regulation, and composed of persons who have not only shown the ability but the desire to serve the best interests of the public, it would seem that instead of transferring their work to some new agency familiar at best with only one form of transportation agency, that the reverse proposal is better, namely, the transfer to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the jurisdiction over inland waterways. This would bring all of the agencies of transportation under the jurisdiction of experienced, able, and intelligent men. It would make sure that the same interpretation of principles would be applied to one agency of transportation as to the others, and that is the ultimate goal of just regulation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That this act, divided into titles and sections according to the following table of contents, may be cited as the Transportation Act of 1939:

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING LAW

SHORT TITLE FOR ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE; DECLARATION OF NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY

SECTION 1. The act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 49, secs. 1–27; Supp. IV, title 49, secs. 3, 6, 11, 15, 18, 21, 22, 25, 26, 301–327), is amended by inserting before part I the following:

"SHORT TITLE

"This act may be cited as the Interstate Commerce Act.

"NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY

"It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices; to cooperate with the several States and the duly authorized officials thereof; and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions—all to the end of developing, coordinating, and preserving a national transportation system by water, highway, and rail, as well as other means, adequate to meet the needs of the commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense."

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JONES of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. COLE of New York—at the request of Mr. HALLECK—on account of death in family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the pending bill by inserting therein part of the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short address by Fletcher Padgett at Springfield, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a telegram with regard to the work-relief bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by Robert H. Jackson, Solicitor General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

HULL'S PEACE FETISH

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes and to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, our Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, is an able and a good man. For many years he served with high honor and great distinction in this House and in the United States Senate. When I first came to Congress 10 years ago, I learned to respect the man for his own personal qualities, and to admire his serene dignity. Notwithstanding my great admiration for him, I have never been able to accept the philosophy underlying the reciprocal-trade agreements. I was rather surprised that the able gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], on one afternoon early this week stood here in defense of those treaties, because I think the reciprocal-trade program perhaps has done as much to rob the American cotton farmer of his market as any other one thing. I had hoped to answer the gentleman from Georgia at that time but it was late in the day and I did not desire to detain the House longer. I have here about an hour's speech. I do not want to inflict such punishment on Members at this late hour, but I have prepared it rather carefully and invite the attention of the membership to it, the title of which is "Hull's Peace Fetish."

Peace! Peace! Peace! The cry that Secretary of State Hull's reciprocal trade treaty policy is an instrument for world peace has been dinned into the American people so long that some of them, all unwittingly, are beginning to believe it. And yet there is no peace. Look at Europe and the Far East, and dare imagine the certainty of understanding and good will among men.

This propaganda in America, academically hooking up peace and trade, is reminiscent of that which inundated the country in 1916, and, curiously, under similar conditions. The Underwood free-trade policy helped initiate the Wilson depression. The executive branch of the Government used its powers of diplomacy secretly and arbitrarily to push us into the war in Europe at the very time it appealed for the sympathies of the people solely because of its pacific aims. We were pulled out of the depression all right, but at the cost of going to a war for which every man, woman, and child in America is still paying in countless ways.

Today we have the same situation in new spangles. Originally the main objective of the trade agreements was the promotion of American agricultural exports, which has been wholly unattained. As soon as Secretary Hull discovered that the purely economic objectives of his folly could not be achieved—owing to foreign resistance—he switched over to the emotional appeal for the sympathy of the American public in the word "peace."

Now his policy is the road to peace, notwithstanding that all Europe is arming to the teeth and millions of shells are now being dropped in China and recently in Spain—4 years after Mr. Hull's treaties have been initiated. It is ironical, incidentally, that the only appreciable increases in America's exports by virtue of the trade treaties are war exports.

The fact is that the reciprocal-trade policy, parading under the mantle of peace propaganda, is little else than emotionally clever. Some Americans, capable of the mass delusion that they were being invaded by Martians should be easy enough prey for the charms of the word "reciprocal." It has a sincerity, a magic all its own.

The word "reciprocal" means to make a return for something done or given, implying mutual exchange, or a return in kind or degree. But actually this particular reciprocal has exactly the opposite of its real meaning. Let me show a bit later on why this is true.

The essence of Mr. Hull's program is the necessity to depend upon consultation with foreign governments in bargaining for concessions on specific items of trade; that is, trading for reductions in tariff. Falling back on cognizance of the great American habit of winning its wars and losing its conferences, I contend that any conversations between our Government—especially as constituted in personnel at the present time—and others must be one-sided, and naturally injurious to our own welfare, and in the end to the welfare of others. We Americans have never demonstrated any marked ability as students of foreign trade, nor of our own actual and theoretical relationship thereto. Foreign governments, on the other hand, know what they want and—too bad for us—that we do not.

When two sides sit in conference on any knotty problem, one lacking full knowledge of the governing facts, and the other full of them, some result may be obtained, it is true. The temptation, however, for the side having the preponderance of possession of the facts to outsmart the other is generally too great for anything but dangerous result for both. An agreement may be reached and it may work after a fashion for a time, but in the end it collapses and generates problems greater and more difficult than the original. The classic example is the Treaty of Versailles.

If there were a remote possibility in the reciprocal trade agreement program that we Americans could come out somewhere near even in this conversational bargaining I would be in favor of it. That is but a sanguine hope, in my opinion, under the conditions which prevail.

In my work as a Representative I am often reminded that "ignorance plays the chief part among men." A great many of our legislators will admit privately that they did not know enough about world commerce intelligently to support or oppose the trade-agreements policy originated by our Lochinvar out of the South, Secretary of State Cordell Hull. In that respect they reflected a condition prevalent among the people, despite the fact that for years they have been reminded daily that the United States is the biggest single world-trader among the nations.

Regardless of the political weather of the moment the topic of American-international commerce consumes more space in the public prints than almost any other. It would be an off day, indeed, that batches of stories did not emanate from Washington, setting out figures, or some view or theory—often sheer propaganda—concerning this exchange of goods and services. We have a host of members in foreign-policy associations, international trade councils, financial organizations, export and import clubs, of bureaucrats, politicians, and academicians holding forth incessantly with shouts of their ideas of the meanings of world commerce.

All this ado, after all, is quite understandable and logical. International commerce is a vast affair, involving billions of dollars in annual turn-over, signifying the employment of millions of people at home and abroad, and the supplying of great sections of the world's population with the goods and services necessary for living. In point of fact, it is such a great and complicated affair that there are almost as many opinions about its proper functioning as there are authorities.

A legislator runs into the exponents of these conflicting opinions on world trade every day. At the present time they, in common with millions of their fellow citizens, gaze in unison toward the Washington horizon hoping there to find the reason for and, therefore, salvation from the depression calamities so inopportunely visited upon us anew. Yet few seem to see that one of the important reasons for the depression might be found in the conduct of our foreign trade. Apparently these experts know too little about America's world commerce, which would be reason enough as to why it had been so successfully and persistently mismanaged. The public, meanwhile, having neither the time nor the patience to question and examine what is said about the subject, permit vague, high-sounding generalities concerning it to get by without serious challenge.

In this welter of loose talk about world trade from statesmen and economists there is, notwithstanding the lessons of the past 20 years, a woeful lack of willingness to really study some of the fundamental truths concerning it. In fact, one of the most striking phenomena of our times is the failure of our leaders to interpret the facts regarding world commerce, and to formulate sensible concomitant policies to make it work as efficiently as it might be made to. Rather there has been a remarkable preference, contributing absolutely to the present degeneration and decay in world political affairs, for various expediencies to postpone the inevitable consequences of refusal to take account of the facts. The incredible and long-standing chaos in America's foreign-trade policies has resulted in a terrible loss of employment and purchasing power with its attendant psychology of despair not only at home but in foreign countries as well.

It is the movement of goods and services between countries which we call foreign trade which constitutes the soul of life. Anything tending to disrupt or prevent its normal flow obviously is harmful, the degree depending on the gravity of the disruption or prevention. The primary reason for international disputes attaches to the surrender of hunger to envy and hatred. We have been watching the near anarchy in Europe and the Far East for 20 years and have observed something of its reflection, in spite of our protective oceans, on our own economic, social, and political life. A sixth sense again warns us that a new great war, the possibility of which is with us every moment, holds more moral and material dangers for us, even if we, by some miracle, escape actually being in it.

Now we Americans, all the world knows, are profound lovers of peace both from selfish and altruistic motives. Few other nationals constantly put forward as much organized effort toward harmony and good will between nations. Characteristic American idealism, wishing to minister to the sufferings of a confused world, has expressed itself for three decades now in the spending of billions upon billions in charities abroad, as well as in the blessings of American schools, hospitals, and scientific institutions of one kind and another, and in the economic tools with which to attain better living standards. This generosity, rising to fantastic heights, has no precedent in all history.

At times Americans have, and rightfully, become obsessed with uneasy suspicions that their spontaneous emotions of generosity to peoples in other lands had been cynically exploited by the latter. Nevertheless, they still vaguely believe in the sincerity and logic of their public servants when over the radio and in the press the statement is made that world trade is an adjunct to peace. A good-neighbor principle, promising that trade will move freely between countries, keeping people contented and happy, naturally fascinates them with its idealistic appeal.

One might, unhesitatingly, say that the right international movement of goods and services is not just an aid to peace, but peace itself. But such a statement is the mouthing of a platitude which solves nothing. The attainment of perennial peace in the world is as likely as the total eradication of disease. However, if we approach the cosmic problem of trade in the same spirit of humility which we consider health, knowing that studied, careful moderate policy has the best chance of reward in longevity, we may, if it should be in the divine scheme of things, inject into world commerce some of the morality it sorely needs.

The trouble with world trade as it now exists rests in its not actually being an orderly process of interchanging goods and money under strict economic demand and supply. It is economic and financial warfare arbitrarily promoted, and leading ultimately to the employment of armies and navies. To a man traveling and studying abroad it becomes increasingly apparent that expressions of good neighborliness, brotherly love among other nations and the similar phrases of diplomats are often pretenses, the dementia of excuse. World commerce has become a mad international scramble for markets, governed by the rule that "all's fair in war." In very truth, the governments behind this scramble have become chiselers of the first water. The traders, the economic exploiters, concession hunters, and diplomats are frequently fronts for the baneful influences behind the scenes of voracious hunger for more world trade, control of raw materials and outlets for production, promoting the feverish building or navies for the protection of trade routes.

The unholy mess does, to be sure, call for the expert work of social science in various directions and the abridgment of old economic and political ways of behavior. For 150 years we in America have had peculiarly happy conditions of life, but times have changed. Unless we learn some sad facts these conditions will simply and imperceptibly vanish. While we want no entangling alliances, our paradise is not so isolated we can dismiss all other countries from mind. The world is getting too small to insure the well-being of any one nation without the cooperation of others, a reality with which even we, from a strictly selfish view, have to wrestle whether we like it or not.

Men and women in every land literally plead in their hearts that international intercourse slip its bonds of ignorance and stupidity. The world's finer minds call especially for trade policies to check undue dependence on force and the threat of force for prosperity. Why should not the more decent, the more like-minded nations, they ask, set examples to attract their weaker neighbors to sensible policies, to lessen the impulse behind their aggressions of the nations poor in resources by assisting them as much as possible to improve themselves?

In this picture America's influence is enormous, but sad to relate the public does not know what is going on. Perhaps the reason the public has been so apathetic to the problem thus far lies in the premise that it acquired a certain state of mind, inherited from the fact which has been existant from the dawn of our history, that we as a people enjoyed great self-sufficiency in natural resources and the means of their production—the skill of individuals—into usable wealth. It takes a long time to get rid of a state of a mind, but those good old decades of self-sufficiency and almost complete economic independence, however fervently we may wish them back, are gone forever.

Following the World War we have become more and more dependent on certain products of foreign countries. Our industrial technique and our increases in population and living standards caused new demands for raw materials from abroad—so much so that our imports of merchandise and materials rose from a total of $880,000,000 in 1901 to the enormous figure of $4,399,000,000 in 1929. By the same token, foreign countries became more and more dependent upon us for distinctive American products. Our exports grew from $1,465,376,000 in 1901 to $5,241,000,000 in 1929.

If one bears in mind that foreign trade consists of not simply the imports and exports of merchandise but also of the economic services imported and exported in terms of money, the physical imports and exports of gold and silver, and the movement of money by investments in countries, the subject of world trade is stripped down to its essentials. Without quoting the mass of statistics which prove the point, let me say that we have been selling ourselves short in our trade operations overseas, taking a net loss of great proportions.

Since the enactment of the reciprocal trade agreements policy into law, June 12, 1934, the United States made 447 reductions in duty on specific products of over a dozen foreign countries. It was said that as a result our exports would increase, and that such injuries as we would suffer in industry and agriculture would be offset by the benefits. But in reality while our imports of dutiable products increased between 1934 and the beginning of 1938 by 93.4 percent, exports of all United States merchandise increased by only 56.9 percent, according to official Department of Commerce figures. While the quantity of all our imports increased 52 percent during this period the quantity on the items on which tariff rates were reduced increased by 123 percent. But that is not all. In the meantime while foreign countries in certain cases gave us reciprocal-tariff concessions, they were nullified by their quota and exchange control policies.

The proponents of the reciprocal-trade agreements point with great pride to the fact that in 1937 our export shipments increased. But, do these reciprocal trade agreement admirers tell us that this showing would not look so good if we really examined it? Of course not. Running down the list of these increases we find great impetus in iron and steel scrap exports; in pig-iron shipments; in steel ingot sales, and so forth. Aircraft, parts and accessories, automobiles and parts, and a host of other implements of war accounted for the additional increases. Is anyone so naive as to imagine these upswings are due to a sudden return to normal mass demand abroad for American products of this kind? Who in the impoverished debt-ridden rank-and-file population of Europe buys these things? Why, naturally, the governments, or government subsidized or controlled interests.

Is it any wonder that anyone close to legislation which reaches into the disposition of our lives must of necessity get sick of the false preaching that our peace is dependent upon all ill-conceived foreign-trade policy? It demands no perspicacity to draw the connection between this sort of propaganda and the fact that our National Congress ponders the building of a naval force of the size no nation has ever dared to contemplate. It is a sad commentary on our affairs that this prating of the peace that comes out of the reciprocity agreements makes no mention of the signal fact that there has been no great revival in our export trade because of these agreements, beyond exports of the implements of war.

Nor will the advocates of the reciprocal-trade treaties tell us a great deal about the effect on our national welfare of the increase of hundreds of millions of dollars in our 1937 imports, including iron and steel, tremendous amounts of corn, barley, cattle, cotton, meat and meat products, all things with which we could inundate the world. Anyone grounded in arithmetic, and particularly one who has observed life abroad, knows that the production of every sort of product in foreign countries is literally sweated out of their people. We in America pay wages from 2 to 400 percent in excess of those paid abroad. The connection is obvious: The Hull program permits foreign nations to pay us in their sweated products, since they cannot give us gold for our exports of oil, steel products, nitrogens, sulfur, and similar accoutrements of war.

We do not realize—because no one takes the trouble to point it out to us—that our exports of goods represent the high-dollar value f. o. b. United States, whereas the figures for our imports represent the foreign value. This latter value does not include ocean insurance, freight, duty, importers' profits, and selling expenses. It is this low foreign value which compares with the high-wage and high-cost American valuation of exports, including profits, taxes, and so forth. To get at the real analysis of where we stand on these transactions we would have to multiply the figure of imports by at least the factor of two, according to experts. The picture then would reveal the American people paying out over $2,000,000,000 more in 1937 than they took in on the movement of goods alone.

The reciprocal trade treaty proponents counter that since we are a creditor country this is exactly the end desired.

The theory is that the only way foreigners can pay us what they owe is by shipping us their goods. I venture the view that at the present time we are a creditor nation on paper only. If we really are, it is exceedingly doubtful whether we can ever collect. But assuming that we can stand this loss of $2,000,000,000 in the exchange of goods, can we in addition stand the further loss of millions of dollars which our tourists expend abroad every year, which we pay out to foreign shipping countries for their freight services to us, in our immigrant remittances, and so on? I seriously question that we can.

Again, if these losses were not sufficient to break down our possibilities of prospering, what about the more serious question of labor displacement which results when we import goods which we make or grow ourselves? If we import $1,000,000 worth of chinaware from Japan and sell her machinery and scrap iron worth $2,000,000, we in effect also import $600,000 in Japanese labor. The million dollars' worth of chinaware would contain 10,000,000 hours of Japanese labor at 60 cents a day. The American chinaware workers, getting 60 to 75 cents an hour, could not claim their jobs very long after this million dollars' worth of Japanese china reached the American market. There are, in fact, 5,000 chinaware workers in Ohio out of work now, and will continue to be, so long as the foreign product has free access to our market. Certainly the $2,000,000 we received for the machinery and scrap iron sale to Japan cannot counteract the unemployment loss in American factories to which it contributed.

It may be argued, to stretch a point, that in periods of prosperity the United States can withstand this kind of short selling without irreparable damage, because of our resources. But now, in this new recession, the dangerous relapse after a severe economic illness, it is highly speculative as to whether we can pull through safely unless we radically revise our policies on world trade. The cumulative effects of our consistent foreign-trade losses through the years are such as to make its study and solution as imperative for immediate needs as balancing the Budget. We cannot go on sustaining a loss of well over a billion dollars a year, which is the actual excess of our imports over our exports of merchandise, of additional losses through gold and silver movements, and still more losses because of the huge excess of our expenditures abroad for services to our tourists and services to our business by foreign shipping companies over similar foreign expenditures in the United States.

The most important point of all is that if the countries to which we make tariff concessions do not fully reciprocate, in the long run they are damaging not only the people of the United States but their own nationals as well. Their economic systems, catering to the politics of armament, are purely artificial, and it is only a question of time before such trade intensifies the inevitable depression, sucking into its wake a thousand other social evils that cannot live in the sunlight of peace and understanding. I visualize this danger in other countries more significant than the material loss that we entail.

Now, while I am constrained to applaud Secretary of State Hull for explaining to the American people that they no longer enjoy the economic isolation of the pre-war epoch, I am far from happy over his bland assertions that his reciprocal-trade treaties make for peace. At least it seems utterly fantastic anyone could make the sweeping generalization that world peace is contingent upon the sacrifice of American industries by tariff concessions to foreign countries without compensating return, such concessions being theoretically the heart of the reciprocal-trade treaties. In effect, the good American people are asked to sacrifice their resources again for the sake of a decidedly nebulous international peace. I have no doubt many of them would gladly lay down their lives, if only they saw the promise that genuine international goodwill would ensue. In the light of past experience, and the war clubs now being brandished abroad, there is overwhelming doubt that such generous sacrifice would be of the slightest value. Accordingly, the only conclusion to be reached is that the reciprocal-trade treaties are destructive in policy, heading us for endless trouble in the manner that the peace treaties of 1919 placed us in the turmoil in which we live today.

Upon due reflection one is struck with the stark similarity which exists between this latest peace-marking effort of Secretary of State Hull and those which were instituted in our age of "normalcy"—the 1920's. At that time we were led to believe that investments in and trade with foreign countries were imperative to our national husbandry. We poured billions into Europe alone for governmental purposes, industry, and trade. We achieved a $5,000,000,000 export trade, and simultaneously became the world's largest buyer of the necessities from abroad which we could use, to the tune of four billions or so annually. But our peacemakers of that day ignored the realities of Europe's politics and economics. European insecurity and dispute, which we could not appreciate fully because of our own happy circumstances on this side of the Atlantic, caused the flight of European capital—much of it composed of American loans as well as of American payments for foreign goods and services—to the United States, contributing materially toward our inflation. With the 1931 collapse in Europe, this European capital was heavily withdrawn, acting as a powerful deflationary force, and helped to precipitate the national headache of 8 years of depression still with us. Unintelligent meddling in the finances and trade of foreign countries brought us disillusionment, cataclysm, and paralysis.

Nevertheless, this sad ending still staring us in the face, here we are again with our reciprocal-trade treaties, giving the same old aid and comfort to foreign countries, but in a more dangerous form. From 1921 to 1929 we sold $42,000,000,000 worth of goods abroad, sales facilitated by the credits which we extended foreigners. The losses on these loans, at least, gave us a form of cheap unemployment insurance, for during all that time we had full employment in the United States.

If there be grounds for criticizing a policy for keeping up employment by a great export trade built on the contingency of extending credits to our customers only to have it collapse one day, what can be said for the policy of the reciprocal treaties whereby our unemployment is increased by excessive imports of competitive products and we receive no compensating return in appreciable healthy increases in exports?

Foreign customers are not buying much more of our goods for the simple reason that they are more nationalistic, if anything, than they were in the 1920's, and that we are extending them no credits. The additional money they receive from Americans because of increased sales to us of competitive factory and farm products is not being used for greater purchases of our goods. As in former days the money is being used for speculation in our investment securities and holds nearly the same power over our credit which it held in 1931, the reason being the only change that has occurred in economic and social conditions abroad is greater instability and confusion. The difference obtaining, so far as the basic effects on our economy are concerned, between our former policy of lending our customers money to support a $9,000,000,000 foreign trade, and the present one of excessively increasing imports to subtract from our employment, seems to be one of degree. Of the two evils, perhaps the losses on loans would be the preferable, for unemployment is the prime breeder of civil disorder and strife.

It so happens that nowadays we are not minded to, and cannot by law, lend very much money abroad. The reciprocal trade treaty theory, therefore, would increase our exports and employment by increasing our imports.

The only way we can increase imports, since we are always large buyers of raw materials, is to step up our importations of products competitive to those grown or manufactured in the United States. This naturally breaks down the price structure in the American industry affected. Foreign products are made or grown by labor of long hours, harsh conditions, and are often given rebates or subsidies in one form or another by the government of the country in which made. When such articles come into the United States and undercut our products we must lower the price, disproportionately to actual value, which reflects high wages and living standards, taxes, and exceptional quality of product. The margin of profit becomes low or disappears altogether, in turn causing shut-downs, unemployment, and resultant economic distress.

It is curious but true that American industries most harmed by imports of competitive products have no appreciable export market. On being forced out of the American market, their unemployment is absolute. Meantime, our industries which export (few of them export more than 5 to 7 percent of their production) could not exist were it not for the demands at home on their production. Consequently, any unemployment due to lack of export trade is merely relative.

Again, there is coincidence in the fact that the most rabid American business supporters of the reciprocal treaties are the few and powerful who have profitable export markets, but no foreign competition in their own domestic market. They happen to be in specialized lines which admit of no alien competition because of their technique, requiring a vast domestic market to lower costs. It is these few who are still dreaming of that five-billion-dollar export velvet. It is amazing they do not realize that the way this colossal trade was conducted was not a healthy state of affairs for the Nation. These exports minimize our enormous chronic deficit in our international operations, it is conceded, but not sufficiently to offset our folly in flooding the world with billions of dollars (exclusive of loans) in our tourist expenditures, our immigrant remittances, the charges we had to pay for foreign shipping services, and other items entering into the financial aspect of our international relations. We wasted these staggering sums of money because of an abysmal ignorance in international dealings, and thus brought on the present hardships and sufferings of our people.

Even American enterprises which have an export demand of considerable proportions, but which are also subjected to the competition, in the United States, of foreign products by virtue of the reciprocal treaties, find the net outcome to them very baneful in price losses and employment. In the final analysis these losses are peculiar, therefore, both to the industries having no export and to those who have.

The reciprocal-trade treaties falsely assume that American tariffs compared with foreign have been inordinately high. This narrow-brained, inaccurate basis for the reciprocal-treaty program permits a surreptitious downward revision of the American tariff, bear meat which foreign nations go for. The truth is, incredible as it may seem, our tariffs, relatively, have not been high at all. For years the schedules have provided free entry to nearly 67 percent of our import items, while foreign nations have resorted to every device known to man to keep out foreign goods, especially American, from their boundaries. If all the world resorted to the philosophy of extreme nationalism, and Americans remained aloof from it by permitting the world to dump their goods on our market, I should say we would be fools deserving whatever dire consequences ensued.

The American tariff of 1922 followed in fear, rather than fostered the high trade restriction policies of European countries. They were bankrupt, and they naturally did not want a plethora of goods from us which they could not pay for. We blithely ignored this fundamental, and proceeded to high-pressure them, lend them money so they could take the excess of our production which had been geared up for war purposes, and which we were unwilling to gear down to common-sense peacetime needs. We had simply an inflated idea of our importance in the world-trade scheme, and imagined that efficiency, quick turn-over, machine skill would indefinitely remain an American monopoly. Instead of trying to maintain our exports somewhere at levels dictated by rock-bottom national necessity, in which 95 percent of our production is consumed at home, we went export mad.

The American tariff of 1922 was faulty, however, in one great respect. It put up certain barriers against foreign merchandise without considering that realinement in international commerce had taken place. Costs of production in all European countries had increased. Though American costs likewise increased, Congress failed to perceive the very low production costs of several countries, notably Japan, not involved in the international debt structure of the war. The standards of living in these particular countries were much lower than those prevailing in European countries. Both our major political parties followed the mirage of applying uniform tariff increases, affecting certain commodities to all the countries of the world.

We should have applied increases first to the products of those countries where costs and standards of living were below the world average, and preferential treatment should have been accorded to others. Such consideration would have greatly pacified most European countries, and Americans would have disarmed both Europe's wails for debt cancelation on the ground that our tariff discriminated against their goods, and escaped the infiltration of cheap merchandise from the Orient.

European politicians naturally perverted to their own uses the basic significance of our muddled tariff thinking and our avidity to increase exports. They played on our theories with the subtle propaganda, looking always to debt cancelation, that the American people must become import minded as well as export minded. This was a Machiavellian stroke of diplomacy which had the psychological value of putting the onus of the world's trade troubles, in the eyes of the European public, on the United States. The truth was that the United States was the world's largest buyer of raw materials, with average annual imports constantly increasing.

But the invisible items of our foreign trade, our immigrant remittances, insurance payments, tourist expenditures, payments for foreign shipping services, amounted to hundreds of millions of dollars annually, items which affect our favorable physical balance of trade to the immense advantage of foreigners. Of course, the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act of 1932, although 65 percent of the import items remained on the free list, caused a new storm of European criticism, our brethren in America who saw their exports falling and our politicians seeing an opportunity to pander to this criticism, gladly joining. But I believe the Hawley-Smoot Act was the first real attempt in our history to take the tariff out of politics. It gave the President power under the recommendations of the Tariff Commission to decrease tariff rates where investigation showed an actual injustice was being done to a foreign product under our law.

I have the feeling, too, that President Hoover was personally against any tinkering with the tariff, and he was well aware that political gangsters and special interests sought to put him on the spot by slightly increasing certain rates on import items from abroad. When he signed the Hawley-Smoot bill he hoped that the provision in it for decreasing the tariffs where justice demanded would give him the leeway he needed to fight propaganda, centered on the psychology abroad which clever, unqualified mention of United States tariffs could arouse. But before Hoover could give this provision the effect of constructive action other political issues overwhelmed him.

So it was that the reciprocal-trade-treaty program strutted on the Washington stage. The Democratic high command did not dare, directly, repeal the Hawley-Smoot law, but by the indirection of the Hull trade treaties accomplished something of the desire of the European sirens preaching the leveling of American tariffs, and of selfish American interests considered vital to the fortunes of self-seeking politicians and bureaucrats. By these treaties, gifts of tariff, cuts are made to extend to all favored-nation countries—virtually the world—without even the constitutional formality of ratification by our Senate, and in effect abrogating the tariff-making power of Congress.

I see honest differences of opinion among Americans as to the probable results of moves designated to improve and maintain our national and international position. These are inconsequential as compared with the differences in viewpoint between those who consider the question of our strategy rationally, affecting America and the world as a whole, and those motivated by the personal and selfish, or the well-intentioned visionary, interest which longs for a world condition of social and economic harmony while living in a world of ruthless fact.

The contention that in addition to the imports of raw materials, an enormous trade in itself, we ought to import manufactured wares and farm products made or grown abroad cannot stand still another analysis. Specifically expressed, if we import raw silk, of which we are large buyers, for our silk-goods production, the reciprocal-treaty advocates say we do not go far enough. We ought also, according to these extremists, import silk manufactures. It stands to reason we must either cut out our imports of raw silk, if we allow silk manufactures to come in and put our silk-goods plants out of business, or we must stop imports of products made from silk. We cannot do both—import raw silk and at the same time invite the competition in finished silk of the nations who furnish us with the raw material.

In answer to this situation, the favorite argument of the experts on reciprocal-trade treaties is that if an American industry is "inefficient" it deserves to succumb to the onslaughts of foreign competition. The definitions of efficiency are, of course, carefully avoided. But what this point amounts to is the condemnation of nine-tenths of American industry and farming because of high costs and living standards. If efficiency means consequent low standards of living and low costs, I propose that my reciprocal trade treaty friends are playing with dynamite in suggesting that such standards are ideals for Americans to follow.

The present confusion in America with regard to the problem of world trade, traceable to the inexperienced in high places and to vested interests, is symbolized by the hue and cry of extreme nationalists, who bellow that self-contained America ought to forget all about foreign trade. Our science, according to them, can make it unnecessary to import a single commodity of any kind. Science has not yet made us independent of foreign materials, and in order to pay for them we must export. Were it desirable or possible to refuse to import, we would be more vulnerable than we are now to the bitter envies and hatreds of the nations.

Extreme nationalism or internationalism based on hysteria and prejudice both lead to war. Only that nation wins the respect of its neighbors that knows its economic facts and thus can insist on being treated fairly. With America, the vital problem is the protection of its standard of living; so inextricably a part of our foreign-trade problem, it is above all controversy. Next to liberty their living standard is the most precious thing Americans have and is the direct result of that liberty. As our living standards become lowered by excessive imports of cheap merchandise and farm products, it will be most difficult to restore the loss. Every step taken to decrease that standard means simply that we are giving up also some measure of our independence. If we lose part of one, we just as surely lose part of the other. A declaration of policy that we stand ready to protect our standard would serve as the best possible check against any international attempts to take advantage of us and lead the nations of the world to practice honest cooperation, requiring mutual concessions to secure mutual benefits.

At this point it is well to remember that the world at large is more indebted to the United States than vice versa. While men have ever surged back and forth striving to secure the good things of life, no people have so tremendously and consistently played the good Samaritan to others as have Americans. We ought to be considered as practical contributors to world peace for the still greater reason that if we practiced the imperialism which our vast resources dictate we could very nearly rule the earth. Imagine what would happen if as a people in whose borders alone half of the business of the world is done we took the notion to really exploit the world markets. All our businessmen and bankers would be trained in international trade and finance; our diplomatic staff would be increased aggressively; our Army and Navy would be built to several times the present size. With such a combination, no group of nations could prevail against the power of the United States which, practical economists know, can support twice its present population with ease.

Thus the annual import into our country of a billion dollars or two of products over and above our necessary imports of raw materials can have only one possible result if the wrath of Americans in the past over public questions is any criterion. As soon as they find out what additional losses they are called upon to sustain in favor of nationals abroad and the social consequences to American life their sentiment of human sympathy for foreigners will again be transformed into the violent passion of resentment. Overnight Americans will go to extremes and demand really high tariffs. The foreigners who had been allowed by our peacemakers to build up a tremendous stake in our market will naturally become angry, and there is your risk of war. In that event the pity of it would be that America's dreads and suspicions would serve to postpone indefinitely the day when Americans, without whose aid no formula of peace is considered to be possible, would be willing to use their good offices to persuade the nations to modify their warlike policies and purposes with some hope of success.

The exercise of moderation is the key to the problem of world trade, as it is in all the problems of living. We Americans should promote our exports to the highest possible level without mortgaging our future in foolish extensions of credit abroad. If, when, and as we resume loans abroad, we ought to provide that their proceeds are used for productive enterprise. In reciprocity we would buy all the foreign raw materials we need and only such competitive and farm products as are produced on a basis comparable with the American and which are at least as good in quality and utility.

The constructive steps we could take to improve our world trade and earn the respect of our neighbors are several. First, scrap the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act and make two-way treaties with individual nations through Congress. Secondly, through the Tariff Commission the Government could prevent pressure groups at home from inflicting outright injustices on deserving foreign products by extreme tariffs. Next, our Government must perceive that circumstances demand organized scientific assistance to American exporters and importers engaged in world markets, since they are in business as individuals finding they have to compete in world markets against foreign governments, which either subsidize their individual producers or themselves maintain monopolies of various kinds.

At one time—it was seriously curtailed in 1933 "for reasons of economy"—we had a Commercial Attaché Service, which the British commended as the finest body of economic diplomats in the world. This service, in spite of exchange regulations, formidable tariffs, clearing agreements, quotas against trade, did yeoman work for 12 years in promoting and protecting American interests in world trade. Incidentally, foreign government officialdom and business made beaten paths to the doors of these attachés of ours, seeking their knowledge and advice. Today, every Government considers its own commerce attaché service, copied after the American pattern, a most valuable arm in its world-trade work. We must have equality in this form of representation abroad again. Until we do, foreign governments know we are handicapped in the gathering and application of the perishable facts of world economics, and can therefore beat us in any conference.

World trade has its place in the economy of every important nation. It cannot continue to consist of a chaotic scramble for markets. A definite determination by our Government, after careful study of how much and what we can import and export, not injuring the American farmer and manufacturer, would do more to point the way of peace to nations than all the treaties of any kind put together. Foreign capitals would then realize that at last America had grown up, become really world-trade conscious, and given up its amateurish dabbling in one of the most important features of our national life. That knowledge alone is the key to any contribution we can make to world peace. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made today and include therein certain exhibits to which I made reference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include resolutions adopted by the Tennessee delegation in the House on the death of our late colleague, Sam D. McReynolds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter I received as chairman of the Expenditures Committee from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and also a memorandum enclosed in that letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio speech delivered by the Secretary of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A bill and joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1610. An act to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools, and those acquiring their legal education in law offices, in the making of appointments to Government positions the qualifications for which include legal training or legal experience; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

S. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution providing for participation by the United States in the celebration to be held at Fort McHenry on September 14, 1939, in celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the writing of The Star-Spangled Banner; to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4646. An act to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States;

H. R. 4647. An act to increase the amount of Federal aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States;

H. R. 5137. An act to prohibit the purchase of beer on credit by retailers in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 5735. An act to authorize the acquisition of additional land for military purposes;

H. R. 6065. An act to authorize major overhauls for certain naval vessels, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6205. An act to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes;

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 24, 1939

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 18, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian on the expiration of the recess.

The Reverend Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, who makest us glad with the weekly remembrance of the glorious resurrection of Thy Son, our Lord, vouchsafe us this day such blessing through our remembrance of Thee, that the week to come may be spent in Thy service, and we may conclude our labors without haste in all faithfulness and diligence, to Thy greater glory and the welfare of this Nation. Through Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, July 21, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

H. R. 6065. An act to authorize major overhauls for certain naval vessels, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6205. An act to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6503. An act relating to the exchange of certain lands in the State of Oregon;

H. J. Res. 342. Joint resolution relating to section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; and

H. J. Res. 343. Joint resolution to amend section 335 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

FELICITATIONS TO JESSE H. JONES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, enclosing copy of resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors of that Corporation in connection with the resignation of Jesse H. Jones as Chairman and a member of the Board and his appointment as Federal Loan Administrator, and extending congratulations to Mr. Jones for services rendered and also felicitating him upon undertaking the new position in charge of the Federal Loan Agency, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

CARRIAGE OF EXPLOSIVES AND OTHER DANGEROUS ARTICLES ON VESSELS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 46, sec. 465) to provide for the safe carriage of explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances on board vessels; to make more effective the provisions of the International Convention for Safety of Life at Sea, 1929, relating to the carriage of dangerous goods; and for other purposes, together with a memorandum of the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation explaining the purpose of the proposed legislation, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution, in the nature of a petition, of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchase dairy and cheese products of Wisconsin for distribution to relief agencies so that the market and prices for the farmer will be protected and restored, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. WILEY on the 17th instant, p. 9211, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the petition of members of the Workers Alliance of America, of Pampa, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to restore the art and other so-called white-collar projects under the W. P. A., and to eliminate wage cuts and the payless furlough in the W. P. A. program, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILEY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Assembly Joint Resolution 112

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to reimburse the counties on lands acquired by the United States for forestry purposes for loss of tax revenue.

Whereas the United States Government has acquired a large acreage in 11 counties of Wisconsin for forestry purposes, which has seriously reduced the property valuations of these counties, depleted the source of tax revenues, continued the cost of government and education because of Federal employees, and impaired otherwise the essential services of government; and

Whereas the Woodruff bill, known as bill H. R. 3384, provides that counties be reimbursed 10 cents per acre for each year for lands actually acquired by the United States; and

Whereas the Colmer bill, known as bill H. R. 4833, provides that counties be reimbursed each year 3 percent of the acquisition price of lands actually acquired by the United States; and

Whereas the enactment of either one of the above bills will substantially alleviate the northern counties of Wisconsin of the perplexing plight of continued educational and governmental services with an inadequate and decreasing tax base: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact into law either the said Woodruff bill, H. R. 3384, as first choice, or the Colmer bill, H. R. 4833, as second choice: And be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILEY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly Joint Resolution 96

Joint resolution relating to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to amend the General Welfare Act so as to include provisions for the care of crippled adult persons who are not capable of being rehabilitated

Whereas various forms of aid and assistance have been provided by the Federal Government to States who have provided aid to many classes of people, but no aid has been provided as yet for the adult crippled who cannot be rehabilitated; and

Whereas there are a great many persons included in such adult crippled class; and

Whereas most of them are in a crippled condition through no fault of their own and are in as great or greater need than many in other classes receiving aid; and

Whereas it is a meritorious undertaking to assist persons in financial distress, more especially those who are physically handicapped and unable to care for themselves: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to provide financial aid to States who shall in turn provide financial assistance to adult crippled persons; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President and to both Houses of the Congress and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Conway Springs, Kans., praying that the United States discontinue the sale of war supplies to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of members and friends of Bethel Presbyterian Church, Bethel, Kans., praying that the United States refrain from any participation in connection with Japanese aggression in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

POSITION OF THE C. I. O. RELATIVE TO W. P. A. LEGISLATION

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred, a letter from Mr. Ralph Hetzel, Jr., unemployment director of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, discussing the problems relating to W. P. A. legislation and the necessity for appropriate action at this session.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS,
Washington, July 24, 1939.

Hon. JAMES E. MURRAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MURRAY: Several Members of Congress have made inquiry about the position of the Congress of Industrial Organizations with regard to W. P. A. legislation. Since the legislative history of the W. P. A. bill is somewhat long and complex it may be helpful for me to recapitulate briefly the position of the C. I. O.

Before the appropriation for 1939–40 was under consideration by the House Appropriations Committee, President Lewis wrote a letter to the Committee asking for an appropriation sufficient to provide a minimum of 3,000,000 W. P. A. jobs. Such an appropriation, according to the position stated, should be based on certain fundamental principles which were:

1. That in order to be eligible to the W. P. A. workers need only be out of work and ready and willing to work.

2. That full rights to self-organization be accorded to workers on the projects and that there be no discrimination for any reason.

3. That the W. P. A. be empowered to establish such projects as may be necessary to get the kind of employment needed by the unemployed. That means that all workers should be employed on work suited to their needs and skills.

4. That all projects shall be socially useful and productive. This means the continuation of the present types of W. P. A. projects and authorization to do such work as public housing, slum clearance, flood control, building of schools and hospitals, health measures, cultural and "white collar" projects, and vocational training.

5. That wages paid on the projects shall be sufficient to maintain an American standard of living and to prevent the reduction of standards set by union organization in private industries.

Subsequently, Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts introduced in the House and you introduced in the Senate bills which, in the judgment of the C. I. O., would, if passed, establish a sound W. P. A. program. Included in these bills were provisions for a minimum of 3,000,000 jobs, increase of certain of the present security wages, maintenance of the prevailing hourly rate, and a number of other provisions which substantially retained the W. P. A. under the conditions under which it operated in the previous fiscal year.

The C. I. O. requested passage of these bills in both the House and the Senate. Its representatives presented its position to the committees considering the W. P. A. bill. In the Senate committee the C. I. O. pointed out the very serious and harmful aspects of the bill as it came from the House. Among the provisions protested were the reduction of the security wages, abolition of the prevailing hourly rate, and the 18-month lay-off clause. The C. I. O. pointed out at that time that unless these measures were substantially changed very serious suffering and resentment would occur throughout the country.

The bill was finally passed and signed under such pressure of time that no careful consideration of its vicious provisions was possible on the part either of Congress or of the Executive.

After the passage of the bill the C. I. O. renewed its request to Congress that certain amendments be made. In both Houses amendments were introduced changing some of the most harmful provisions. The C. I. O. warned that unless such changes were made a very serious situation would arise. It pledged itself to seek such changes by supporting proper legislation.

The spontaneous strikes which arose throughout the country following the passage of the bill justified the C. I. O.'s prediction. In that situation the C. I. O. pointed out to its affiliates that the way to seek relief was through legislation and requested its affiliates to act accordingly. Our affiliates have acted in accordance with this position.

The amendments which in our opinion are absolutely necessary to make the W. P. A. at all operable are: First, revision of the wage provisions to prevent cuts in the security wage and to allow payment of the prevailing wage. We do not want to see the wage provision amended to prevent projected raises in the South but we believe it would be a great mistake to allow cuts in the already inadequate monthly rates in the North.

Second. The clause requiring the lay-off of workers needs to be amended to prevent those who are unable to get jobs in private industry from being thrown back into a situation which, in many communities, may mean starvation.

The legislation introduced by you and 21 other Senators to correct the wage situation and the bill introduced by you to stop the 18-month lay-offs will do a great deal to improve the W. P. A. situation. We believe that unless these measures, or very similar ones, are passed at this session there will arise in this country, as you have said, a Nation-wide resentment such as has not been experienced since the days when the Republican Party's "do nothing" policy on unemployment was overwhelmingly repudiated. This time, as then, it will be the party in power who will be blamed by the people.

Sincerely yours,

RALPH HETZEL, JR.,
Unemployment Director.

By Mr. WAGNER:

S. 2879. A bill to authorize the posthumous appointment of the late Arthur Mortimer Fields, Jr., to be an ensign of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC DEFENDER FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill providing for the appointment of a public defender in the District of Columbia. This measure has the approval of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia and also a number of labor groups and citizens' associations.

Despite the claim made by some lawyers and judges that the accused is always amply safeguarded under our law and that the conviction of an innocent person is impossible, the fact remains that striking instances of miscarriages of justice constantly are brought to public attention.

Newspaper reports are constantly referring to cases of innocent men who have been wrongfully convicted because of their inability to make a proper defense or to produce adequate proofs in their favor at the trial.

The criminal law must be so amended that the poor and helpless defendant shall be accorded the same adequate defense as is given to the wealthy malefactor. No one should be compelled to suffer because of his race, creed, or purse.

The system of assigned counsel should give way to the more enlightened system of public defense to those who are unable properly to defend themselves.

The office of public defender, where it has been tested in this country, has resulted in avoiding unnecessary trials, in the more efficient administration of justice, and in saving expense to the community.

Recent developments in aid of the public-defender movement have been significant and indicate that the public defender is likely to become a part of our system of criminal law in the near future.

Public defense of accused persons long since has passed the experimental stage in this country and is now an accomplished fact in many communities where the office of public defender has been established by legislative enactment or local provision. Among those communities are Los Angeles; Portland, Oreg.; Omaha; New Haven; Hartford; Bridgeport; Minneapolis; Pittsburgh; Memphis; Wilmington, N. C.; Columbus, Ohio; Evansville; Cincinnati; Dallas; Oakland, Calif.; San Francisco; and Temple, Tex. The comments of judges, district attorneys, and lawyers in these cities, notably in Los Angeles, where the office has been in operation for over 10 years, are most favorable. I think it is time that the city of Washington should be added to this list of progressive cities of America which have adopted this progressive program.

This proposed reform has received strong approval in a Nation-wide preferential vote taken by the National Economic League with respect to this and other reforms looking toward an improvement in the administration of justice.

The proper defense of indigent persons accused of crime is, in my judgment, a necessary counterpart of public prosecution. The state should shield the innocent as well as protect society against the criminal.

It is true that under the law an accused person has the "presumption of innocence" until proved guilty. But in practice, society, and in too many instances prosecutors, take just the opposite view—the accused is guilty unless he can prove himself innocent.

It is also true that in theory, and I will say that primarily in practice, the function of a prosecuting attorney is to defend in his own office the presumption that a suspected person is innocent until the prosecutor has sifted the available evidence and has become convinced himself that a person is guilty of crime. We put upon the public prosecutor the double role of prosecutor and defender. But his principal function is to prosecute and not to defend. It is impossible for him adequately to perform the double role, even though he conscientiously attempts to do so. The popular impression that many defendants are persecuted rather than prosecuted is not without reason. While there are fair-minded prosecutors with a keen sense of justice, unfortunately too many of them are dominated by the desire to "make a record." To them accusation is often equivalent to proof. The average prosecutor scents guilt, not innocence. The tendency of many prosecutors to seek convictions has been frequently commented on by the appellate courts. The law reports abound with criticisms directed against overzealous and ambitious prosecutors "who run dangerous, foolish, and unprofessional risks to secure a conviction," and who often evince "ignorance of the ordinary rules of evidence or disregard the interests of both the people and the defendant, which alike require that a trial should be had according to law."

The failure of the "assigned counsel system" generally in vogue in the United States is too evident to require elaborate discussion. It is sufficient to say that this system has been a source of constant criticism and attack for many years by those coming in contact with the criminal courts. It is fundamentally wrong from nearly every standpoint. It is as unfair to counsel as it is to the accused. Accused persons are entitled to a real defense not a perfunctory one. Even the "crook" is entitled to a fair trial. Under our Constitution, any person charged with crime is entitled to competent counsel. He is entitled to a fair trial, which means that he should have every facility and resource to produce the law or the facts bearing upon the question of his guilt or innocence.

Assigned lawyers are required to serve without compensation. Assuming that the accused person is fortunate enough to have a competent and conscientious lawyer assigned to him, it must be obvious that with the best skill and attention it is impossible for him to cope with the power, strength, and resources of the prosecution. He has no money available to pay the expense of witnesses, fees of experts, and to take appeals. Too frequently defendants are compelled to suffer, not because they are guilty but because they are poor.

The public defender is a step in the direction toward the democracy of justice, and as such it should appeal to all fair-minded people. It means a real equality before the law and will result in changing the present attitude of the public mind that there is one law for the rich and one for the poor.

(See Senate bill 2871, to provide for the office of public defender for the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and appears under the appropriate heading.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S.

804) for the relief of John W. Barbrick, and it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROGRAM FOR FINANCING RECOVERABLE EXPENDITURES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BYRD submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2864) to provide for the financing of a program of recoverable expenditures, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INSPECTION OF RAINY LAKE WATERSHED

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 170), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the members of the subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee appointed by the chairman of such committee to hold hearings on the proposed convention between the United States and Canada providing for emergency regulation of the level of Rainy Lake and of other boundary waters in the Rainy Lake watershed are authorized to make an inspection of the region to which the provisions of such convention are applicable. The expenses incurred by said Senators in making such inspection, the aggregate amount of which shall not exceed $, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of such subcommittee.

PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES (S. DOC. NO. 100)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD the full text of Senate bill 1871, popularly known as the Hatch bill, which was passed by the Senate last week, with the amendments proposed and agreed to by the House. There has been a great deal of demand for the text of the bill as it was passed, and as is usual in such cases, there is no print now available. So that in addition to asking unanimous consent that the full text may be printed in the RECORD, I also ask unanimous consent that a print of the bill be ordered to be placed in the document room.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, with respect to the request for authorization of the reprint of the bill, the Senator means, of course, the bill with the House amendments?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly; the bill as it finally passed the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill as amended by the House of Representatives and agreed to by the Senate will be printed in the RECORD and also printed as a Senate document.

Senate bill 1871, as passed, is as follows:

An act to prevent pernicious political activities

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or to attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote or to vote as he may choose, or of causing such other person to vote for, or not to vote for, any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives at any election held solely or in part for the purpose of selecting a President, a Vice President, a Presidential elector, or any Member of the Senate, or any Member of the House of Representatives, Delegates or Commissioners from the Territories and insular possessions.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives, Delegates or Commissioners from the Territories and insular possessions.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible in whole or in part by any act of Congress, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

SEC. 4. Except as may be required by the provisions of subsection (b), section 9 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or receive or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever from any person known by him to be entitled to or receiving compensation, employment, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes.

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person for political purposes to furnish or to disclose, or to aid or assist in furnishing or disclosing, any list or names of persons receiving compensation, employment, or benefits provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating, or authorizing the appropriation of, funds for work relief or relief purposes, to a political candidate, committee, campaign manager, or to any person for delivery to a political candidate, committee, or campaign manager, and it shall be unlawful for any person to receive any such list or names for political purposes.

SEC. 7. No part of any appropriation made by any act, heretofore or hereafter enacted, making appropriations for work relief, relief, or otherwise to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, shall be used for the purpose of, and no authority conferred by any such act upon any person shall be exercised or administered for the purpose of, interfering with, restraining, or coercing any individual in the exercise of his right to vote at any election.

SEC. 8. Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects. For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; (4) officers who are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

SEC. 9A. (1) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to have membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States.

(2) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

SEC. 10. All provisions of this act shall be in addition to, not in substitution for, of existing law.

SEC. 11. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS OF SENATOR MALONEY AT ANNUAL CONVENTION OF CONNECTICUT POSTMASTERS

[Mr. MALONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD introductory remarks made by himself in connection with an address delivered by Postmaster General Farley at the annual convention of the postmasters of Connecticut, held at West Haven, Conn., July 22, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADMINISTRATION OF THE W. P. A. IN MARION COUNTY, W. VA.

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an open letter addressed by him to the residents of Marion County, W. Va., relative to the administration of W. P. A. in that county, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE W. P. A. SITUATION — MEMORANDUM OF UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Paul V. Betters and a memorandum of the United States Conference of Mayors concerning the W. P. A. situation, which appear in the Appendix.]

DEMOCRATIC SUCCESS IN 1940—ARTICLE BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Philadelphia Inquirer of July 24, 1939, written by Hon. James A. Farley, in which he discusses his reasons for believing that there will be Democratic success in the election of 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

MEMORIAL RADIO SERVICE—THE MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART

[Mr. MEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the first annual international memorial Sunday radio service under the auspices of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, held on May 28, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I desire to take a few moments of the time of the Senate. So I will wait until the Senator from Arizona concludes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement. When on last Friday the bill proposing additional judgeships was made the unfinished business, it was understood that it might be laid aside at any time for the consideration of the so-called lending-and-spending bill and for the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed. Of course, so far as I am able to do so, I shall strictly live up to that agreement.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is opposed to the bill providing new judges, or, at least, to much of the bill, and I am not disposed to request that the bill be considered in his absence. I believe, however, he will come into the Chamber within a few minutes. Therefore I will ask, if Senators desire me to do so, that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the motion made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] may be considered. But, Mr. President, I hope that the unfinished business will not be laid aside for any purpose other than the so-called lending-and-spending bill and the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to laying aside temporarily the unfinished business for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Oklahoma to call up his motion? to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 162 was passed? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

TRUTH IN FABRIC

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement about the motion to reconsider.

Immediately following the adjournment of the Senate on Friday I sent a telegram to two national officers of the Mill Owners' Association. One is located in New York City, and one is located in Boston. I have not a copy of the telegram. I shall have it in a few minutes and shall place it in the RECORD. I asked them to advise me if cotton is used in conjunction with wool in making cloth; and if so, to what extent. I had a telephone conversation from the New York office in which it was stated that they are sending me a telegram, which should be here within the next few minutes. Immediately upon receipt of the telegram I shall place my telegram and the answer in the RECORD. Until I get that telegram I am not able to make my motion to reconsider.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it becomes clear that the Senator from Oklahoma desires to have some additional information before he will feel at liberty to bring up his motion to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed. It also would appear from his statement that immediately upon the receipt of the telegram he is perfectly willing that the motion shall be considered.

Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was called out of the Chamber. I will remain here if the Senator wishes to address his remarks to me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire the attention of the Senator from Arizona in order that it may be possible to work out the matter of the reconsideration of the truth-in-fabric bill in the most efficient way, in order to give the Senator from Oklahoma the opportunity to have in his hand the material which he desires to see.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 1 o'clock the pending business may be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may consider the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, what is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma be considered at 1 o'clock.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma objects.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wonder if it would be possible to secure an understanding with the Senator from Oklahoma as to the time when it would be agreeable to him to have the Senate consider this matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the moment I receive the telegram about which I spoke I shall be glad to confer with the Senator from Wyoming about the matter, but until I receive the telegram and read what it says I cannot enter into any agreement. The telegram should be on my desk within the next few minutes; at least I am expecting it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that the Senator is in good faith expecting the telegram, but it is a matter which is altogether outside of his control. The Senate, however, has to proceed with the consideration of its business. So far as I am concerned, I shall be perfectly happy to agree, at any particular time which will be agreeable to the Senator from Oklahoma, to take up this matter, and then, if his telegram has not been received, perhaps to consider not going any further with it. Is it not possible for us to come to a fair understanding as to the consideration of this motion?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the matter is of no more interest to me than it is to the Senators from the other States which produce cotton. If the bill has no effect upon the use of cotton, of course, I shall have no objection to the bill; but if it does have some effect upon the use of cotton, that will govern my action. I think I am entitled to have the information I am seeking; and, as I said, I should have it shortly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I also think the Senator is entitled to have the information.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that there is no place to get it except from those who have it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The information is already in the RECORD, according to the statement of the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], who was in charge of the bill, and who reported it from the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The Senator from Oklahoma is certain he is going to have his telegram in a few minutes. Therefore I made the request to fix a time three-quarters of an hour hence. Will the Senator be good enough to fix an hour?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, until I receive the telegram I shall not be willing to make any agreement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I withhold the request for the present; but it must be perfectly obvious that, with Congress endeavoring to bring the session to an end very shortly, and with the majority leader about to ask unanimous consent to lay aside the judicial bill to take up the so-called self-liquidating loans bill, which may be the subject of prolonged debate, it is of the utmost importance, if the will of the Senate as expressed in the vote on the truth-in-fabric bill last week is to be carried out, that there shall be an agreement and action upon the motion to reconsider before the spending-lending bill shall come before the Senate for consideration.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish it to be understood that when the bill for additional judges was made the unfinished business, it was agreed so far as faith and honor could bind us—and we do not lightly enter into bonds here; our word is good; I have already given my word—that the judgeship bill might be laid aside at any time to consider the motion made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and to consider the self-liquidating loans bill. Since neither Senator wishes to proceed now——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Upon receipt of a telegram by the Senator from Oklahoma we shall probably be in position to proceed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the judicial bill was taken up last Friday, the disposition on the part of the Senator from Arizona and most Senators was to go right ahead and consider it and dispose of it. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], however, asked that it go over until today—the Senator is in the Chamber now—and indicated that he wanted to make a speech on the bill, but that he would not delay its consideration. On consulting with the Senator from Arizona I ascertained that he is of the opinion that the consideration of the judicial bill can be concluded within a couple of hours. Therefore, I did not wish to lay it aside and take up the other bill, which may take 2 or 3 days. It is entirely agreeable to the Senator from Arizona to go ahead with his bill. I will say also that whenever the Senator from Oklahoma receives the material for which he is waiting, I think the motion to reconsider should be disposed of before we enter upon the consideration of the other bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, being in favor of the judicial bill, I wish not to consume much time in speaking. I can probably better serve the bill by remaining silent than by speaking, but I assume, in view of the position I hold as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that a word is expected from me.

All Senators know what the judicial conference is. Under the law of 1922 it is provided that the senior circuit judges shall assemble once a year, presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, and make a survey of various situations affecting the work of the courts. I wish here to say that in my opinion that was a good law. The judicial conference each year makes a careful survey of conditions in the judicial department and makes its reports, which reports are printed. With relation to the particular subject under consideration the judicial conference at its session in September 1938 made a number of recommendations as to the creation of additional judgeships.

I shall not even take the time of the Senate to enumerate the judgeships recommended by the judicial conference. Suffice it to say that I have great respect for their judgment and their recommendations. Thereupon the Attorney General of the United States, in his annual report for the year 1938, made recommendations supporting those made by the judicial conference. The report of the judicial conference and the report of the Attorney General were carefully considered by a special committee which was created in 1937. Its particular duty was to make an investigation as to the need of any judicial reform in procedure, adjective, or substantive law, and ascertain what, if any, new judges were needed.

The special committee was composed of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. I wish to pay my tribute of respect and gratitude to the special committee for the assiduity and the diligence with which they addressed themselves to this duty.

The special committee did not agree with the conclusions of the judicial conference, nor with the decision of the Attorney General as to some of the judges, but reached the definite conclusion that the only additional judges now needed were the following: An additional circuit judge for the sixth circuit, an additional circuit judge for the eighth circuit, an additional district judge for the district of New Jersey, an additional district judge for the western district of Oklahoma, an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, an additional district judge for the southern district of New York, an additional district judge for the southern district of California, and one additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure the Senator will agree with me that this does not really mean an additional judge for the southern district of New York. The Senator will remember that a year or two ago we passed a law providing for one additional judge for the southern district of New York, and in the same law we provided that the next vacancy which occurred in that district would not be filled, on the theory that perhaps an additional judge in that district was needed only for the period of the life of one of the incumbents.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Immediately after that one of the district judges, Judge Patterson, was elevated to the circuit court of appeals, where he is now sitting. This bill really provides that we should have the same number of judges we had before his elevation to the circuit court of appeals. Am I not correct?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. So that it may be misleading to say New York is getting an additional judge. As the Senator knows, we did ask for two judges, in addition to the filling of the present vacancy. I think the Senator will agree with me that Judge Knox, who appeared before the committee, made out a very persuasive case for three additional judges, including the one provided for in the proposed legislation. I am wondering why the Committee on the Judiciary did not give us at least one additional judge to take care of the terrifically congested calendar in that particular area.

Mr. ASHURST. It is human nature usually to defend what a committee has done if one is a member of the committee. The Committee on the Judiciary needs no defense, but the committee addressed itself to this question with diligence, and I say to those Senators who seek the appointment of additional judges, that considering all the circumstances, they are fortunate to secure the passage even of the pending bill. They must believe me when I tell them that we on the committee who favor the creation of these judgeships consider ourselves successful to have been able to have reported a bill calling for additional judges. I happened to be of opinion that more additional judges were necessary, but Senators who went into the field and, with a diligence and care which I have not been able to exercise, investigated the situation, went into the courtrooms, examined the dockets of the judges, and brought back their report, and I shall support their report.

As to the New York situation, it is true the able senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] appeared before the special committee and introduced to the committee Judge John Clark Knox, who argued for two additional judges. I am sure that I but speak the judgment of every one of its members when I say that the Committee on the Judiciary holds in the highest esteem Judge Knox, not only for his character but for his ability and his diligence. Judge Knox ably argued, as the senior Senator from New York ably argued—and the arguments will be found on page 14 of the hearings held in April of this year—for the additional judges. But, after all their arguments and the consideration of all the data they submitted, the committee reached the conclusion that one judge for the southern district of New York was all we should ask or could ask. I shall not relate the vote in the committee on that question. The report of the special committee went to the entire Committee on the Judiciary, composed of 18 members, and the 18 members sustained the special committee.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill originally provided that the section of the law which prohibited a vacancy being filled by an additional judge should be repealed.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Now the committee has decided that that shall not be repealed, but shall remain law.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, as he introduced the bill, provided for one additional judge for the seventh circuit and two for the eighth circuit, but the Senate Committee on the Judiciary—and I know they think highly of their chairman, and I am proud to know they do—did not agree with their chairman, but struck out the provision for an additional judge for the seventh circuit, and agreed to one additional judge for the eighth circuit. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary did not agree with the chairman when he introduced this repealer. So I have no quarrel with the committee when, in a free and frank way, after months of investigation, they reached this conclusion. I make no threats; I do nothing more than repeat, that if Senators want to have additional judges appointed, I hope they will take the bill as it is, for my opinion is that they cannot add to it by providing for any additional judges. That is all I have to say.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. First of all I wish to compliment the chairman of the committee [Mr. ASHURST] for the consideration he has given to the bill, and I know he will agree with me when I rise to supplement the argument advanced by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], in bringing out the great need for additional judges in the southern district of New York. I trust that if the pending measure is the sum total of all of the relief in that connection we may secure at this session, there will remain in the mind of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee the argument advanced by the senior Senator from New York as to the great need, which I know exists, so that at some future time adequate relief may be afforded.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I was on the point of saying that I did not make a personal investigation, but one of the reasons why I was so profoundly convinced of the need for more than one judge in New York was the able and comprehensive brief handed to me more than 4 months ago by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], which brief, in my judgment, conclusively demonstrated the need for more than one additional judge. But 17 votes in a parliamentary body always overcome 1.

I cannot give a promise for the future, I do not know what may be done. When a Senator undertakes to initiate legislation he is like a man on roller skates, he goes partly where he wishes to go, and partly where the skates take him.

The Committee on the Judiciary has done its best. We have had no easy task. It has taken many months of work to frame the proposed legislation. We sent Senators into the field to make a personal investigation, and I believe the members of the committee will support me in my declaration that it is practically impossible to get any additional judges at this time other than the ones provided for in the bill.

I have talked longer than I had expected to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, my question was not intended to indicate that I proposed to offer an amendment, as I do not. I am very grateful to the Committee on the Judiciary for its action in providing at least for the filling of the vacancy which now exists. I merely desire to emphasize that the calendar in the southern district of New York is tremendous. That section is the most litigious in the country, because it is the commercial and financial center of the whole country. I know that the judges, as the committee was informed at the hearing, are working day and night in an effort to bring the calendar up to date. They are really required to do more work than ought to be imposed upon them. They are very diligent and very able.

Mr. ASHURST. I agree 100 percent with the able Senator from New York. But this is a realistic world, and one of the reasons for the distress that has come to our country is our failure to be realistic.

There may be a need for additional judges in certain districts, and I believe there is, but in my opinion Senators will be fortunate to secure the enactment of the bill providing for the judges covered by the measure before us.

I do not wish to shut the Senator off, but I do desire to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WAGNER. I am realistic, and it is because I am realistic that I recognize the need for additional judges in the southern district of New York. But I shall accept the practical view expressed by the Senator from Arizona, and be content with the provision made.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the able Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. In the light of the question asked by the senior Senator from New York, I think it ought to be stated that the committee had in mind two factors, among others. First, the records gathered by the committee indicate a very striking falling off in business in the Federal courts at the present time. In the second place, both Houses of Congress have recently passed an administrative court officer bill, one of the main purposes of which is to expedite the trial of cases in the Federal courts. The measure is now in conference to iron out some of the minor difficulties, and the conferees will undoubtedly reach an agreement very quickly. It is hoped that the passage of that bill will give us some guiding light in the next session of Congress, so that if the general trend of business over the country is not very evident in the southern district of New York, and if the administrative court officer is unable in that particular district to accomplish anything in expediting the trial of cases, then the New York situation will have further attention.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before I yield the floor to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who will probably want to make a short statement regarding the need for an additional judge in the sixth circuit, I wish to revert to an editorial in the New York Times, which I think was printed on the 17th of July, entitled "Help Sorely Needed," in which Congress is criticized for its delay in providing additional judges. I am not irritated in referring to this article. I join with the New York Times in its criticism of Congress for the delay. I read the last paragraph of the editorial:

> Multiplication of judges for political purposes and to fatten patronage is an obnoxious thing, sometimes achieved by shrewd logrolling. Appointment of judges sufficient to keep step with the business before the court is a clear public duty. Delay in providing for such appointments is a delay of justice.

This bill is not in any sense the result of any logrolling. Some Senators whom we esteem most highly have importuned us at great length, but we could not meet their demands. So I say this bill, in my judgment, keeps step with the demand of the American Federal judiciary for additional judges.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who desires to speak concerning an additional judge for the sixth circuit.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I had no idea of saying anything about this bill, but, since the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee yielded to me, I will make a very brief statement.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] has, I think, stated the position of the special committee which considered these matters. We did not allow the number of judges which the judicial conference had requested, because we thought that with the new legislation which will be enacted at the present session, the courts perhaps would speed up their work.

Then we found another condition. The number of criminal cases has been reduced very materially within the last few years, and, strange as it may seem, the number of cases in which the United States Government is interested has likewise been very materially reduced. I think litigation between individuals has increased somewhat.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. The table of private civil cases filed indicates that there has been a reduction. For instance, in 1931, 24,000 cases were filed; in 1932, 26,000; in 1934, 26,000; and so on. The lowest number filed in recent years was 22,000.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, that is true; but I may state to the Senator from Utah that, taking the situation as a whole, the number of civil cases between private litigants has gradually risen through a period of years. If one goes back and checks up in the last 25 or 30 years, he will find that the number of cases has risen during that period. I think there was a little increase in 1938; also in 1937, though I am not sure about that. It is not very material.

In the sixth circuit, which is composed of the States of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee, the docket is very much behind. I do not know why that is so, because we have good judges in that circuit, and they are hard working. But, on the record, there is no doubt that they need help. I found that at the beginning of this year they had cases on hand from 1936. Some cases had been on the docket for 3 years. My information is that it takes about a year and a half to get a trial in that court after the issues have been joined. The judges are working hard, but they have not been able to bring their dockets up to date. We have five judges in that circuit. This bill would allow another, who would be the sixth.

I agree with the chairman of the committee that it would not be worth while to try to get additional judges in connection with the consideration of this bill. Perhaps some of us did not agree that even six additional district judges and two additional circuit judges could be added. But we all finally concurred with the recommendations that had been made by the members of the subcommittee who went into the field and checked up on the matter. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and I went into the respective districts and actually talked with the people there, with the members of the court, with the clerks and the lawyers, until we were convinced that these six district judges and two circuit judges were needed. We eliminated from the bill a number that had been recommended by the Judicial Conference, and a number included in the bill as originally introduced by the chairman of the committee.

So, in my judgment, the Senate can very well accept the recommendation of the committee, knowing that we have reduced the number to a minimum.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate for more than a brief explanation of facts regarding the southern district of New York as they compare with the general picture throughout the United States. Referring to Judge Otis' article, which I put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and which appears at page 9677, I call attention to this comparison: Taking all the criminal cases filed—now notice I say "filed"—in all the district courts of the United States, we find that in 5 years, from 1929 to 1934, the total business equaled 432,249 cases, which is an average per year of 86,450 cases. The last 5 years in the decade from 1934 to 1939 shows a total of 175,114 criminal cases, with an average per year of 35,023 cases. It is hard to keep the figures in mind, so I am going to simplify the statement. In the first half of the decade the round number was 400,000; in the second half the round number was 200,000 for all criminal cases filed. The average number in round numbers in the first half of the decade was 86,000, and in the last half 35,000. Note the striking reduction in the amount of judicial business during that decade from 1929 to 1939.

Compare those figures with those of New York and Senators will see clearly that the same sharp decline in judicial business occurred in the southern district that characterized all the other districts of the entire United States. For the first part of the decade the total number of criminal cases filed was 38,210, with an average per year of 7,642 cases. For the second half of that decade the total number of such cases filed was 4,270, and the average per year 854 cases.

To make it easy, we have against 38,000 cases 4,000 cases; and we have against 7,000 cases, 800 cases—a striking decline and a much more sharp decline in judicial business in the southern district of New York than in any of the other districts of all the United States. This decline characterizes civil cases in which the United States is a party.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure the Senator, as a distinguished lawyer, will agree that the number is not altogether a test of the requirement for additional judges. In that particular district, more so than in any other, we have unduly protracted litigation. There are many antitrust cases; I understand one of them has been in progress for 8 months. While there has been a decline, therefore, I think the character of litigation is such that more time is taken on the cases than in some of the other sections of the country. Am I not correct in that statement?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from New York is correct. The southern district of New York is peculiar in another respect. According to the 1930 census, it has a population of 4,145,557, and yet I found in my studies that the volume of private litigation was far in excess of what one would judge it should be with that population, comparing that district with other districts.

I am convinced that cases requiring a long time to try have been brought for trial to the southern district of New York from the far West. Those which I have in mind were not civil cases but criminal cases. However, the efficiency of law enforcement which grew out of that method was indeed gratifying.

I have put into the RECORD tables which are not difficult to interpret, which clearly demonstrate the sharp decline of business in the southern district of New York, with a constant increase in the number of judges. In 1928, for example, there were only 6 judges. From 1929 to 1935 there were 8 judges. In 1936 and 1937 there were 11 judges. In 1938 there were 11 judges for the first 6 months and 12 judges for the last 6 months. Notwithstanding that increase in the number of judges, the performance of judicial business per judge went through the experience shown by the graph which I have before me. I presume it is not possible to put the graph into the RECORD, but I think it is possible to see the red line and to note the astonishing variation in the curve of judicial business. The curve is plotted from perfectly authentic information furnished by the Department of Justice and by the clerk of the court for the southern district of New York.

We find that beginning in 1928, when that court had only 6 judges, the amount of business dispatched—that is, performance of judicial work—was a total of 13,946 cases. There was a sharp decline in the amount of business until 1931, when the figure was between 7,000 and 8,000 cases. Then the curve began to rise until 1933, which represented the highest point of the judicial load, when 11 judges were determining 19,915 cases.

Then we hit the long toboggan slide. Downward goes the curve, probably as a result of the change in the liquor laws, until in 1935 the total amount of judicial work in the southern district of New York had dropped to between 3,000 and 4,000 cases. Throughout the years 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938, and the first half of 1939, the curve has been gradually upward. In the year 1938, when there were 11 judges for a portion of the year and 12 judges for another portion of the year, and when the district had a considerable amount of assistance from outside judges who were assigned to assist in the work, the total amount of judicial work was 6,851 cases. That is to say, the significant point is that half as much work was done as in 1928. In 1928 the number of cases was 13,000. In 1938 it was slightly more than 6,000. Half as much work was done, although at the beginning there were only 6 judges and in 1938 there were 11 judges in the first half of the year and 12 in the second half of the year.

The graph and the statement I have just made, Mr. President, are based on United States Government civil cases and all other civil cases, all criminal cases, and all bankruptcy cases. I was interested to take bankruptcy cases out of the list and see what the result would then be, because I realized that the great majority of bankruptcy cases do not require a lengthy hearing. Many of them are disposed of on a motion which requires less than 5 minutes. So I made a graph of the bankruptcy cases alone, and found a corresponding sort of curve. The curves are clearly interpretable by the tables which I put into the RECORD last week, and which appear on pages 9679 and 9680.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. If any Senator is sufficiently interested in this proposed legislation to examine those tables he can plot his own curve if he wishes; but he cannot resist the conclusion to which I was brought. It is an irresistible conclusion that there is no need of three more judges than that court now has; and that probably the wisest manner in which to handle the situation today is to create an additional judge instead of leaving open or by some additional legislation repealing that clause of the act which created an additional judge a year ago, because then the purpose of adding one judge to the present number would be served without upsetting the seniority which occurs naturally over the course of years. So the committee, considering both those objectives, decided to strike section 3 from the bill and to increase the number of judges for the southern district of New York by one.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I rose a moment ago when the Senator was referring to bankruptcy cases. I inquire if the Chandler bill would not considerably diminish the work of the courts in dealing with bankruptcy matters?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it would; but let me make a further observation. I have plotted the curve for all cases, including bankruptcy cases, and also for all cases excluding bankruptcy; and I obtained the result shown by the blue and red lines, which are almost parallel. It makes little difference with the evidence of the sharp decline in judicial business, whether or not we take the bankruptcy cases into consideration. I will say that I was led to separate the bankruptcy cases and to make a curve of all the other judicial business together by a consideration of the excellent article by Judge Otis. I wanted to make a comparison with the yardstick which Judge Otis suggested for all America. After a very thorough study of the judicial situation he recommended a yardstick of 400 to 200 to 200; that is, to have no more judges in a district than are required to carry the burden per judge of 400 criminal cases, 200 civil cases in which the United States is interested, and 200 civil cases of all other kinds. When we make that comparison with the load which the judges of New York are now carrying and have carried for the past 4 years, we find this result:

Criminal cases terminated in the southern district of New York, 315 cases in 1935.

Mr. KING. While the Senator is examining his book, I make the suggestion that many of those criminal cases in the various years to which he refers were not tried; many were nolle prossed, and a considerable number of the defendants pleaded guilty. So that the actual time required by the court in the disposition of the cases would be very much less than would be implied by a statement of the number of criminal cases.

Mr. AUSTIN. A very different picture is presented when the number is analyzed, as I find I have done in my memorandum. Eleven judges, in the first 6 months of 1938, and 12 judges, during the second 6 months, terminated in the total 12 months cases of such number as, when calculated for per judge load-criminal cases 83, United States civil cases 71, other civil cases 210.

This compares with Judge Otis' yardstick—criminal 400, United States civil 200, other civil 200.

So, in determining whether another judge is necessary for the southern district of New York, one must consider that, if this bill should become a law and the new judge should be appointed, he would take a share of the load, and there would be the same number of judges as were holding court in the last half of 1938, which is one more than the number of judges in the first half of 1938.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Am I correct in the statement that, so far as the additional judge who is to be created by this bill is concerned, the act of 1938, which prevents the filling of any vacancy created by any judge then in office leaving the bench for any cause, would not apply to the additional judgeship which we are now creating under the proposed legislation?

Mr. AUSTIN. My answer is that there is no qualification or limitation that makes this proposed new judgeship temporary. He would serve under the same terms as all the other judges.

Mr. WAGNER. As to the judges who were in office on May 1938, does the qualification apply, so that if one should resign or die, or otherwise become disqualified, the next vacancy so created could not be filled?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not my understanding of the law.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I wanted to have made clear.

Mr. AUSTIN. My understanding is that when the last judgeship was created a peculiar phrase was written into the law, namely, that the first vacancy that might occur thereafter would not be filled, so that it made no difference upon whom the mortality fell the vacancy created thereby would not be filled. But that provision is now functus officio.

Mr. WAGNER. That was my understanding of the law, but I was somewhat confused. Perhaps the Senator can enlighten me by reference to the provision on page 2 which is stricken from the bill. After providing for the creation of an additional judge for the southern district of New York, this proviso was inserted in the present law:

Provided, That the first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge for the southern district of New York by the retirement, disqualification, resignation, or death of judges in office on the date of enactment of this act shall not be filled.

Mr. AUSTIN. That occurred with the elevation of Judge Patterson and, of course, that is all over. The vacancy thereby created cannot be filled. The present bill as amended pointed a finger at that particular vacancy, and said it could not be filled.

Mr. WAGNER. That is my understanding. I merely wanted to be clear about that.

I should like to ask the Senator another question: Is it not true that the southern district of New York is not really securing an additional judge, so far as the number of judges is concerned, because if this bill should become a law we would simply have the same number of judges we had before the elevation of Judge Patterson to the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct. There would be 12 district judges.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator, I know, has made an exhaustive investigation of the subject, particularly with reference to the southern district of New York. Is the Senator satisfied that the condition of the calendar in that particular district does not require any greater aid than is provided in this proposed legislation?

Mr. AUSTIN. At the present time I believe that to be true. If there should be a marked change, it might not be true. There have been times, as shown by the history of the southern district of New York, when it was entitled to have more judges than it did have. That was when the load was around 19,915 cases per year. The southern district certainly should then have had help, and it did have it, but it was of a temporary character. In that period there were sessions held by visiting judges numbering 409 in 1931; 334 in 1932; 314 in 1933. But a peculiar thing is that during this period of their work, that is the period of the low number of cases dispatched, the southern district of New York had altogether, when one counts the regular judges and the visiting judges, the following number for the various years:

In 1933 and 1934, regular judges 8, visiting judges 13; in 1935, regular 8, visiting 18; in 1936, regular 8, visiting 15; in 1937, regular 11, visiting 13; and in 1938, regular full-time 11, part-time 1, and visiting 17. The total number of sessions held by those visiting judges for those years was as follows: 1933, 314 sessions; 1934, 466 sessions; 1935, 474 sessions; 1936, 461 sessions; 1937, 376 sessions; and 1938, 335 sessions.

From January until June 20, 1939, the number of regular judges was 11 full-time, 1 part-time, and 11 visiting judges who held 261 sessions.

This must indicate, I think, that the character of the work in the southern district of New York is special in a degree, and that that district must have to carry some very heavy cases of themselves; that is, cases important not only in principle but in the amount of property rights involved.

Mr. WAGNER. I presume we both can appreciate the reason for that. New York is the commercial and financial center of the country, and a great deal of very important litigation involving very important rights comes before that court, to a greater degree than in the case of other courts, with the exception perhaps of the eastern district.

I am sure that the Senator, while making his investigation, was impressed with the industry of the judges of that particular court.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have the highest regard for that bench. I have met them personally and have talked with them and visited their clerks. They are a hard-working group of men; there is no doubt as to their diligence or their capacity, and they are doing a fine work there; but when we are considering the entire judicial set-up of the country I think we should at least be prudent in respect of the creation of new judgeships and take plenty of time to make sure that what we do will work out satisfactorily before we shall vote to create the new judges. In other words, I do not want to move so rapidly that we will have many judges who are not necessary.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not going to quarrel with the committee. I have made somewhat of a study of the subject and have estimated that at least two additional judges will be needed if we are not to have delay in the disposition of litigation now pending there. Such delays often results in great injustice being done, particularly to the poorer litigants. However, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to bow to the judgment of the committee; but next year, if experience indicates that additional aid is needed in that court, I shall perhaps press again for an additional judge.

DESIRABLE LEGISLATIVE OBJECTIVES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I expect shortly to leave for Europe, to attend the sessions of the interparliamentary Union, at Oslo, Norway, which will be held there from the 15th to the 19th of August. I hope to come back with a better grasp upon the European situation and a better understanding of the effect of our American foreign policy. Before I leave I want to thank the Members of the Senate for the very friendly and courteous treatment shown me since becoming a Member of this distinguished body. I also want to thank all others connected with the Senate—the official reporters, clerks, and pages—for their courtesy and kind treatment.

These 7 months have been wonderful months, filled to the full with many experiences. There is a great deal of legislation which has not been passed which I should have liked to see passed, and there is legislation which has gone on the books which I should have preferred to see killed in committee. Some of the legislative measures I should have liked to see passed, include some of my own, and I give notice that I shall continue to urge the passage of these bills at the next session of Congress.

First. I should have liked to see a bill introduced and fostered by the Senate that would have repealed all laws on our statute books that relate to neutrality. I am not in favor of the Bloom bill. I am in favor of a return to the basic principles of international law, not giving more power to the President, but less power, particularly in relation to international affairs.

In this connection, let me say that I should have welcomed the sight of a group of Senators, Democrats and Republicans, New Dealers and off-the-wagon Democrats—some call them purged and unpurged—getting together to originate—and I use the word "originate" advisedly—this legislation. But in recent years it appears that to a large extent the constitutional provision—section 3 of article II—that the President shall recommend to the consideration of Congress such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient has been interpreted to mean that the Executive shall define the course of Congress. This has been true in spite of the fact that section 1, article I, provide that—

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Everyone agrees that if war should break out in Europe, the legislation on our books is not conducive to neutrality. It provides, in substance, as follows:

(1) There would be an automatic embargo on arms, ammunition, and implements of war.

(2) Americans would not be permitted to travel on the ships of belligerents; loans to belligerents would be banned; belligerent submarines could be kept out of our waters.

(3) All goods except arms could be shipped to the belligerent countries in American ships manned by American sailors.

(4) Title to these goods could remain with Americans while the goods were being shipped.

These rules are practically the same as they were when war started in 1914, except for the embargo on arms and the ban on travel. Under the present situation, our ships would roam all seas and be torpedoed.

If international law obtained, we should then be in such a position that we could by legislation, if we saw fit, restrict the sale of all goods, including arms, to belligerents. We could put into effect a cash-and-carry clause. The Johnson Act, the loan embargo, would remain in force; and we could ban, if we thought fit, travel of our citizens, and also bar submarines from our ports. But this problem apparently will be held over until the next session of Congress.

Second. I should have liked to see Congress, if it had returned to the basis of international law, pass my joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140), which provides for an amendment to the Constitution relating to the power of Congress to declare war, and which reads as follows:

> SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to declare war when the United States or any of its Territories or possessions have been invaded, or are in immediate danger of invasion, and when any part of the Western Hemisphere has been invaded by, or is in immediate danger of invasion by, the forces of any non-American nation, and shall have power to declare war in other cases only if a majority of those persons voting in a national referendum held in such manner as the Congress shall by law provide shall vote in favor of such declaration of war.
> SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in three-fourths of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.

I wanted to read this joint resolution into the RECORD because I wanted to make it plain that this is not the amendment that has been floating around Congress for a number of years. It is something different. It provides an added check on war. Jefferson, when he wrote into the Constitution that Congress alone should have the power to declare war, said that he had put a check on the dogs of war. In my joint resolution, as you note, I put a double check on the dogs of war. The horror of war, the aftermath, with present-day war facilities, words cannot describe. Another check is very badly needed.

I believe America should be the lighthouse keeper. The business of a lighthouse keeper is to keep the light burning. It is not the business of a lighthouse keeper to go out and attend to the wrecks. He must keep the light burning so that when the navigators of ships look for the light it will be there. If Europe "goes to pot," it is not our business to "go to pot" with her. It is our business to keep the light of democracy burning, so that in the years that are ahead stricken people everywhere will be able to see the glory and the worthwhileness of democratic principles. If we keep our thinking straight, America will not get mixed up in any future wars. Especially is this true if we in the Senate recapture the traditional dignity and position and power of the Senate and put the Executive power where it belongs.

Third. I am sorry the Senate has not appointed a committee to study the economy of our country, having in mind meeting head-on the situation that would arise in case war should break out in Europe; having in mind especially the need of trying to find ways and means of resisting the economic pressure that would be brought, resulting in a dislocation of our economy, with resulting break-down after the cessation of war. We should see to it that economic maladjustment abroad should not create economic maladjustment here.

Fourth. I should have liked to see this session of Congress pass the measure which I introduced (S. J. Res. 93) to provide for a moratorium on Government-owned mortgages. Let me read you a letter I just received today, telling about the situation:

POYNETTE, WIS., July 18, 1939.

ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: The farm situation in Wisconsin, as to Federal land bank foreclosures, is becoming very acute.

Hundreds of farms through northern part of the State are under foreclosure and same condition gradually creeping into central and southern Wisconsin.

This throws hundreds of farmers out of their homes and the farms on the market for sale, not only demoralizing farm sales value, but putting an increasing number of families on relief.

The Land Bank Commissioner's loan, originally an appropriation by Federal Government to save the farm and agricultural situation in 1933–34–35, accomplished its purpose at that time. Today it is the cause of so many foreclosures and is having exactly the opposite effect. Payments and interest are in such large amounts that the farmer—where he could even under the poor prices for farm products—meet his taxes, interest, and principal payments on his Federal land bank loan and also living expenses, is absolutely up against a stone wall when he comes to pay the interest and principal on the Land Bank Commissioner's loan and is losing his farm.

As this money is a Federal appropriation and already appropriated to take the chances on losses, to start money in circulation, and to keep families off relief, why should it be allowed to rebound and wreck all the good that it accomplished in 1933–34–35, and why should present appropriations for administration expenses—foreclosure and resale—and farm-tenancy plans be made when this whole additional expense can be saved by giving the present farm owner a chance to save his farm?

Very truly yours,

JOHN R. LEATHERMAN.

Fifth. I should have liked to see Congress pass Senate Joint Resolution 145, which also provides for an amendment to the Constitution, giving Congress the certain right to levy taxes for old-age pensions. There are those who claim Congress has that right. There are those who say Congress has not the right. If this joint resolution amending the Constitution were submitted to the people, it would enable the people to decide whether they wanted the Congress to have that certain right. The problem of old age is one of the serious problems confronting this Republic.

Sixth. In view of the current multiplicity of interstate trade barriers, I am sorry that the Senate did not pass my resolution which called for an investigation of the trade barriers between the States. The House had such an investigation, which developed many facts; but the resolution calling that situation to the attention of the people was first introduced in this body.

Seventh. Another thing which I think the Senate should have accomplished is this: It should have met the capital-labor issue head-on; I mean, the issue presented by the Wagner Act. Congress should have recognized the right of the public in these labor quarrels.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I was very much pleased to hear the intimation in the Senator's remarks of his friendliness toward an adequate pension plan. I am sure the Senator knows my keen personal interest in the Townsend plan. I wonder if the Senator could be counted upon to be, with me, a militant and vigorous advocate in the Senate of the Townsend plan?

Mr. WILEY. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Florida that when the joint resolution was introduced in the Judiciary Committee I think the votes stood about 12 to 5 in favor of submitting to the people the joint resolution suggested by the Senator. I voted in favor of it, because I believe the sentiment throughout the country is such that the people want not a bogus, pseudo, so-called social-security plan, but something which hits at the vitals of this problem, which cuts through all the intricacies and fallacies of human reason and gets results.

In relation to the Townsend plan, I will say that I have heard it discussed in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], who intimated that there were many factors of the plan that were uncertain; for instance, the question of the kind of tax that should be imposed. If the Senator from Florida wants to know where I stand in relation to old-age pensions, I will state that I voted in favor of the joint resolution, which means that I am in favor of vesting in the Congress of the United States power to levy a tax for old-age pensions.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, in the question I asked the Senator I stated that I was sure that he knew of my own advocacy of the Townsend plan, and I asked him whether he would join in militant and vigorous support of the Townsend plan.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have answered the question, so far as I can answer it, in saying that I am in favor of a plan for old-age pensions. In view of the fact that certain factors of the Townsend plan are undecided, to the extent that even the leaders themselves are not sure about it, as intimated by the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] a few days ago, if I should answer the question "yes" or "no," it would be no particular answer. I shall be pleased to answer "yes" or "no" on a final and definite plan. I am in favor of the Congress of the United States having the power to levy a tax for old-age pensions.

Now I will have to carry on with my argument, because I have many points to cover in a short period of time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield on another phase of the matter, I wish to ask him what the attitude of the Republican Party is, and whether it will sponsor and vigorously assist in the passage of the Townsend plan. I saw the Senator in consultation with the leader of the minority, and I think it would be appropriate for the Senator to make an unequivocal yes-or-no statement on that subject.

Mr. WILEY. I did not rise to discuss the Townsend plan, especially since we do not know what its final form will be. Let me ask the Senator from Florida, can he tell me the attitude of the Democratic Party in relation to the Townsend plan?

Mr. PEPPER. I am for the Townsend plan.

Mr. WILEY. That does not answer the question. What is the attitude of the Democratic Party?

Mr. PEPPER. I asked the Senator whether he was for the Townsend plan.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. We are getting nowhere. The Senator is trying to divert the attention of the people from the particular issues to which I am attempting to call attention.

My sixth point was that I was sorry that the Senate did not adopt my resolution calling for an investigation of the trade barriers between the States.

My seventh point was that the Senate should have met the capital-labor issue head-on; and by that I refer to the issue presented by the Wagner Act. Congress should have recognized the rights of the public in these labor quarrels.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. Not until I conclude my remarks. Then the Senator may talk.

Who is the greatest sufferer when great strikes occur? The answer must be—the workmen themselves, their families, and the public.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I stated that I would yield when I concluded, and I expect the Senator from Washington to observe the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The rules of the Senate provide that a Senator may yield for a question.

Mr. WILEY. When I conclude I shall be happy to have the Senator ask me a question.

What sense is there in permitting a small group to dislocate the life, the security, the economics of a country? Riot and license do not make for liberty or democracy.

Apparently, the reason why we have not solved this problem, and also the so-called neutrality problem, is that this administration has indulged in Fabian tactics, delaying both matters.

Eighth. I believe that Congress should again consider the entire problem of the reciprocal-trade treaties and their effects on the Nation's economy. Certainly the necessity for that study is well illustrated in my State, where both the zinc and fox-fur industries are being crucified by our existing trade policy.

Ninth. Before Congress adjourns I should like to see some action on my constitutional amendment to limit the office of President to one 6-year term.

Mr. President, in that connection I offer at this time, and ask leave to have incorporated in my remarks, an editorial taken from the Saturday Evening Post of this week entitled, "Third Term."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Saturday Evening Post of July 22, 1939]

THIRD TERM

The Constitution is eloquently silent on the subject of a third term, Secretary Ickes has written, in launching the drive for a third term for Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. Ickes is right for once. It says nothing about a third term, not in oversight, but because its drafters were of many minds and could not agree. Their proposals varied from a term of 3 years and no limitation on reelection to a single term of 7 years. Most of them wished to restrict the period a President might serve. The minority, who held that the Chief Executive should serve as many terms as the people liked, make strange bedfellows for Mr. Ickes. Alexander Hamilton was one, and Hamilton was suspected of being a monarchist at heart.

The Convention first decided that Congress should elect the President, that he should serve 7 years and be ineligible for reelection, then changed its mind twice about the latter detail. When the Committee of Detail attacked the naming of the President by Congress, the delegates referred the whole problem to a special committee of 1 from each of the 11 States represented. It was that committee which settled upon election by an electoral college and a term of 4 years, ignoring the number of terms permissible.

New York unsuccessfully demanded a prohibition of more than two terms before she ratified.

Nor did Washington, in refusing a third term, have any demonstrable thought of setting a precedent. He declined ostensibly because he felt that he had done enough for his country, to the neglect of his private interests—plus his detestation of politics. In his Farewell Address he spoke only of his "sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire" in having accepted the office at all.

It is Mr. Ickes who is "eloquently silent" about the fact that Thomas Jefferson founded the precedent and Andrew Jackson nailed it down—the two fathers of the Democratic Party. Jefferson had announced that he would serve one term only, as an example. When he accepted a second nomination, he blamed the Federalists. "I sincerely regret," he said, "that the unbounded calumnies of the Federalist Party have obliged me to throw myself on the verdict of my country for trial, my great desire having been to retire at the end of the present term to a life of tranquillity."

But he would have no third term. Originally of the opinion that "the President should have been elected for 7 years and be forever ineligible afterward," he decided later that "service for 8 years, with a power to remove at the end of the first 4," came nearer to his "principle as corrected by experience. General Washington set the example of retirement at the end of 8 years. I shall follow it; and a few more precedents will oppose the obstacle of habit."

He wrote this in a letter to a friend. The people, knowing nothing of his decision, began to suggest a third term midway of his second. The legislatures of seven States memorialized him and he waited 13 months before making a public disavowal.

"If some termination to the services of the Chief Magistrate be not fixed by the Constitution, or supplied by practice," he wrote, "his office, nominally for years, will in fact become for life; and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance. Believing that a representative government responsible at short periods of election is that which produces the greatest sum of happiness to mankind, I feel it a duty to do no act which shall essentially impair that principle; and I should unwillingly be the first person who, disregarding the sound precedent set by an illustrious predecessor, should furnish the first example of prolongation beyond the second term of office."

Jefferson's party acclaimed "the manly and sublime effort which dictated your determination," derived "consolation from the consideration that your example may operate on all future Presidents to pursue a course which has added luster to your character, already dear to liberty and your country."

Constitutional amendments to prohibit a third term were proposed several times in the next 20 years, but the public showing no interest, Congress took no action. It was not until the contested election of 1824, the defeat of Jackson and his prompt renomination that the issue came alive again. Ten resolutions intending to limit the President to one term were introduced in Congress.

Jackson took office already earnestly on record as an advocate of one term and asked in each of his eight annual messages that the Constitution be so amended. Twenty-four such joint resolutions were offered in his two terms, but his party failed to support them actively.

William Henry Harrison took office pledged to one term. "Republics could commit no greater error," he said, "than to adopt or continue any feature in their systems of government which may be calculated to create or increase the love of power in the bosoms of those to whom necessity obliges them to commit the management of their affairs."

In a month Harrison was dead, and for the first time in our history a Vice President inherited the Presidency—another detail on which the Constitution was vague. No one was quite sure whether Tyler was President or merely Acting President.

But the Whigs were quite sure that he was a turncoat and a villain, and for the first time a political party adopted officially the doctrine of one term. While the quarrel with Tyler was at its height the legislatures of eight States sent one-term amendments to Congress.

It was Grant who came closest to a third term. Hardly had he been reelected in 1872 when the opposition press began to proclaim that the Republic was threatened with overthrow by the probable reelection in 1876 of this man on horseback, and raised the cry of Caesarism.

With the Southern States the vassals of the Federal Government, under Reconstruction, the danger was real unless Grant himself should refuse. The Republican State convention in Pennsylvania adopted resolutions declaring "unqualified adherence to the unwritten law of the Republic which wisely, and under the sanction of the most venerable examples, limits the Presidential service to two terms."

This led Grant to reply. In a letter to the chairman he recounted the cry of Caesarism. He had ignored it because it was beneath the dignity of his office to answer such a question until it was presented by a body "of such dignity or authority as not to make a reply a fair subject of ridicule." He had not sought the office for either the first or second term, did not wish a third term any more than he had a first. "I would not accept a renomination if tendered, unless it should come under such circumstances as to make it an imperative duty—circumstances not likely to occur." Grant presumably referred to a recurrence of civil war.

Republicans and Democrats alike in Ohio and New York resolved that no third term was a fundamental rule of the unwritten law of the Republic, and in 1875 the House adopted, by 234 to 18, a resolution introduced by Springer, of Illinois, to that effect. The next President, Hayes, in his inaugural address, asked for an amendment limiting the office to one term of 6 years, but the public had lost interest again.

Two years later, however, Grant returned from a triumphant world tour just as his party was looking for a successor to Hayes. Despite the evil record of his two terms, corruption in which Grant himself had not shared, the American people gave him a reception such as no American ever had had until then.

Conkling, Cameron, and Logan, counting upon this, and determined to stop Blaine, decided to renominate Grant, and he consented. The third-term issue was drawn for the first time. The public reaction was so immediate and so violent that Grant wished to have his name withdrawn, but Conkling refused, and Ulysses S. Grant narrowly missed nomination. For 36 ballots he never received fewer than 303 votes.

That, the country felt, was that, and no more was heard of a third term until 1912. In 1904 Theodore Roosevelt had expressly said that the 3½ years of his succession to the assassinated McKinley constituted his first term. "The wise custom," he went on, "which limits the President to two terms regards the substance, and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for, or accept, another nomination" (after 1904).

When Theodore Roosevelt accepted the Bull Moose nomination in 1912 these words came back to haunt him. He disingenuously explained that when a man said, "No, thank you, I do not wish a second cup of coffee," he did not mean that he never again would wish another cup of coffee.

That same year the Democrats at Baltimore wrote into their platform at the demand of Bryan: "We favor a single Presidential term, and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution making the President ineligible for reelection, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle."

But in 1916 the candidate pledged to one term was renominated by the party which had pledged him, Mr. Bryan not opposing. The party and everyone thought the pledge had been no more than Mr. Bryan's plot to have Woodrow Wilson out of the way 4 years hence.

From 1912 to 1927 the third-term issue was forgotten once more. Calvin Coolidge, like Theodore Roosevelt, had finished out the term of a dead President and had been elected for a second term. There began to be speculation about a third term for Mr. Coolidge, who remained silent.

It was then that Senator LA FOLLETTE introduced, and the Senate voted, 56 to 26, the following resolution, about which Mr. Ickes is silent, if not eloquent: "It is the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

Among the Democrats who voted for the resolution were BARKLEY, ASHURST, MCKELLAR, HAYDEN, NEELY, PITTMAN, SHEPPARD, THOMAS of Oklahoma, and WAGNER. Among the Republicans were NORRIS, BORAH, NYE, CAPPER, FRAZIER, and HIRAM JOHNSON—the latter Mr. Ickes' political mentor and the man who made him Secretary of the Interior.

A year ago, when there was some fear in the party that Mr. Roosevelt might have Mr. Ickes in mind as his successor in 1940, Senator PITTMAN was quoted as saying, "I have an inherent prejudice against a third term, but, between Ickes and a third term, I'll take a third term."

KEY PITTMAN was a miner at Dawson, at Nome, and at Tonopah when those camps were flush. He is a hard-bitten man, but he blanched at the thought of Mr. Ickes in the White House.

That danger, if it ever was a danger, has passed, however, and the Nevadan is free to resume his inherent prejudice against a third term.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, in one form or another this timeless proposal has been before the public for almost 100 years. Last week the Senate Judiciary Committee sent to the Senate for consideration two such proposals, one of which was mine. With opinion just as much divided as in the turbulent Jacksonian era, it is likely that these proposals will be talked to death by partisan proponents of not only a second, but a third term.

Because of political implications of a single term at this time, it is equally possible that this century-old debate will flare up hotter than ever in 1940. It is probable that this controversial proposal may assume the proportions of a political campaign issue. That is unfortunate. It is unfortunate because the very purpose of such an amendment is to free a Chief Executive from the political back-slapping attendant upon placating political interests to insure another term. This issue should be debated on its merits rather than its politics.

The framers of the Constitution debated this same idea. Jefferson was opposed to a third term, and at one time favored a single term. Jackson wanted to limit a President to a single term. Buchanan and Hayes both advocated a single term, and both kept their pledge not to seek reelection.

Cleveland advocated a single term, though he later battled for a second term. Wilson's 1912 platform pledged him to a single term, though he did not keep that pledge.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. Not until I get through, please.

Taft publicly expressed his dislike of a second term, though he failed to stand by this philosophy. Grant and Theodore Roosevelt both sought a third term, and both lost their fight.

It is time that this issue were decided. It is time that a President be permitted to be a statesman rather than a politician. By that I mean it is time that a man who goes into the Executive office of this Nation and holds it for 6 years shall think in terms of the national welfare and not in terms of being reelected, not in terms of paying political debts, not in terms of building a political machine.

Mr. President, some time ago I received a communication from some of my constituents expressing the approval and gratitude of the Christian people, regardless of denomination, of the efforts being made by His Holiness, Pius the Twelfth, to promote and secure peace among the nations. This communication stated that his outstanding pronouncements and unflinching attitude for peace represents the sentiments of the American people, specifically those of some of the citizens of my own State.

I am glad at this time to place the gist of this communication in the RECORD. It was signed by Protestant ministers, thirty-second-degree Masons, businessmen, laboring men, as well as prominent Catholics. It expressed truly the sentiment that the world is hungering for peace; that it is diligently seeking the way out of the grave situation it faces today.

Congress will soon adjourn. We who have been in positions of leadership will go back to our constituents. What we say and do will provide the chart that may determine the course of the Nation tomorrow. How important it is, then, that we reflect sanity and Christianity in our talks. How important it is that we remember that we are, above all, Americans—no matter what our racial origins are—Americans. We owe no political allegiance to any other nation on earth. As the Nation thinkest, so will the Nation's course for peace or war be determined. We cannot take time to hate Frenchmen, or Germans, or Englishmen, or Italians, but we can take time to love America and her institutions. We have problems within our own borders which need remedying. Yes; we have ills here to cure; and if we seek the remedy for those problems and ills, we will be minding our own business. If we of the Senate and the House permit ourselves to become hysterical, filled with fear, to become men who do not reason or think sanely, then we are traitors to the present.

I know that to some this is superficial thinking, but to me it is basic, fundamental.

We are supposed to be leaders in thought. We go to our various homes, cities, and communities, and if we give the impression that war must come to the United States, we are then indeed traitors.

It is well, then, that we realize that only when the people want war will there be war; and I say "the people" because, to a large extent, we reflect what the people want. If the people want peace, then there will be peace. This will be true as long as we maintain our democracy. It is very important, then, that through the succeeding months we, as leaders of thought, keep our minds on even keel, not allow ourselves to be stampeded, keep clear of the propaganda that comes from many quarters, and keep ourselves—our individual selves—free from the entangling alliances of fear, prejudice, and hysteria.

And now I yield to the Senator from Indiana. If he has no question to ask, I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I was very anxious to ask the Senator a question, and I hope he did not feel I was being discourteous to him in interrupting his remarks. It happened that right in the midst of his discussion he referred to a matter about which I wish to ask a question.

Mr. WILEY. If the Senator had been in the Chamber when I opened my remarks, he would have noted that I paid particular attention to the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, complimenting them on their courtesy and friendliness, and I am sure that is particularly applicable to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask a question, if I may. The Senator referred to the trade-barrier question, and it was at that particular point that I attempted to interrupt him. Is the Senator familiar with the issue which arose in this country as the result of trade-barrier activities on the part of the State of Wisconsin, and in making the statement that he thinks we should have done something to solve the problem is he taking the position that his own State was mistaken in its original efforts several years ago to set up trade barriers?

Mr. WILEY. I do not know whether I got the gist of the question of the distinguished Senator from the State of Washington. What I said in my remarks was that many instances were apparent throughout the Nation where the application of the so-called reciprocity treaties worked hardship and harm, and it certainly worked financial loss to certain communities and States. I was only, as it were, giving a sketch of the 9 or 10 matters that I thought we should have taken up, but I called attention to the fact that in my own State, because of these trade agreements——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am not talking about trade agreements. My understanding was——

Mr. WILEY. Let me finish the sentence. That on account of the trade agreements we in Wisconsin were hurt particularly with respect to zinc and our fox-fur industry.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I was talking about trade barriers between States. Did I hear correctly that the Senator said he felt that Congress should have done something in reference to treaty barriers between States?

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Then the question I want to ask is whether the Senator appreciates the fact that the State of Wisconsin was the first offender along this line, and whether he is criticizing his own State along that line?

Mr. WILEY. I might say to the distinguished Senator that that kind of an argument is no argument at all. It is trying to throw dead cats. If my State made a mistake some years ago, that is not the point. The point is that I introduced a resolution in the Senate asking the Senate to appropriate a little money to provide for an investigation of the ill effects of artificial trade barriers created by various States. In the city of Washington we had an investigation that related to milk. If my State made a mistake, I trust my State will correct it. Out there we have good people. In fact, I think the Senator's mother lives out there and I believe the Senator was born there. He should not say anything that would reflect on his birthplace.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. WILEY. We are glad that he can claim that as his State, as well as his mother's residence.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is the reason why I am asking the question. I would greatly like to know from the State of Wisconsin, through its official representative, that my place of birth has repented its former sins and now wants to correct the thing which started it.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, no; that is not the reason the Senator asked the question. The reason he asked the question is that he wanted to divert the attention of the Senate and the people from the issue, and that is that the Senate did not investigate this trade-barrier situation which they should have investigated. That is the problem. And we now acknowledge, and the Government itself has made a record of it, that these trade barriers are not only pernicious but that they are a virtual cancer in our system, which bring about serious results to the Government.

Is there any other question?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to have the floor in my own right.

Mr. WILEY. I yield the floor.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in reference to the bill, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Arizona if I may. I notice in this bill creating new judgeships that there is no provision for the creation of another judgeship in the State of Washington. I want the RECORD to show the situation. In the last session of the Congress there was adopted as a part of the bill which created additional judges a provision for a judgeship in the western district of Washington. That provision was inserted as a result of a bill introduced by the Senator from Arizona at the request of the Department of Justice, and testimony was heard before the committee showing the need for an additional judge in the western district of Washington.

Mr. President, this year there was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], Senate bill 1554, which changed the character of the judgeship which was established last year in the western district of Washington, making it in the nature of a roving judgeship, which would entitle the occupant of that office to sit in the various sections of the State of Washington. That measure was referred by the Judiciary Committee to a subcommittee headed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I interposed no objection to that bill at the time it was introduced in the Senate. I told the Representative from my State, representing eastern Washington, and I told the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] that if there were presented to the Judiciary Committee sufficient facts showing the need of a roving judgeship to take care of business in eastern Washington, that I, of course, could not object to it and would agree to it. It was my feeling at that time that if there was sufficient business in eastern Washington for a judgeship, a judgeship should be created in eastern Washington, rather than to enlarge the activities of a judgeship which was created under a statement of facts showing the necessity for an additional judge in western Washington. However, on the basis of the testimony submitted to it, showing that there was sufficient need in eastern Washington, the committee reported the bill favorably, and the bill was passed by the Senate and went to the House.

In the meantime the House committee, acting upon the same question, reported House bill 6167, which is now on the Union Calendar of the House as No. 441, which is different from the Senate bill in that it makes the judgeship which was created last year as a full-time judgeship—and by that I mean a judgeship which would continue permanently—a temporary judgeship, so that whoever might be appointed to that particular judgeship would serve, and then after his time of service the judgeship would lapse, and we would go back to the present system in the State of Washington.

I discussed this matter with the Representative from eastern Washington, and had the assurance that that bill would not pass until such time as the bill which is now before the Senate was adopted by the Congress providing for an additional judgeship for the State of Washington. In other words, I took the position with him, and I take the position with the Senate, that since we last year or the year before created a permanent judgeship for the State of Washington, I am not willing to trade that for a temporary judgeship; and the reason I ask the attention of the Senator from Arizona is to serve notice in the RECORD now that if the House should pass the House bill I shall vigorously oppose it, because I am not willing to agree that we shall give up what we have in the nature of a permanent judgeship, which was based upon the record made last year showing the need of a permanent judgeship, for a mere temporary judgeship in the State of Washington.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I happen to know personally of the diligence with which the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] has labored with this subject. I have great confidence in him, and I am sufficiently familiar with the situation to say here and now that I shall be disposed personally to follow his lead in the matter. The general policy is to follow the views of Senators with reference to problems in their own States. I shall gladly cooperate with the able Senator from Washington in trying to achieve the objective which he desires, as indicated by his speech.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator please indicate why the committee saw fit to amend the bill by striking out one judge for the seventh circuit?

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from Indiana will pardon me, I shall ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] to make reply. I should be glad to answer the question, but I believe the able Senator from New Mexico is in a much better position, more directly and with a greater degree of accuracy, to make reply than I am, for the reason that, as I stated earlier in the day, the special committee to investigate the need for judges divided the work, and the Senator from New Mexico was selected by the chairman—myself—to proceed to the seventh circuit and make a personal investigation. He did make a personal investigation, and therefore is in a much better position than am I to reply concerning that situation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am very glad to reply to the question of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], because in a measure the elimination of the judgeship in the seventh circuit is the result of an investigation I made in that circuit. It is not altogether certain that the judgeship should be eliminated. I am glad to have the opportunity of explaining the exact situation to the Senate, and let the Senate take such action as it may desire.

First, I believe an additional judge was recommended for the seventh circuit by the Attorney General and by the judicial conference. On those recommendations an additional judgeship was included in the bill which the chairman of the committee introduced. I was designated a member of the special committee to make a personal investigation of conditions in that circuit. I first took the matter up by correspondence and later went to Chicago, where I conferred with the judges. I did not see all the judges. They were not all present. However, the majority of the court was present.

The court itself, Mr. President, is heavily crowded with work. There is no question that at this time the judges of the seventh circuit have as much work as they can attend to. They are active, busy, industrious men. I found a very wholesome atmosphere around the court, in the method of dispatching business, and so forth. Some of the judges believe that it is really necessary that the additional judgeship be authorized. They were all in accord that an additional judge could be used. There was some slight difference of opinion as to whether or not it was really necessary, there being a difference as between actual need and the desirability of having an additional judge. There is no question that there is plenty of work in the seventh circuit for an additional judge.

However, Mr. President, after considering the matter, I came to the conclusion that, in view of the fact that at the previous session of Congress the court had been increased by one judge, it would be better to wait until the court had functioned for a few months with the new judge added at the previous session of Congress, so that we might be better able to determine whether or not the bench as now constituted could handle the business. I myself am not sure that there are sufficient judges in the seventh circuit. I merely wanted to see the present number tried for a few months so that the question could be determined as a result of actual experience. However, I wish to say that all the judges agree that there is plenty of work and that an additional judge could be used. The only difference arose over the question whether or not it could be said that an additional judge was really necessary to dispatch the business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULOW in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment, which will be stated.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Senate" and the comma, to strike out "four" and insert in lieu thereof "two", so as to read:

That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional circuit judges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "(b) One for the seventh circuit."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendment in line 7 be agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from Indiana wishes to discuss the amendment I shall not press for action on it now, but I shall ask later that the amendment be agreed to. If I have the floor, I yield to the able Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Attorney General and the judicial conference recommended an additional judge for the seventh circuit, and notwithstanding the fact that the committee has disagreed to that recommendation, I venture to suggest that it is advisable for the Senate not to follow the opinion of the committee, but rather to take the judgment and opinion of the Attorney General and the judicial conference.

The seventh judicial circuit is made up of the States of Indiana, Wisconsin, and Illinois; and I think in point of business it is perhaps the second largest circuit in the United States. Until last year it had only four judges. Last year an additional judge was provided. Up to that time the judges in that circuit had been burdened beyond endurance. In fact, the work in that circuit had very materially affected the health of at least one of the older judges, one of the truly great judges of the circuit courts of this country.

Mr. President, while it may be true, as the Senator from New Mexico has stated, that the seventh circuit could get along without an additional judge, I understand that, while the seventh circuit is keeping fairly well abreast of the docket, the fact remains that the judges are working day and night, Sundays and holidays, in order to accomplish that end. In my judgment, such a condition is exacting too much of the judges, especially those who have served until almost the time for retirement. Among their number are some of the greatest judges in the country. So, Mr. President, I think they are entitled to the consideration which the Attorney General and the judicial conference thought they were entitled to by way of an additional judge.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Was not an additional judge provided in 1938?

Mr. MINTON. One additional judge was provided last year. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] stated that it was his judgment that we should try out the new personnel to see if it is possible to get along without the additional judge suggested. For that reason he thought the creation of the additional judgeship should be postponed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I consider the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] to be one of the ablest lawyers in this body. Before coming to the Senate he practiced law in the State of Indiana and in other States. I should be inclined to accept his judgment as to the need of an additional judge for the seventh circuit, which happens to be the circuit in which the able Senator resides. However, after months of careful investigation and after an examination of the field, the committee, having given the seventh circuit an additional judge last year, felt, as the Senator from New Mexico has said, that while, of course, a new judge could be used and there would be work for him to do, it was not absolutely necessary that the new judgeship be created.

In addition, the committee took into consideration the fact that there are two retired judges in the seventh circuit. They are able men. Under the law they may be called upon to perform service if they are needed. In fact, with much pride I refer to the fact that a retired justice of the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Van Devanter, has been called into service and has presided with great ability, industry, and intellect in one of the trial courts in New York.

Mr. MINTON. I think one of the circuit judges who was in retirement has died.

Mr. ASHURST. There is at least one retired circuit justice.

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I think that is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. We cannot make promises or give assurances. However, if we shall all be here next year, and if the able Senator shall then suggest the fact that an additional justice in the seventh circuit is necessary, of course, the committee will give his request the most courteous and careful consideration, as we do in the case of any proposal advanced by the able Senator from Indiana.

In all the circumstances—and this is not said in order to discourage the offering of amendments—I repeat that we who believe that additional justices are necessary think that any additional justices beyond the number in the bill would weight down the bill to such an extent that it might fail. While I regret that the views of the able Senator from Indiana have not been met, the Committee on the Judiciary made a conscientious, able, diligent, and prolonged effort to reach a composition.

I must not be understood as saying that the committee was unanimous in any of these matters. However, I do say that the committee was unanimous in its conclusion that no other justices but those included in the bill were absolutely necessary at this time, or could be obtained at this time.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I should not want to be understood as being critical of the action of the committee. However, I think the Senate should know the situation briefly with respect to the seventh circuit. I think the Senate should know that the action of the committee was taken in opposition to the recommendations of the Attorney General and the judicial conference.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. It will be remembered that the Senator's colleague [Mr. VAN NUYS] is also an able lawyer, and is a member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. Had any personal consideration been permitted to intervene, certainly the Committee on the Judiciary would have granted an additional justice to a State which is in the district of one of its own members. However, we acted as judges should act. We acted, as we thought, judiciously in the matter. No personal consideration was involved. Much as I dislike to fail to agree with my able friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], I hope the committee amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say. The amendment may be put to a vote of the Senate. However, I should like to have an expression of the Senate on the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the committee amendment on page 1, line 7, be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 1, line 7. [Putting the question:] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. MINTON. I ask for a division. I really do not know what the vote is.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. The inquiry is, What is the parliamentary situation; what is the amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment, on page 1, line 7, striking out "(b) One for the seventh circuit."

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "(c) Two" and insert "(b) One", so as to read:

(b) One for the eighth circuit.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, with respect to that amendment, let me say that the eighth circuit made what appeared to be a very good showing for two additional circuit judges; the judicial conference asked for two additional judges for the eighth circuit, as did the Attorney General, and there was considerable evidence before the committee on that point; but, I repeat for the fifth time, that, after careful investigation, the committee came to the conclusion that one additional circuit judge for the eighth circuit was sufficient at this time. Of course, two additional circuit judges could be used, but, I repeat, that the committee acted judiciously, I believe. I hope that the committee amendment will be agreed to, striking out "Two" and inserting "One" on line 8, page 1.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I sincerely hope the amendment will be agreed to. I may state, in view of the suggestion made that the judicial conference makes recommendations from time to time, that in the magnificent article which was prepared by Judge Merrill E. Otis, one of the ablest judges upon the Federal bench, he makes this statement:

Regretfully it must be said that instances of such efforts have been numerous. Even the Conference of Senior Circuit Judges occasionally has been misled to suggest additional judgeships where there was no need. The conference and Congress would do well to consult the district judges on the ground and the organized bar, not for recommendations but for facts. They might hope to get accurate information from such sources.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, I inquire if he is quoting Judge Otis?

Mr. KING. I have quoted a paragraph from the article by Judge Otis.

Mr. ASHURST. No one ever spoke with greater wisdom. In fact, I say it with pride, our special committee did not merely consult circuit judges but our special committee consulted district judges, the clerks of the courts, read the court calendars, and talked with lawyers. I ask that the committee amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 1, line 8, striking out "two" and inserting "one."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there is an amendment in line 10. As the bill was originally introduced it provided for seven additional district judges. The committee reported six instead of seven. I ask that that committee amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 10, after the word "Senate", it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "six", so as to read:

SEC. 2. The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, six additional district judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the next much-discussed and much-contested amendment is on page 2, line 4. It is needless to traverse that ground again. I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the letter "(b)", it is proposed to strike out "Two" and to insert "One", so as to read:

(b) One for the southern district of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 6, it is proposed to strike out:

SEC. 3. The provision of subsection (d) of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of additional judges for certain United States district courts, circuit courts of appeals, and certain courts of the United States for the District of Columbia," approved May 31, 1938 (52 Stat. 585; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 4j–1), which reads: "Provided, That the first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge for the southern district of New York by the retirement, disqualification, resignation, or death of judges in office on the date of enactment of this act shall not be filled," be, and it is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that disposes of all the amendments reported by the committee. As amended, the bill now makes provision for one additional circuit judge for the sixth circuit, one additional circuit judge for the eighth circuit, and one district judge each for California, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, New York, and Florida.

PAUL V. M'NUTT AND THE FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, under the set-up of the Federal Security Agency, which is today headed by Mr. Paul V. McNutt, there are various divisions. Among those divisions is the Social Security Board, which reaches out into the 48 States. Among its divisions in each of the various States of the Union are the Unemployment Insurance Divisions or the Unemployment Compensation Divisions.

As I understand, the Federal Security Agency—and, of course, I am not as great an authority as is Mr. Paul V. McNutt on these questions—I believe local divisions of the Social Security Board are supported by Federal funds or, at least, by Federal and State funds jointly—I am not sure which.

The other day in this Chamber I had something to say about the Two Percent Club of Indiana; I had something to say about Mr. McNutt and his political career and his political ambitions, and the placing of some 40,000,000 American citizens under his direction as the head of this important new agency of the Government. The statement was made by the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] that some of the charges made by me were groundless. I have in my hand a very interesting publication which is called the Indiana Unemployment Compensation Advisor. It is the official publication of the Indiana Unemployment Compensation department, division, or commission, or whatever it may be called, which is a unit of the Social Security Commission, which is a unit of the Federal Security Agency, which is headed by Paul V. McNutt.

On the cover of this publication is a picture of Paul V. McNutt, and under his picture is the wording "Paul V. McNutt Again, 'the Boss.'" Below the picture and the words to which I have called attention on the cover of this publication are set forth the stepping stones of Mr. McNutt's career.

Dean, Indiana University Law School, 1925.
National commander, American Legion, 1928.
Governor, State of Indiana, 1933.
High Commissioner, Philippines, 1937.
Administrator, Federal Security Agency, 1939.

And at the top there is a picture of the Capitol and White House in Washington, and underneath is the date "1941." On the first page inside the cover is an editorial entitled "Congratulations, Paul! Good Picking, Mr. President!" The editorial begins with the words:

Congratulations to Paul V. McNutt and to the millions of Americans who will be benefited by his appointment as head of the newly established Federal Security Agency.

Congratulations to President Franklin D. Roosevelt for securing Paul V. McNutt to head the most enduring, humane, and far-reaching program of his administration.

In the Federal Security Agency, approximately 40,000,000 people are covered by the old-age insurance and approximately 28,000,000 by unemployment compensation. In the social-security program, which also includes old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to crippled children, McNutt will find himself very much at home.

And so on. I ask unanimous consent that the entire article may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRATULATIONS, PAUL—GOOD PICKING, MR. PRESIDENT

Congratulations to Paul V. McNutt and to the millions of Americans who will be benefited by his appointment as head of the newly established Federal Security Agency.

Congratulations to President Franklin D. Roosevelt for securing Paul V. McNutt to head the most enduring, humane, and far-reaching program of his administration.

In the Federal Security Agency, approximately 40,000,000 people are covered by the old-age insurance and approximately 28,000,000 by unemployment compensation. In the social-security program, which also includes old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to crippled children, McNutt will find himself very much at home.

As Governor of Indiana, he summoned a special session of the legislature in 1936 and recommended a program of social-security legislation to dovetail with the Federal Act. The legislature, following his suggestion, adopted the Indiana unemployment compensation law and the Indiana public-welfare act. In preparation for this special session, McNutt studied every detail of this far-reaching program. The Indiana laws, written with his personal help and passed under his leadership, have been oustanding in the country. Neither the law nor its administration has been attacked either by Indiana agencies or by the Federal Government—something that can be said of few other States.

The National Youth Administration and the Civilian Conservation Corps, embracing close to a million of the under-privileged youth of America, can expect enlightened leadership from McNutt. In his activities in the American Legion, which ranged from post commander to national commander, he showed a constant interest in the Americanization and youth programs of the Legion.

The Federal Public Health Service which will fall within his jurisdiction needs only to look at the outstanding health department he established in Indiana to be reassured of the future success of this Federal agency.

The Office of Education, another important division of the new Security Agency, is indeed fortunate to have McNutt, one of America's outstanding educators, one thoroughly familiar with its needs and problems, at its helm.

The responsibilities of McNutt's new position are terrific. The coordination of the Social Security Board, the United States Employment Service, Civilian Conservation Corps, the Public Health Service, National Youth Administration, and Office of Education, is a man-sized job. Innumerable administrative tangles must be straightened out, if these agencies are to function with any satisfactory degree of efficiency, and at minimum cost to the taxpaying public. Paul V. McNutt has demonstrated repeatedly in his unusual career his leadership, administrative ability, and integrity in the long list of organizations he has headed, from grammar-school days up through the offices of national commander of the American Legion, dean of the Indiana University School of Law, Governor of the State of Indiana, and more recently United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands.

The passage of the Federal Reorganization Act, authorizing President Roosevelt to consolidate many agencies from an administrative standpoint, was accomplished only after a bitter fight. Although the President's Reorganization Act is merely the first step toward an obviously much-needed consolidation, much good can be accomplished between now and the next session of Congress.

Indiana is proud of McNutt's record. Indiana has been his home, and Indiana has profited most from his civic and governmental leadership. Now the Nation is to be the recipient of his public service.

CLARENCE A. JACKSON.

Mr. BRIDGES. I merely want to point out at this time that the parade has started; politics is on the march in the Federal Security Administration. His own unit in Indiana is the first one coming to the foreground. "Congratulations, Paul, good picking, Mr. President; McNutt again the boss." The official publication of a State unit, which is a branch of a Federal agency, marks the stepping stones up to 1941, when, in their opinion and by their prediction, Mr. McNutt will step up to further honors. On that point I do not agree with them; but I merely point out that it is very clear that the old traditions still hold; the Two Percent Club is apparently functioning in another way, and Mr. McNutt is certainly starting his campaign without loss of time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 2139. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the American Friends Service Committee, a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania for religious, educational, and social-service purposes; and

S. 2666. An act providing for the exchange of certain park lands at the northern boundary of Piney Branch Parkway, near Argyle Terrace, for other lands more suitable for the use and development of Piney Branch Parkway.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2150) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 5144. An act to authorize the board of directors of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf to dedicate a portion of Mount Olivet Road NE., and to exchange certain lands with the Secretary of the Interior, to dispose of other lands, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6076. An act to provide for the registry of pursers and surgeons as staff officers on vessels of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 10), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Whereas this year marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the American Association of State Highway Officials, which is composed of officials of the highway departments of all the States, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia, and the United States Bureau of Public Roads; and

Whereas said association through its members represents the State and Federal governmental agencies which have constructed and maintained a vast system of highways throughout the Nation, which highways are becoming increasingly important in local and interstate transportation; and

Whereas said association has announced that it is planning to celebrate in a fitting manner this quarter century of road building at a national meeting to be held during the month of October 1939 in the cities of Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Va.: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the splendid results which have been accomplished in the vital development of our national highway-transportation system merit an expression of public appreciation by the Congress.

SEC. 2. A special committee of the Congress is hereby established, to consist of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to convey to the members of the American Association of State Highway Officials at the national meeting of said association to be held in the cities of Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Va., during the month of October 1939, an expression of appreciation by the Congress of the praiseworthy accomplishments realized under their leadership and direction in the field of highway development.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

STATEMENT ON JUDGES BILL BY SENATOR SMATHERS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, although my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], is greatly interested and intended to support by speaking in its favor on the floor of the Senate the pending legislation which provides an additional Federal district judge for New Jersey, he has been necessarily detained at the bedside of his aged father, who is seriously ill. The senior Senator from New Jersey has, however, prepared a statement in support of the bill. I ask unanimous consent to have the clerk read the statement of my colleague, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I desire to make a brief statement in support of the additional district court judge provided for New Jersey in the bill now under consideration.

When I first came to the Senate 3 years ago, I knew from my contact as a lawyer with the Federal courts that New Jersey needed additional United States district court judges. I introduced a bill providing for one. The bill did not get anywhere because the New Jersey Bar Association passed a resolution opposing it, and the four Republican United States district court judges presiding in New Jersey got together in a huddle and decided to oppose the bill. I ceased my efforts and forgot about the matter. Within 6 months or a year after my first effort to give to New Jersey an additional district court judge, the Federal Judicial Council, headed by Chief Justice Hughes, after studying the situation recommended an additional district court judge for New Jersey. The New Jersey Bar Association reversed its decision and passed a resolution recommending an additional district court judge for New Jersey. And the three Republican United States district court judges in New Jersey, which constitutes the whole district court today, went on record recently urging the Congress of the United States to provide an additional district court judge for New Jersey. These three Republican United States district court judges filed a report with the Judiciary Committee wherein they set forth that at the present time there are 400 civil and criminal cases in which the Government is a party that are over 2 years old. The New Jersey Bar Association as late as June 1939 passed a resolution wherein it petitioned the Congress of the United States to pass with all convenient speed Senate bill 1481 providing for an additional district court judge for the State of New Jersey.

My Republican colleague from New Jersey, Senator BARBOUR, having been convinced by the record of untried cases and by the delay in the Federal courts in deciding the cases, joined me in urging the Judiciary Committee to favorably recommend this additional United States district court judge.

My Republican colleague, Senator BARBOUR, joins me in urging upon the Senate the passage of this bill.

New Jersey, it must be remembered, has a population of approximately 5,000,000; therefore five United States district court judges to preside over the district of New Jersey, with its population of 5,000,000, is not too many judges. New Jersey lies between the metropolitan areas of New York and Philadelphia. Hundreds of thousands of citizens of New Jersey have their offices and do business every day in either Pennsylvania or New York. By reason of this proximity to the great metropolitan centers, the question of diversity of citizenship entitles all the citizens of New Jersey and millions of New Yorkers and Pennsylvanians to enter the Federal court upon the jurisdictional grounds of diversity of citizenship.

All these facts would indicate to any reasonable mind that this bill providing for an additional United States district court judge for the district of New Jersey is not a patronage grab or an effort to create a job, but, on the contrary, it is an effort to supply an additional judge much needed in the State of New Jersey so that the Federal court business may be expedited.

Therefore I urge upon the Members of this body to join with me in the passage of this bill.

WM. H. SMATHERS.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the resolutions of the New Jersey Bar Association, adopted at its annual meeting in Atlantic City on June 3, 1939, be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Honorable Homer S. Cummings, then Attorney General of the United States, and the judicial conference of 1938, recommended the appointment of a fifth United States district judge for the district of New Jersey; and

Whereas the New Jersey State Bar Association, at its meeting held in Atlantic City in June 1938, endorsed such an appointment; and

Whereas the Honorable William Clark, formerly United States district judge for the district of New Jersey, was appointed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in July 1938, and no judge has been appointed to fill the vacancy caused by his elevation to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals; and

Whereas there were pending in the United States district court as of March 15, 1939, 253 cases at Newark, 136 cases at Camden, and 86 at Trenton, a total of 475 cases on the current calendar; and

Whereas on said date there were over 400 civil and criminal cases pending in said court in which the United States is a party, and which are over 2 years old; and

Whereas between January 1, 1939, and March 15, 1939, 119 indictments were returned by United States grand juries in the district of New Jersey; and

Whereas the administration of justice in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey is being seriously delayed by reason of the fact that the existing vacancy, which has existed for the last year, has not been filled, and because an additional judgeship has not been created: Be it

Resolved by the New Jersey State Bar Association, in convention assembled, as follows:

(1) That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, urged and requested, as promptly as possible, to appoint a suitable and qualified person as United States district court judge for the district of New Jersey to fill the existing vacancy; be it further

(2) Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be petitioned to pass, with all convenient speed, Senate bill 1481, which provides for an additional district judgeship for the district of New Jersey; be it further

(3) Resolved, That copies of this resolution, certified to be true copies, be forwarded by the secretary of this association to the President of the United States, and to the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to the Secretary of the House of Representatives, with all convenient speed.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, these resolutions, and the hearings before the committee on April 14, 1939, show that there are pending in the United States District Courts in the State of New Jersey more than 400 civil and criminal cases over 2 years old. For this reason I join my colleague [Mr. SMATHERS] in urging, as I do very strongly, the creation of an additional Federal judgeship in the State of New Jersey.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to commend and compliment the able Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR]. By his labors he has very greatly assisted the committee in gathering the data regarding the necessity for this bill. His attitude has been, I think, helpful and certainly statesmanlike.

Unless some other Senator wishes to discuss the bill, I ask that it be put on its passage; but before doing so I desire to be perfectly fair to my friend the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I understand that he wishes to oppose the bill. I do not wish to have the bill passed in his absence. I earnestly hope the bill may be passed, but I feel reluctant to ask for a vote when the Senator from Utah is absent, knowing as I do that he is opposed to the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Logan	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lucas	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

CRITICISMS OF CONGRESS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, it has been apparent for some time that the tendency has been to create a government in Washington that is individually conducted. Recently that newspaper columnist by the name of Jay Franklin, who acts as a sort of mouthpiece of the New Deal and a stooge for President Roosevelt, has stated, in effect, that Congress has outlived its usefulness. That is a pretty drastic statement for any man who purports to cover Washington news stories as a newsman, a radio commentator, and columnist.

Yesterday there appeared in the newspapers an Associated Press dispatch entitled "Elliott Roosevelt Hits Congress as 'Disorganized.' May Have Outlived Its Usefulness, He Suggests." Under a New York date line the article reads:

Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President, hazarded the opinion in a national radio talk tonight that Congress might have "outlived its usefulness."

Speaking from New London, Conn., in the twenty-second of a series of triweekly sponsored programs, Mr. Roosevelt, head of the Texas State radio network, vigorously criticized Congress as being factionally disorganized, principally over the question of the 1940 election.

"If you will consult the record," he said, "you will see that Congress has indulged in so many dubious coalitions, it has made so many cloakroom deals, designed for no other reason than to embarrass the administration, that all sense of direction has been lost.

"One can respect an honest difference of opinion, and in the opposition that has gone down the line, measure for measure, against the administration, you will find many whose integrity is unquestioned, but with them you will also find men who act with an appalling irresponsibility. Their chief desire is to see the administration take a trimming. Instead of devoting their time to constructive debate, they spend it in venomous attacks on the personal integrity of the administration leaders.

"When men of this character are able to reduce Congress to a form of political slugfest, then I think Congress has outlived its usefulness."

He said debate on the President's Hyde Park Library proposal, which had occupied half a day, should have taken only 30 minutes, commenting:

"How can you retain respect for a body that conducts itself in this manner?"

Mr. Roosevelt said his discussion of Congress had been evoked by many letters asking his attitude toward the body.

He referred to Congress' activity on the silver and neutrality questions and also on the District of Columbia administration.

"Congressional neglect of the District of Columbia is inexcusable," he said.

"Until the issue of 1940 clarifies itself, very little in a constructive sense may be expected from Congress," he concluded, characterizing the body as "fidgety and half sick."

Mr. President, this is a pretty brazen attack upon one branch of our Government in Washington today, made by the son of the President of the United States. I realize that Elliott Roosevelt on many occasions does not reflect his father's views. Primarily I believe that, I suppose, because from time to time he has advocated the candidacy of Mr. GARNER, the Vice President of the United States, for the Presidency. From all I hear, that does not please the "Big White Chief" in the White House. So I would not say that Elliott at all times represents his father's views.

When Jay Franklin, however, in either a radio talk or in his column, makes the statement that Congress has outlived its usefulness, or something of that nature, and when Elliott comes out with the statement I have read, I wonder what it is all about, if there is a plot or plan to do away with one agency of the Government. I am just wondering whether Mr. Elliott Roosevelt reflects the views of the majority leader the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], when he says that Congress should be liquidated, that it has outlived its usefulness, whether Elliott Roosevelt, the son of the President, represents the New Deal leadership here in Congress and in the country. The country would be interested in knowing by what authority Elliott has been speaking.

I bring this up for the RECORD, that the people of the country may have some idea of the propaganda that is going out from certain individuals in high places, or the relatives of people in high places in Washington today.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, notwithstanding the support given to the pending bill, I am opposed to it. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has submitted an eloquent statement urging its approval. It has the support of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and undoubtedly the active support of some office holders and office seekers—residents of the States and judicial districts for which provision is made in the pending bill. I mention office seekers because it is recognized that there are many aspirants for judicial and other Federal positions, and there are also groups, if not organizations, concerned in creating new Federal positions and adding to the Federal personnel. I have, upon a number of occasions, called the attention of the Senate and the country to the great increase in the number of Federal organizations and agencies and the enormous increase in the number of Federal employees. The administrative and executive departments of the Government have become an oppressive burden and the almost numberless employees of the Government, with their increasing demands for gratuities, and so forth, constitute a danger to our form of government.

We have perhaps the most powerful bureaucracy in the world. Executive and administrative units are increasing in number and power, and the judicial branch of the Government is not immune from this disease which is affecting and indeed infecting our political and governmental institutions.

The bill under consideration provides for more judicial machinery; calls for a considerable increase in the number of Federal judges, and, of course, will require Federal appropriations to meet the demands for larger Federal appropriations.

The appropriation bills which have received the approval of Congress during this session call for an enlarged personnel and increase the number of Federal agencies and organizations. Stupendous have been the appropriations during the past 5 or 6 years. They will be materially increased before this Congress adjourns. Perhaps the appropriations will reach the gigantic sum of $11,000,000,000, and a considerable part of that enormous sum will be required to pay the salaries and compensation of the millions of persons whose names are upon the Federal pay rolls. Demands for economy are unheeded; opposition to increased expenditures meets with but little support, and the rolling tide of governmental expenditures is sweeping over the land like a mighty wave of the ocean.

It were well that the judicial branch of the Government could be preserved from some of the ailments that afflict the executive and legislative branches of the Government; indeed the judicial department of the Government is the crowning glory of this Republic and to it we look for protection from assaults against constitutional government.

I realize that with the propaganda abroad in the land; the increasing demands for Federal activities and for larger Federal appropriations, opposition to this bill will be unavailing. All efforts to resist Federal encroachments and Federal appropriations have been futile, as a result of which in nearly every branch of the Government there have been additional bureaus, organizations, and agencies created and appropriations made for hundreds of thousands of additional employees. But slight attention is given to sound fiscal policies and to the adoption of measures which will call for a balancing of the Budget and the return of the Government to the paths of safety and sanity.

Mr. President, the pending bill in my opinion is not warranted. The condition of the Federal courts does not call for an increase in the number of judges and for the expenditures which the enactment of this bill would necessarily require.

I have examined the reports of the judicial conferences and records dealing with the work of the courts for many years last past. Such examination has strengthened my view that this bill is not meritorious. I should make one qualification. I am inclined to believe that an additional judge in the southern district of New York is justified.

I invite the attention of Senators to the facts disclosed by the records showing the very large increase in the number of judges since 1920. During the incumbency of President Harding, provisions were made for the appointment of 26 district-court judges and 1 circuit-court judge. I was a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and opposed the bill, as I believed that there was no necessity for providing for so many additional judges. The excuse offered by some of my Republican friends was that the enforcement of the Volstead Act had greatly increased the burdens of the courts. I regarded the reason assigned as wholly inadequate. However, following the enactment of the law the authorized appointments were made. It is my opinion that politics entered into the selection of the judges authorized by the act and I should say, to be entirely fair, that political considerations have not been absent from the filling of judicial positions which have been created since the days of President Harding.

As a matter of fact, a very large percentage of the prohibition cases were disposed of without imposing any very heavy burden upon the courts. Many of the defendants pleaded guilty; others entered pleas of nolo contendere. I am certainly within the bounds of accuracy in stating that the enforcement of the prohibition laws afforded no justification for the additional judicial machinery which was set up.

In the administration of President Coolidge, Congress provided for 22 additional district judges and 2 additional circuit judges. I was opposed to the enactment of the law providing for these additional judges, but the pressure from within and without the party in power, and from office seekers, was so great as to secure the enactment of the measures providing for these additional judges.

Under Mr. Hoover's administration Congress enacted laws providing for the appointment of nine additional district judges and two circuit court judges.

May I add that several of the positions provided for in the acts passed in the administrations of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover dealt with judicial districts and circuit court districts which received consideration in the bill before us.

During President Roosevelt's administration there have been enacted laws authorizing the appointment of 41 district judges and 7 circuit court judges. Some of these 41 judicial positions likewise relate to judicial districts in the various States which are receiving consideration in the present bill.

As indicative of the lack of necessity of additional judges, may I state that there have been 98 district-court and 12 circuit-court judges appointed during the administrations of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt. Perhaps there should be a modification of that statement growing out of the fact that a few of the judges were appointed subject to the qualification that when their terms expired by reason of death, retirement, or disability, the vacancies should not be filled unless authorized by Congress; and by subsequent acts in a limited number of cases, Congress has filled such vacancies, and these are included in the totals given.

Notwithstanding the fact, as I shall show before concluding, that the litigation in the Federal courts has decreased during the past few years, the number of judges has greatly increased. There are now 187 active district judges, and my information is that there are approximately 8 retired district judges and a few vacancies.

In considering our judicial machinery, reference should be made to the fact that there are other Federal judges. There are 9 Justices of the United States Supreme Court, 5 judges of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, 5 judges for the United States Court of Claims, 9 for the United States Customs Court, 13 Federal judges for Hawaii, and 6 for Puerto Rico. I should also mention the fact that there are 57 judges of the circuit courts of appeal, so that the total number of Federal judges is, including 12 vacancies, 311.

There are, in addition, 15 retired judges. It would seem from these figures that the Federal Government is not lacking in judicial machinery.

In considering the costs connected with Federal courts, we cannot be oblivious to the fact that the machinery of the courts calls for an army of marshals, deputy marshals, clerks, bailiffs, stenographers, and so forth. An examination of the appropriation bills reveals the fact that millions of dollars are expended by the Federal Government in the maintenance of its judicial machinery.

I am inviting attention to these facts to indicate that the Government has not been lacking in provision for the administration of justice in its courts.

Mr. President, reference has been made to an article written by Hon. Merrill E. Otis, United States district judge for the western district of Missouri, which appeared in the University of Kansas City Law Review. This article was placed in the RECORD last Friday. Judge Otis is a man of character and ability, and is recognized as one of the ablest of the Federal judges. His article should be read by Senators before they vote upon the pending bill. I am sure that if they give careful consideration to the same, they will reach the conclusion which has been reached by others, that this bill lacks merit and ought to be recommitted or defeated.

Inviting attention to this article, Judge Otis has presented records showing the decline in the amount of litigation in the Federal courts. The record, I think, will indicate that in various classes of cases there has been a reduction of approximately 65 percent. I call the attention of the Senate to the decline in the amount of business in the Federal courts.

The statement just made by the able and just and fair Senator from Vermont—and no man is more just and more fair than he—has strengthened me in the position which I have taken, that there was no necessity for the increase in the number of judges provided for in this bill.

I now invite attention to the table presented by Judge Otis, showing the decline in the number of cases in the Federal courts from the year 1929 to 1938, inclusive. Table I deals with criminal cases and states that in 1929 there were 86,348 cases. In 1930, 87,305 cases; in 1931, 83,747; and in 1932, 92,174. In 1933, 82,675; and in 1934 the number had been reduced to 34,152, a decline of 65 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Was not the decline in the number of criminal cases due to the repeal of the prohibition amendment, which resulted in the wiping out of a great many cases of violation of the prohibition law?

Mr. KING. In part.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the prohibition amendment was adopted it resulted in a great increase in criminal cases, but after the prohibition amendment was repealed there were no more cases brought of violation of the prohibition law.

Mr. KING. I am trying to point out that the increase in the number of judges provided in the bill is not warranted by reason of the condition of the dockets.

Mr. CONNALLY. Ordinarily those criminal cases to which the Senator is referring do not consume much of the time of the court. They result mostly in pleas of guilty, and a judge may be able to dispose of as many as 50 of them in 1 day, whereas one civil case may last as long as a month.

Mr. KING. I shall refer to civil cases in a moment. This morning, when interrupted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], I stated that a large number of defendants in criminal cases pleaded guilty or nolle contendere, so that the observations of the Senator are correct, that criminal cases consume less time of the courts than civil cases.

Returning to the criminal cases in the Federal courts, in 1935 there were 35,365; in 1936 substantially the same number of cases were brought in the Federal courts; in 1937 the number was 35,475; and in 1938 the number was reduced to 34,202.

In Judge Otis' article, under the head of Civil Cases in which the United States was a party, he presents the following table:

1930	24,934
1931	25,332
1932	34,189
1933	25,797
1934	9,487
1935	11,679
1936	13,051
1937	10,202
1938	11,526

Judge Otis also submits a table showing the private civil cases from 1929 to 1938, inclusive. It is as follows:

1930	23,371
1931	24,000
1932	26,326
1933	26,656
1934	26,372
1935	23,302
1936	26,334
1938	22,065

Mr. President, from this record, which has not been questioned and cannot be controverted, the proof is conclusive that the work of the Federal courts is diminishing. The number of cases has materially been reduced, and there is every indication, in view of various conditions, that there will be a still further reduction in the number of cases brought in the Federal courts.

I again invite the attention of the Senate to Judge Otis' article. He states that reducing the criminal cases and civil cases to which the United States was a party, in both the first and second halves of the 10-year period, to terms of cases between private litigants, there had been commenced in the first half of the period 178,002 cases, while in the second half only 143,876 cases. The business of the courts, however, in the second half may be said to be 81 percent of the business in the first half.

A review of his article clearly demonstrates not only the reduction in the number of cases but the lack of necessity of any increase in our judicial machinery. He suggests that a measuring stick be applied to determine the number of judges required and, incidentally, the number of cases which should be disposed of by each trial judge.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD without reading excerpts from pages 223–224 of his article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Let us take, then, the 10 districts having the largest volume of business in the 10-year period portrayed on our charts; let us consider the work terminated in those districts in the peak year of 1933; let us then determine from what was done in those districts in that year what is within average judicial capacity. The 10 districts are: (1) The southern district of New York, (2) the eastern district of New York, (3) the northern district of Illinois, (4) the southern district of Florida, (5) the district of New Jersey, (6) the northern district of Ohio, (7) the eastern district of Michigan, (8) the southern district of California, (9) the northern district of Texas, and (10) the eastern district of Pennsylvania. Forty judges in 1933 terminated in these districts 19,686 criminal cases, 11,089 civil cases to which the United States was a party, 8,893 cases between private litigants. The average work terminated by each of the 40 judges in the 10 districts in 1933 was 492 criminal cases, 227 civil cases to which the United States was a party, 221 civil cases between private litigants.

As a check upon this conclusion, the compiler of this study, who himself is and has been for 14 years a United States district judge, of average capacity and industry only, has examined the work of his own district, the western district of Missouri, for the year 1933. It so happens that this district is the eleventh from the top in volume of business. It had two judges in 1933. One of them terminated slightly more than one-half of the cases terminated in that district in 1933. The total number terminated by both judges was: Criminal, 1,148; civil, United States, 496; civil, private, 482. One judge could and easily did dispose of at least 574 criminal cases, 248 United States civil cases, and 241 private civil cases. That is a little more than the average number of cases in each class disposed of by each of the 40 judges in the 10 districts with the greatest volume of business.

Let us now arbitrarily reduce the averages for the 10 heaviest districts, as follows: Criminal, from 492 to 400; civil, United States a party, from 227 to 200; civil, private, from 221 to 200. That arbitrary reduction certainly will take care of every possible contingency, such as the temporary incapacity of judges and sporadic increases in work in certain districts.

So here is the measuring stick, 400–200–200.

The reasons justifying this measuring stick have been stated. If a measuring stick more nearly accurate can be devised, it ought to be devised and its justification set out. To refuse any measuring stick is to confess an unworthy purpose. Certainly those in authority will wish reason and intelligence as guides, rather than that their action shall be influenced by selfish desires for patronage, moving along ancient logrolling ways.

Mr. KING. I should say in passing that in view of a measure which will soon be enacted into law, which calls for an administrative officer to check up on the courts and to expedite the consideration of cases pending, there will be a still further reduction in the number of actions brought, or if not, greater efficiency, if I may use that word, in the administration of justice in the Federal courts.

Senators will recall what was denominated a "drive" in connection with the court-packing bill to increase the number of Federal judges. A survey was made of the condition of the Federal courts, and as a result, a measure was passed to create, as I have indicated, 41 additional district judges and 7 additional circuit court judges. I did not believe that the situation required such additions to the Federal judiciary. I could not help but believe that there was a feeling upon the part of some that because of the defeat of the court-packing plan there should be some plan adopted that might have some mitigative effects, and for that reason, as stated, provision was made to increase the judiciary to the extent just mentioned.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator is aware, is he not, of the Senate bill 188 providing for administration of the United States courts?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Various of the circuit court judges appeared before the subcommittee in charge of that bill, and I may say to the Senator from Utah that one of the chief reasons urged for the adoption of the bill was that it would facilitate and expedite business in the United States courts, whether in the district or circuit courts. They pointed out that since it is possible in a circuit to allocate judges where there is congestion, that that will relieve the situation if distress exists.

In view of the report, not only of the subcommittee that considered that bill but of the Judiciary Committee itself which reported the bill, and the fact that it passed both the Senate and the House, and at the present time is waiting conference action for adjustment in some particulars, does not it seem advisable to the Senator that the pending bill should await until a fair opportunity to try out that bill and to observe its effect shall have been had?

Mr. KING. I agree with what the Senator has stated. As I recall it, the claim was made in support of that bill that it would greatly expedite the trial of cases and reduce the number of cases, and would provide an increase in the number of judges. But as soon as that bill was passed, demands are made, sometimes by lawyers and perhaps politicians, too often without any rhyme or reason, for an increase in the number of judges in various parts of the United States.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. I should like, if I may, to direct to the attention of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for whom we hold such respect and regard, the question of whether or not we may properly ask the chairman's views, in his own time, of course, as to whether or not Senate bill 188 could not properly have a trial before we advance the pending bill?

Mr. KING. I yield to my friend.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is my decided opinion that the administration bill, which has for its effect and purport really the giving of the judiciary the right to arrange their own budget, is a great advance and a great reform, making the judiciary more nearly independent.

It is not in human nature to be objective, cold, and distant toward one who holds the purse strings. I do not assert that the present Attorney General, or any Attorney General, would seek to use the power of his office to influence any judge. However, I repeat that I think I know human nature. No one is so exalted or so Attic that he is wholly impersonal and objective toward one who holds the purse strings. Congress holds the purse strings; but the budget for the judges is made up by the judges themselves. They are not required, forsooth, to go to the Attorney General to obtain an additional pencil, a piece of blotting paper, or traveling expenses. Congress, and not the Department of Justice, passes upon such questions.

I think the public interest would not be promoted by delaying the bill for the additional justices until the Budget bill or the administration bill is worked out. The bill for the administration of the courts has been the subject of much discussion in the newspapers and before various committees of Congress. So, so far as I may quote the Supreme Court with propriety, it is very much favored by the Supreme Court Justices and generally.

I will say to my able friend [Mr. DANAHER] who has served so well on the Senate Committee on the Judiciary that the judges provided for in the bill comprehend but half the quota of new judges asked by the judicial conference and by the Attorney General. The judicial conference assembled in September 1938. It was composed of the senior circuit judges of the various circuits and of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and was presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States. That conference recommended almost twice the number of judges carried in the bill. Likewise, the Attorney General requested and recommended to Congress the creation of nearly twice the number of judgeships carried in the bill. However, your committee scrutinized every circuit and every district and reached the conclusion that the judges provided for in the bill were necessary in the judicial branch of the Government for the common good. Of course, I have the highest respect for my able friend from Utah [Mr. KING]. He does not think they are necessary.

Mr. KING. I do not.

Mr. ASHURST. I respect him for his views. I wish to be respectful in my view and in my statement, but I am just as profoundly convinced that, for example, the southern district of New York, and the States of California, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and other States mentioned in the bill need additional judges.

If I have ever made any impress on the country, I hope I have never made the unfortunate impress that I would create a judgeship because of any partisan or patronage view. I agree with the editorial which I read from the New York Times. It would be monstrous to think of a Senator who would attempt to create a judgeship because of partisan or patronage views. Likewise it is monstrous to refuse to create judgeships where they are actually needed. I need not quote at this point that "justice delayed is justice denied."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not have the floor.

Mr. KING. The speech now being made by my able friend, appearing in the middle of the remarks I have made, will, of course, give to my remarks a prominence which otherwise they would not deserve.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is too generous to me.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. REED. I happen to come from the State of Kansas. The judicial conference, to which reference has been made, recommended an additional Federal judge for Kansas.

Mr. KING. It did.

Mr. REED. Both Senators from Kansas told the committee that we did not need the additional judge. Kansas has a population of nearly 2,000,000; and yet we get along with 1 Federal judge.

To the south of us is the State of Oklahoma. May I inquire of the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] how many Federal judges Oklahoma now has?

Mr. KING. Oklahoma has more than it should have, and it is asking for more. I shall call attention to that matter in a few moments.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me at this point?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to have the information which I requested.

Mr. LEE. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has asked me a question. Does he wish me to answer it?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KING. I do not yield if the Senator from Oklahoma desires to defend the present bill. He may do that in his own time. The Senator from Kansas has asked for the number of Federal judges in Oklahoma. If the Senator from Oklahoma cares to give the number, I shall yield for that purpose.

Mr. LEE. We have four. The case load is greater per judge than in any of the States mentioned.

Mr. REED. I merely asked for the number of Federal judges in Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. We have four.

Mr. REED. Oklahoma has four; and the State of Kansas, which is similarly situated with respect to litigation, has one. Both States are oil-producing States. Both of them have some coal mining and some agriculture. We get along with one judge and do not ask any more. Oklahoma has four and is asking for an additional judge.

Mr. President, I wish to compliment the distinguished Senator from Arizona, who is chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I think the number of Federal judges allowed in this country is a national scandal. I wish the Judiciary Committee, under the leadership of the distinguished chairman, whom we all revere, had the nerve and the courage to meet the situation fairly and say "We do not need any more Federal judges, and we will not recommend any more Federal judges." I think that is what the Senate ought to do. If we are permitted to have a yea-and-nay vote today, I expect to vote "nay" upon the appointment of additional Federal judges, in view of the statement made by Judge Otis and the common knowledge that at this time there is an ample number of Federal judges in the country.

Mr. KING. I am happy to have the support of the able Senator from Kansas. I know the difficulty that the Judiciary Committee has encountered in meeting the demands of politicians and others from the State of Kansas and elsewhere who insisted upon providing another judge when the best interests of the State and the best citizens of the State opposed it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. REED. I call attention to the old familiar lines:

'Tis sweet to hear the watchdog's honest bark
Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home;
'Tis sweet to know there is an eye will mark
Our coming, and look brighter when we come.

I fear there are Members of this body who are urging additional Federal judges not because they can be justified from the standpoint of the volume of litigation in their States, but because they mean an additional appointment on the Federal bench from their States.

Mr. KING. As well as additional district attorneys, marshals, and increased personnel, and possibly additional courthouses, involving, not hundreds of thousands of dollars, but ultimately millions of dollars, at the expense of the Federal Goverment, the cost of which must be passed on to the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. REED. I merely wish to emphasize the attitude taken by my distinguished colleague, Mr. CAPPER, and myself. We have only one Federal judge in Kansas, where the judicial conference recommended an additional Federal judge. Both my colleague and myself told the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee that it was not necessary, that it was an extravagance which ought not to be allowed, and that we were not in favor of it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. What the able Senator from Kansas says is true. The judicial conference recommended an additional Federal judge for Kansas. Likewise the Attorney General recommended an additional Federal judge for Kansas. With due deference to the judicial conference and to the Attorney General, I prefer to rely upon what the Senators say. The Senator was truthful, as he always is, when he said that he notified the chairman of the committee that so far as Kansas was concerned he did not wish a new judge. His colleague did likewise; whereupon I struck the additional judgeship from my bill, because I am not going to take the position that a State ought to have an additional Federal judge when the two Senators oppose it.

Likewise, when the Senators from another State appeal to me and convince me and convince the committee that they need another judge, I am not going to strike them down. The rule which applies to Kansas should be applied to Oklahoma. Of course, if the Senators from Oklahoma had not been able to make a case and had been against an additional judge, I would not have voted for it.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me to read a short paragraph in this connection? I think it is appropriate at this point.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator should deal with it in his own time. Oklahoma has been mentioned. The Senator can read his statement after I have made a brief statement with respect to his State.

The bill would authorize the President to appoint an additional district judge for the western district of Oklahoma. I have looked at the record and have reached the conclusion that an additional judge is not necessary. From the status of the cases pending and disposed of in the western district of Oklahoma in the past 2 years, it appears that no new judge is required. As of July 1, 1937, all cases ready for trial were tried at the term following the joinder of issue. As of July 1, 1938, the docket was current, and only 3 months' time was required to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue. These figures refer to actions at law.

With respect to suits in equity, as of July 1, 1937, all "ready" cases were tried at the term following the joinder of issue. As of July 1, 1938, the docket was current, and only 3 months were required to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue.

These facts, taken from page 299 of the 1938 annual report of the Attorney General, which I have examined, indicate conclusively to my mind that the work in the district court for the western district of Oklahoma has been and is current, and that no new judge is required in addition to those who have been handling the cases and keeping them current.

I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, not to make an explanation, but to read the statement to which he has referred.

Mr. LEE. I wish merely to read one brief paragraph. I shall make answer later:

The case load in the western district of Oklahoma is considerably greater than the average per judge for the entire country, and is growing from year to year. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the number of civil and criminal cases filed in the western district of Oklahoma was 545 cases, as against 371 cases per judge for the entire country.

Mr. KING. I again invite the attention of the Senate, because some Senators who are now in the Chamber were not present when I referred to it, to the able, fair, and factual presentation by Judge Otis, one of the ablest Federal judges in the United States, evidencing the great reduction in the number of Federal cases, criminal and civil, in all parts of the country.

In 1929 there were more than 86,000 criminal cases. The same year there were 24,000 civil cases in which the United States was a party. In 1929 there were 20,000 private civil cases in all the courts of the United States, in the district as well as in the circuit courts.

Coming now to the criminal cases in 1938, the reduction in the number of criminal cases was from 86,000 to 34,000.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask the Senator to yield at this point, because I am compelled to attend a committee meeting and will have to leave the floor in a few moments.

As a member of the special committee that had in charge the investigation of the subject matter of the pending bill, I wish to say, first of all, that I am in no wise interested from the standpoint of my State; but, inasmuch as I was delegated to investigate conditions in California, a neighboring State, I desire to draw to the attention of the able Senator from Utah some facts and figures which, I think, cannot be disputed, because I personally went on the ground, visiting the city of Los Angeles and southern California generally, and investigated the matter for myself at length, and this is what I found:

The district of southern California is asking for an eighth district judge.

Mr. KING. For an additional district judge?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; an additional district judge which will make eight judges in the southern district of California. That district comprises all counties south of Fresno to the Mexican line. I found that from May 1, 1938, to May 1, 1939, 4,174 cases were filed in the district court for the southern district of California, of which 1,503 were civil and criminal cases, and 2,671 were bankruptcy and reorganization cases. It is estimated, as I have stated in my report to the committee, that the total available trial time for each judge is 220 days a year. Allowing at least two days for the ordinary civil trial, it is a fair estimate that 7 judges would try 770 cases per year.

With 1,503 civil and criminal cases and 2,671 bankruptcy and reorganization cases filed, seven judges cannot do the work. The seven district judges in the southern district of California are now working 18 and 20 hours a day, and there has not been a judge in that district who has taken a vacation in years. They are working almost to the extent of breaking down from the standpoint of their physical being and welfare.

That being true, I say to the able Senator from Utah that every case should stand on its own footing, and we cannot judge the necessity for this bill from a broad, Nation-wide standpoint. When we find that in a district such as the southern district of California conditions are such that the judges are years behind in their work and it is physically impossible for seven judges to pick up the work and make it at all nearly current, then we must, of necessity, take this bill and look upon it from the standpoint of the investigations made by the individual members of the committee who went into the respective districts, as did the able Senator from Vermont into the southern district of New York, as did other Senators into various other districts, and who made their reports not upon the basis of conditions reported by the Attorney General a year back but upon the basis of conditions absolutely disclosed on the ground at the time the investigations were made.

I beg leave, if I may interrupt the Senator for a moment further, to request that my personal report made to the chairman of the committee on this matter may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. I ask that it be inserted following my remarks. With that condition, I have no objection.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask that my report be inserted in the RECORD following the remarks of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The report submitted by Mr. McCARRAN to the Committee on the Judiciary appears at the conclusion of Mr. KING's remarks.)

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have before me the annual report of the Attorney General of the United States for 1938. It shows substantially that the work of the court in the southern district of California is current. I may add——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say I would not care if all the reports in Christendom made that statement. Facts are facts, and when a Senator goes on the ground and makes a personal investigation, under the obligation that is imposed upon a Senator, and comes back and makes a report, no other report in the world should contradict that finding.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during Mr. Roosevelt's incumbency there have been four new appointments of judges in the southern district of California. So, every effort has been made by Congress, it seems to me, to meet the requirements of litigants in California.

I may say that the record is conclusive as shown by Judge Otis and from other sources that there has been generally throughout the United State a remarkable reduction in the number of cases in the Federal courts. In other words, litigation is decreasing. That is obvious. Possibly it is due in part to the depression and possibly there are other reasons which might be assigned and can be assigned for the reduction in litigation in the Federal courts. Perhaps more and more cases are being tried in the State courts and less and less in the Federal courts. Then, with the legislation to which the Senator from Connecticut called attention, obviously in the future the Federal courts where there has been any delay will have reason for expediting their cases, because there will be an administrator, and any dereliction in duty, any congestion of the dockets, will be called to the attention of the Supreme Court and, of course, of Congress, and whatever derelictions may be made manifest will be cured either by the higher judicial tribunals or by legislation upon the part of Congress.

The condition of the courts and their dockets represent a study by the administrator and methods and plans adopted for expediting the work of the courts. It is believed that there will be a larger degree of cooperation between the judges and the Federal courts as a result of which the dockets will be cleared and the work of the courts kept current.

Mr. President, I desire briefly to refer to the annual report of the Attorney General of the United States for the fiscal year 1936 and to the report of the Solicitor General—Hon. Stanley M. Reed—which constitutes a part of the report of the Attorney General. The Judicial Conference, over which the Chief Justice, Hon. Charles E. Hughes, presided, made a study of the judicial work of the courts. The report of the Attorney General indicated that there was a decrease not only in the total number of pending cases at the close of the last fiscal year but also a decrease in each class of cases above described. The class of cases referred to in the report were United States civil cases, criminal cases, private suits, and bankruptcy cases. The report also that that in 51 out of a total of 85 judicial districts the business of the district courts was current; that is, all cases ready for trial were disposed of at the term following joinder of issue. It was further stated that this means that there are no arrears except as to cases continued at the request of counsel. The report showed that the dockets were being cleared and that cases in most of the districts were current. The report also stated that in some of the 51 districts equity cases may be tried even between terms as soon as ready. After a thorough survey of the condition of the courts the conference, consisting of the Chief Justice and the senior circuit judges of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth districts, the only recommendations for additional judgeships were as follows: Two for the southern district of New York; one for the northern district of Georgia; one additional district judge for West Virginia; one additional district judge for the western district of Missouri; one additional judge for the district of Louisiana; one additional judge for the district of Kansas, and one additional judge for the district of Oklahoma.

I should add that the senior circuit judge of the sixth district was absent, but his place was taken by Circuit Judge Hicks. The recommendations made by the judicial conference have all been adopted except the one relating to Kansas. My understanding is that members of the bar and the leading citizens of the State insisted that no additional judge was required in Kansas and Congress has respected their views.

As the record shows, there is less litigation in the Federal courts now than when the judicial conference made the recommendations in 1936. If they believed that the only judges required were in those districts to which they referred, obviously no conditions have intervened which would warrant an increase in the number of Federal judges either for the district courts or the circuit courts. However, since that report was made my recollection is that approximately 25 additional district judges have been provided and 6 circuit judges. I should add, however, included in these two last assignments were the judges recommended by the judicial conference to which I have just referred.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I will yield in a moment.

I may state that, obviously, the judicial conference then, with the careful examination and consideration of the then Solicitor General, now Mr. Justice Reed, investigated the needs of the country for additional judges and made a limited number of recommendations, all of which were subsequently recognized by Congress. If they had felt that additional judges were needed, they would have made the recommendations, but, litigation having been reduced since then, obviously there is no necessity for any increase in the number of judges in any part of the United States except perhaps in a rare case.

I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Utah—and if the Senator from Nevada is still in the Chamber I should like to call his attention also to some figures. I read now from the statement of Judge Otis of the western district of Missouri, and I join with the Senator from Utah in paying the highest tribute possible to Judge Otis as an able judge. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] introduced into the RECORD a statement made by Judge Otis, an analysis of the work of all the United States courts, including the district court for the southern district of California, to which the junior Senator from Nevada has referred. Judge Otis counts that among the 10 districts in the United States having the heaviest work. Judge Otis calls attention to the fact that the western district of Missouri, where he is one of the two judges, is the eleventh district in the United States in point of work. Judge Otis in the statement, introduced into the RECORD by the Senator from Vermont, says:

As a check upon this conclusion the compiler of this study, who himself is and has been for 14 years a United States district judge, of average capacity and industry only, has examined the work of his own district, the western district of Missouri, for the year 1933. It so happens that this district is the eleventh from the top in volume of business.

And I interject here it has two judges.

It had two judges in 1933. One of them terminated slightly more than one-half of the cases terminated in that district in 1933. The total number terminated by both judges was: Criminal, 1,148; civil, United States, 496; civil, private, 482. One judge could and easily did dispose of at least 574 criminal cases, 248 United States civil cases, and 241 private civil cases.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. May I finish this statement, if the Senator from Vermont will permit? Then I shall be very glad to leave the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; there will be little value in what I want to call attention to if it is not done now. If the Senator would prefer not to have me do it, I will desist.

Mr. REED. I shall be very happy to have the Senator proceed, with the permission of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I just want to stand up beside those figures two other columns, so that a comparison may be made.

The distinguished Senator from Kansas has called attention to the fact that the per-judge load for the two judges in the western district of Missouri is 1,063 cases for a year. That is a magnificent public service, but I think it must be compared with similar service per judge of 940 cases a year when we take into account the 10 leading districts in the United States; that is, the judges in the western district of Missouri had 1,063 cases against 940 cases in the other 10 districts, in which there were 40 judges. Compared with the southern district of New York, which I was particularly studying, the judges in the western district of Missouri had 1,063 cases as against 1,375 cases transacted by the judge in the southern district of New York when there were 8 judges there, having the assistance of visitors who rendered considerable help.

I think the comparison shows that, speaking generally of the places in the United States where the judicial work is heavy, the amount of work discharged per judge has been remarkably great. I therefore have accepted the opinion of Judge Otis as worthy of following when he says that in his opinion it may well be assumed that 400 criminal cases, 200 civil cases in which the Government is interested, and 200 civil cases of all other kinds constitute a yardstick in ascertaining whether or not an additional judge is necessary.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I now make an inquiry of the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the Chair). The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. KING. I yield, so that the Senator may make such statement as he desires.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I simply wish to say that when this bill was taken up, it was with the understanding that it would be set aside if thought necessary when we were ready to go forward with the lending bill; and when we started out today I was given the assurance that we would finish the bill by 2 o'clock. I realize that no Member of the Senate can ever give any assurance that can be relied on as to when anything can be finished. At the same time, while I do not want to limit anyone, I must urge upon all those who are interested in this discussion that the matter be expedited as much as possible.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that I have been interrupted to such an extent, but I make no complaint—that——

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has been very generous in yielding to other Senators, and they have made speeches in his time. The Senator from Utah is always courteous, of course, as we all know; but I hope he will put on the brakes a little.

Mr. KING. I like to be gracious and courteous. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the committee, made such a brilliant speech for nearly 10 minutes in the middle of my speech that I have been trying to get back to earth ever since. Having yielded to the chairman, I have been compelled to yield to my distinguished friend upon the other side.

I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me say to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader, that in my opinion no more important legislation than this bill is pending before this body. I think it goes away beyond the personal desires of men to be appointed to the Federal bench, or of Senators who may hope to enjoy additional patronage.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator is alluding to anybody in this body as advocating the enactment of the bill because it means that somebody is going to be appointed, it would be equally legitimate to urge that some of those who are opposing it are opposing it because they do not want somebody appointed. If that is good as an argument on one side, it is equally good as an argument on the other.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator in that respect. There are more persons who want offices than there are persons who have the courage to oppose the creation of additional offices.

Mr. REED. And let me add to what the Senator from Utah has said that there is a great deal more steam behind the creation of additional offices than there is, possibly, behind the Senators who are trying to hold this scandalous thing in check.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to get into a debate about the relative quantities of steam; but the Senator from Kansas has exhibited more steam today in opposing this bill than any other Senator has exhibited in advocating it, so he seems to have a reserve power of steam equal to that of anyone here.

Mr. KING. I am afraid the Senator from Kentucky was not here when my eloquent friend from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] took the floor in his own time and in my time and displayed a vast amount of erudition and eloquence.

Mr. BARKLEY. The remarks of the Senator from Arizona today, as always, are characterized by erudition and intelligence and not simply by steam.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Of course that is true. I presume what the Senator has said is a compliment from the majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky, to the junior Senator from Kansas. I grant you that I am just a humble layman, a nonlawyer. I realize my difficulties in the company of so many eminent lawyers; but I think I know what fair public policy is, and I think it is being abused in this case.

I am about to conclude. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the standard set up by Judge Otis, who has been referred to by the Senator from Vermont, that as a fair average a Federal judge should be able to dispose of 400 criminal cases, 200 Government civil cases, and 200 private civil cases, which is 800 cases per year. The southern district of California now has seven judges. On that basis—and it is, of course, only a broad average—the southern district of California could dispose of 5,600 cases a year; and on the same basis the western district of Oklahoma would, I think—and I know the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] will correct me if I am wrong about it—be able to dispose of the cases on the docket with the judges now there.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me——

Mr. REED. Not yet. The Senator may have the floor in a moment.

Mr. LEE. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the population of the two States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. The population of Kansas is 1,845,194, against the population of Oklahoma of 2,600,000 plus. I further wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the case load in Kansas in 1938, according to the latest report which the Senator from Utah just mentioned, is 592, against a case load in Oklahoma of 2,090.

Mr. KING. Kansas has one judge, and Oklahoma has four. Proceed.

Mr. REED. Is that per judge, or is that for the four judges? That is for the four judges, is it not, I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Oklahoma has four judges, and Kansas has only one.

Mr. REED. That is for four judges; and, according to the standard laid down by Judge Otis, whom nobody disputes as an authority, four judges should have disposed of 3,200 cases, and yet we are being asked to give the western district of Oklahoma an additional judge.

I thank the Senator from Utah for his indulgence. I have merely tried to add a little "steam," as described by the Senator from Kentucky, to what the Senator from Utah has said, because I think he is right.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has done so with great success.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the beginning I stated that I knew it was futile to stand in the way of this avalanche. Whenever appropriations are required, no matter how stupendous, even two or three billion dollars, all opposition apparently vanishes; and when appropriations are needed for additional judges, and additional judges are asked for, it is certain that Congress will yield, or at least the Senate will yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should like to have a vote before 4 o'clock, but the Senator from Utah by no means should characterize his own efforts as futile. I believe that I will disclose—I am about to say betray—a secret. I have said three times now that twice the number of judges that are carried in this bill were asked. I said to more than half a dozen Senators, "Senator KING has been a close student of these things. You cannot get by in a doubtful case." So, far from the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] being futile, he is tremendously successful; and I believe that at least three if not four judges that I intended to include in this bill I have left out, because he is no futility: I will say that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator has been so gracious that I am compelled to express my sincere thanks.

I am not jesting when I say that those who advocate appropriations for increases in Federal activities, even if they impinge upon the rights of individuals and of States, generally achieve success, and they march triumphantly over the mutilated bodies of those who have the temerity, perhaps the folly, to interpose objections. So long as I am in the Senate I shall continue to oppose what I believe to be improper and extravagant appropriations, and measures which I conceive to be intrusions upon the rights of the States and interference with the rights of individuals. I want our judicial system to remain as it was contemplated by the Fathers, as the crowning achievement of this Republic. They gave to us a judicial system, they gave to us a tripartite form of government, and in my opinion the judiciary was the most important Department in that Constitutional system. I have sometimes felt that we were abandoning the high and indeed reverent conception of the importance of the judiciary entertained by the Fathers of the Republic. When an attempt was made to pack the Supreme Court, that was a backward step. I resisted it to the extent of my limited ability; and I do not favor the efforts which were subsequently made to increase beyond what I conceived to be necessary the personnel of the Federal judiciary.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the pending bill because, having read the record and having read the testimony, so far as it is available, as well as the recommendations of judicial conferences, I reached the conclusion that perhaps the recommendation as to two of the judges provided for in the bill did have merit, but as to the residue, I am convinced that they are not needed. In my opinion, the bill should be recommitted or defeated.

Mr. President, before concluding, Florida, having been referred to in the discussion, I desire to submit a brief statement concerning the proposal to add an additional judge.

The bill provides for a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida, but from the status of the cases pending and disposed of in the last 2 years in the northern and southern districts of Florida, it would appear that no new judge is needed.

In the annual report of the Attorney General for 1938, exhibit 10, pages 289 to 305, it is indicated that with respect to actions at law in the northern district of Florida, all ready cases had been tried at the term following joinder of issue, as of July 1, 1937. As of July 1, 1938, the situation is much the same. It is stated with respect to the Pensacola division, in the northern district, that the docket is current, and it takes 6 months or less to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue; the same is true of the Gainesville division in the northern district; and with respect to the Marianna, Tallahassee, and Panama City divisions in the northern district it is stated that the dockets are current, and it takes 12 months or less to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue.

The same is true of the southern district of Florida. As of July 1, 1937, all ready cases were tried at term following joinder of issue in the four divisions of the southern district. As of July 1, 1938, it is stated that the dockets for all of the four divisions of the southern district are current, and it takes 60 days to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue.

These figures, taken from the 1938 Annual Report of the Attorney General, indicate pretty conclusively that no new judge is needed for the northern and southern districts of Florida. For no division in either of the districts does it take more than 12 months to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue, and it is stated that usually the time is less. Until a definite showing can be made to indicate that the docket is overcrowded—and the figures quoted from the Attorney General's report indicate a contrary conclusion—no new judge should be provided for the Florida districts. I may say that I examined the hearings held on this bill, and I saw no figures or direct proof that the dockets were in any way overcrowded in the districts referred to above.

I have given the figures with respect to actions at law in the divisions of these two districts. The figures with respect to suits in equity indicate that the equity dockets are current also. Thus, as of July 1, 1937, cases were heard promptly after joinder of issue in each of the divisions of each of the two districts, northern and southern. As of July 1, 1938, with respect to the Gainesville and Pensacola divisions in the northern district, it is stated that the docket is current, and it takes 6 months or less to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue. With respect to the Marianna, Tallahassee, and Panama City divisions in the northern district, the dockets are stated to be current, and it takes 12 months or less to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue. It is stated that the dockets are current in the southern district, and in the four divisions it takes the following times to reach the trial of cases after joinder of issue: Jacksonville division, 30 to 60 days; Miami division, 15 to 30 days; Tampa division, 30 to 60 days; Orlando division, 30 to 45 days.

As I have stated, these figures cannot be relied on to support the thesis that the dockets are overcrowded; on the contrary, they indicate that the dockets are current, and that no additional judge is needed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sorry I was not present during the whole of the Senator's remarks——

Mr. KING. If the Senator is about to refer to New York, I have conceded the judgeship there.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator has conceded that?

Mr. KING. I have conceded that under the evidence which I have been able to examine New York is entitled to the one judge.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

(The report submitted by Mr. MCCARRAN to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD during the course of Mr. KING's speech is as follows:)

MAY 31, 1939.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman, Senate Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to assignment issued by you, and in conformity with Senate Resolution 75, I visited Los Angeles, Calif., and there conferred with the Federal district judges of the southern district of that State as to the necessity for an additional and eighth judge for that district. I beg leave to attach hereto and make a part of this, my report to you, a stenographic transcript of the proceedings had at that conference.

In addition to conferring with the judges of the southern district of California, I had the privilege of a conference with the president and members of the executive board of the bar association of Los Angeles County, and I respectfully attach hereto and make a part of this, my report, a stenographic transcript of the proceedings at that conference.

In addition to the foregoing, I beg leave to attach hereto and make a part hereof an excerpt from the report of the judicial conference made at its September session, 1938. Also, certain excerpts from the Annual Report of the Attorney General of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938.

From all of these proceedings, and from my investigation generally, I beg leave to state that I favor the addition of an eighth Federal district judge to the southern district of California because:

I. This district is faced with an impossible calendar.

1. From May 1, 1938, to May 1, 1939, there were 4,174 cases filed in the District Court for the Southern District of California, of which 1,503 were civil and criminal, and 2,671 were bankruptcy and reorganization.

(a) It is estimated that the total available trial time for each judge is 220 days a year. Allowing at least 2 days for the ordinary civil trials, it is a fair estimate that 7 judges would try 770 cases per year.

(b) Seven hundred and seventy cases a year would make no inroad in the 1,503 civil and criminal cases filed in the last year, with no provision for those cases involving bankruptcy and reorganization.

2. Filings by the United States district attorney alone have increased by 26 percent in the last year.

3. The condition of the court is such that it has been compelled to appoint special masters in a great many matters, involving tremendous expense to the litigants.

(a) The expense of another Federal judge is not saved because far more than that amount is transferred to the litigants by reason of these special masters and special referees.

II. This district is expanding rapidly as to population.

1. The circuit embracing this district comprises seven States. According to the 1930 census, the total population of all of the States other than California was 3,944,832. By way of contrast, the population of the southern district of California was 3,355,884. Recent estimates place this latter figure at 4,229,200, representing an increase of 873,316. The population here is increasing at a rapid rate, and from all indications this increase is constant.

III. The litigation handled by this district is extremely complex and diversified.

1. The motion-picture industry is responsible for a great deal of patent litigation and copyright litigation, involving the taking of an unusual amount of testimony.

2. The speculative oil and land industry peculiar to this district is responsible for an unusual amount of mail-fraud litigation, the trial time running well into weeks and months.

IV. The pressure of overburdened calendars within the central part of this district necessitates administering San Diego and Fresno by an interchange of judges, each one sitting in rotation at both San Diego and Fresno.

1. It frequently occurs that six different judges must preside over the same case at different times by reason of delayed litigation, and because the lack of time prevents the completion of calendars in these sections.

2. Deliberate violations of the Federal law have occurred at Fresno because a judge cannot be spared to sit at Fresno as long as it would take to try cases.

V. A judge should have sufficient time to devote adequate thought and study to complex cases, and to submit an opinion in writing on controversial issues of new law.

1. A competent study of each case and the submission of a complete memorandum opinion would expedite the consideration of appeals and reduce the work of that court materially.

(a) A competent study of each case would decrease litigation, because there would be fewer appeals.

(b) Research studies have indicated that if a case can be pressed to an early hearing, much litigation can be discouraged.

2. The substantive law is virtually what the highest court of California says it is, and judges are not afforded an opportunity to keep abreast of it.

(a) Senior Judge James devotes one-third of his time to administrative duties, and yet he is obliged to take his full quota of cases.

VI. We are undergoing a period where we are making law very rapidly. New problems are presented to the courts daily. These new problems must be solved now so that we may go ahead with a knowledge of what the real solution is.

The litigant must at least feel that he has had his day in court. His day in court must come early enough so that the lawsuit will not be just an idle effort. By this I mean that his lawsuit must not be delayed so long that his witnesses will be gone, thus inhibiting justice. On the other hand, his litigation must not be so hurried by reason of other cases waiting to be heard that he will not have had what he considers his day in court.

The welfare of the litigant is of the utmost importance. It is for his benefit that we maintain this court system. His confidence in the courts must be sustained.

Justice delayed is justice denied.

Respectfully submitted.

PAT MCCARRAN.

REPORT OF THE JUDICIAL CONFERENCE, SEPTEMBER SESSION, 1938

The Judicial Conference provided for in the act of Congress of September 14, 1922 (U. S. Code, title 28, sec. 218), convened on September 29, 1938, and continued in session for 3 days. The following judges were present in response to the call of the Chief Justice:

First circuit, Senior Circuit Judge George H. Bingham.
Second circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Martin T. Manton.
Third circuit, Senior Circuit Judge J. Warren Davis.

Fourth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge John J. Parker.
Sixth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Xenophon Hicks.
Seventh circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Evan A. Evans.
Eighth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Kimbrough Stone.
Ninth circuit, Senior Circuit Judge Curtis D. Wilbur.
District of Columbia, Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner.

The senior circuit judges for the fifth and tenth circuits, Judges Rufus E. Foster and Robert E. Lewis were unable to attend, and their places were taken respectively by Circuit Judges Samuel H. Sibley and Orie L. Phillips.

The Attorney General and the Solicitor General, with their aides, were present at the opening of the conference.

The conference gave close consideration to the extent of the need for still more district judges, having regard to the volume and character of the work in the districts and the need for the prompt disposition of cases. The conference renews its recommendations for additional judges for the northern district of Georgia and for the district of Kansas. Despite the relief already afforded in the southern district of California and the southern district of New York, further judicial assistance is necessary in view of the heavy dockets in those districts. In the southern district of New York there has been reliance upon the assistance furnished through the assignment of judges from other circuits, but inquiry shows that it is impracticable to obtain this relief to the extent needed. Other increases are found to be advisable in the district of New Jersey, the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the eastern district of Missouri, and the western district of Oklahoma.

Including the recommendations made last year and now renewed, the conference therefore recommends that additional district judges be provided as follows:

Two additional district judges for the southern district of New York.
One additional district judge for the district of New Jersey.
One additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.
One additional district judge for the northern district of Georgia.
One additional district judge for the eastern district of Missouri.
One additional district judge for the southern district of California.
One additional district judge for the western district of Oklahoma.
One additional district judge for the district of Kansas.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1938

Further increases of judicial personnel are indispensable if the judicial machinery is to function smoothly and expeditiously. This need is recognized in the report of the Judicial Conference, submitted herewith. The Conference recommends the following permanent increases in judicial positions:

One circuit judge for the sixth circuit.
One circuit judge for the seventh circuit.
Two circuit judges for the eighth circuit.
Two district judges for the southern district of New York.
One district judge for the district of New Jersey.
One district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.
One district judge for the northern district of Georgia.
One district judge for the eastern district of Missouri.
One district judge for the southern district of California.
One district judge for the western district of Oklahoma.
One district judge for the district of Kansas.

The foregoing recommendations are amply justified, and I take pleasure in concurring in them. The need is urgent.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, supplementing the remarks of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I wish to make a few observations which I think are pertinent to the pending question.

Normally, of course, if we were not to be able to accept the report of the conference of senior circuit judges with reference to the needs within their respective circuits, one would wonder upon whose word and whose report we could rely. But, after all, the conference met last September. It was held after the time when the Senate bill 188 had been considered at the last session of the Congress and had failed of passage.

Now that bill has been passed; in the form in which it has passed, the director, who is to be the administrative officer of the United States courts, among other things is charged with the duty of "examining the state of the dockets of the various courts and securing information as to their needs for assistance." He must thereafter report "to the senior circuit judges of the respective circuits, to the end that proper action may be taken with respect thereto."

The director also "shall annually submit to the conference of senior circuit judges a report of the activities of the administrative office and of the state of business of the courts."

One of the very core phases of the bill, one upon which it turns, is this:

> To the end that the work of the district courts shall be effectively and expeditiously transacted, it shall be the duty of the senior circuit judge of each circuit to call at such time and place as he shall designate, but at least twice in each year, a council composed of the circuit judges for such circuit, who are hereby designated a council for that purpose, at which council the senior circuit judge shall preside. The senior judge shall submit to the council the quarterly reports of the director required to be filed by the provisions of section 304, clause (2), and such action shall be taken thereon by the council as may appear to be necessary. It shall be the duty of the district judges promptly to carry out the directions of the council as to the administration of the business of their respective courts.

There is pending before the Senate another measure which may well be considered, namely, a bill which would create a court of appeals for patent cases. As a member of the Committee on Patents, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who is now presiding, will remember the statistics as to the vast amount of business now reposing in circuit courts of appeals which would be transferred from those courts to the proposed court of patent appeals. That bill has received a favorable report and is now on the calendar. Should it be enacted, reducing, as it would, the amount of work in each of the circuit courts of appeals, it might well be said to supplement whatever is being done under Senate bill 188, and hence reduce the strictures upon the expedition of business in our courts.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Arizona, although I hold him in the highest respect on account of his long and able service, so cooperative as he is in the Committee on the Judiciary, will extend that cooperation and entertain a motion, let us say, that the bill be continued on the calendar and not be acted upon at this time, so that we may put into effect the changes which are contemplated in the bill which has already passed this body, and which is now in conference, thus enabling us thereafter to ascertain whether or not the need actually exists, for if we find that it does not, surely we do not wish to add to the Federal Budget.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I presume curiosity is just as great in a Senator as in anyone else, and when a recruit comes to the Senate we sometimes wonder what is the source of his strength, as his weight is estimated, in a kindly spirit. I am glad to say that I never had any curiosity as to the source of strength, mental and political, of my able friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. He is one of the most, if not the most, persuasive and able debaters I have ever seen. Within the short space of a few months he has demonstrated his ability and his geniality, and he is so genial, so ingenious in his plea that this bill be laid aside, that I almost feel like doing it, but duty says, "Press forward with this bill." [Laughter.]

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in answer to the distinguished Senator from Arizona, I should perhaps call to the attention of the Senate that in the RECORD of last Friday appeared the story about "Old Bill" Ashurst's son, who came up to the cow camp in his $14 boots and wearing chaps that had seen rough service through the brush and the mesquite and joined the cowboys in their undertaking to brand the yearlings. I do not suppose that the reference of "recruit" made to the Senator from Connecticut in the past few minutes is any attempt on the part of the Senator from Arizona to "brand the yearling." Quite the contrary, but perhaps the Senator will understand how there comes to mind a situation suggested by his remarks.

Up in the Wayside Inn, at Sudbury, Mass., there is a room named for the great Norwegian violinist, who in the 1840's joined that company which became so famous in Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn. That violinist was named "Ole Bull"—"O-l-e," and hence the "Ole Bull" room.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his kindly and gracious references, but I am reminded, of course, of that character in The Tales of a Wayside Inn.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is there another room in that inn which could be named after the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. DANAHER. There is a room there that could be named after the Senator from Arizona. But let us take up no more time with ramblings into Sudbury and points east, west, and north. Let us come back to the subject at hand.

Mr. President, if we pass this bill each Federal judge created will draw for life a salary of $10,000 per year. He will have his secretary. There will be the usual retinue. We will encumber with an extra item of expense Federal appropriations, which already reach a stupendous sum. In the district taking in New Jersey, for instance, there has been a vacancy for 18 months, and yet we are not only going to see that vacancy filled but to be asked to create a new judgeship in the very same district. I wonder, Mr. President, how they ever have managed to survive for the past 2 years or 18 months without even one of those two judges. It seems to me we can properly test the application of Senate bill 188 to the problem, and I hope that the Senate will be persuaded to that view.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I have concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ASHURST. Am I correct in understanding that all amendments reported by the committee have been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct in his understanding of the parliamentary situation.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, Mr. President, if there be no further amendments, I ask for the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I asked the Senator to yield in order that I may make a motion to recommit the bill to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly, the Senator's request is in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I make that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Legislative Clerk call the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Logan	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lucas	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

WAGES UNDER WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MALONEY. I dislike to intrude upon the discussion of this bill, but I wish to discuss a subject which I think is of much more importance to this country than is the proposal now under consideration. I should like first to read to the Senate a letter from Colonel Harrington, addressed to me, written in answer to a letter which I wrote to Colonel Harrington, and which was published in the RECORD several days ago. Colonel Harrington's letter is as follows:

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY,
WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1939.

The Honorable FRANCIS T. MALONEY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MALONEY: This will acknowledge the receipt of your letter of July 14, 1939, expressing concern because of the possibility of reducing the earnings of Work Projects Administration workers in the northern States in connection with the new schedule of monthly earnings which I am required, by section 15 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939, to fix prior to August 31, 1939.

I am sure that you recognize that I am confronted with a very difficult problem in the revision of the security-wage scales. The requirement that the current national average labor cost shall be substantially maintained, but at the same time that the schedule of monthly earnings for workers of the same type in different geographical areas shall not vary to any greater extent than may be justified by the difference in the cost of living, makes it almost impossible to avoid a reduction of present wages in certain localities.

I assure you that it is not my desire to reduce the present wages to any greater degree than is absolutely necessary. However, I can only make this general statement to you at this time, as our studies of this complicated problem have not reached the point where definite conclusions can be reached.

Sincerely yours,

F. C. HARRINGTON, Commissioner.

I am taking the time to advise the Senate now, Mr. President, because Colonel Harrington points out that he is making this study. I have heretofore called to the attention of Colonel Harrington, and to the attention of the Senate on more than one occasion, the importance of the particular part of the bill to which his letter refers. He mentions the difference in the cost of living. I pointed out to him that that allowed him, in my opinion, a sufficient leeway to maintain the very meager wages now being paid to certified relief workers in the North. I pointed out to Colonel Harrington as well that the important language of the law was not "substantially affect," and that that allowed him a further leeway.

Mr. President, I have no desire to keep underpaid workers of the South from receiving the wages necessary to supply their needs. I am in sympathy with the effort to lift up those underpaid men and women. I am in sympathy with the intention of this particular amendment in the Relief Act; but I do not believe that the Senator who offered the amendment, the committee which voted it favorably, or the Senate, or the Congress, intended that the certified relief workers of the North, the men who dig in the ditches, should have a cut in the meager subsistence wages they now receive.

I know that Colonel Harrington is very much in sympathy with my opinion. I do not know anyone who is anxious to see a wage cut put into effect on September 1; but I have been trying to arouse Members of Congress in order that, if they agree with me, they may point out to Colonel Harrington that the language of the law as written, and very definitely the intent of Congress, permit and perhaps require of him that he pay the security wages now paid in the North.

To show that Colonel Harrington is in sympathy with the point I am trying to make, I should like to read very briefly from the House hearings. I quote Colonel Harrington:

Colonel HARRINGTON. Regarding differentials in W. P. A. wage scales, I would like to point out that differentials in wages are recognized by employers, employees, and organized labor. As to whether the differentials now existing in the schedules of monthly earnings are justifiable or whether the differentials could be limited to a specified maximum is a question that should be based on varying of local conditions.

In considering this matter, I would like to emphasize the importance of fixing monthly earnings which bear a relatively close relationship to actual local conditions where the workers reside. It is my belief that the present monthly earnings do not exceed minimum subsistence standards and any general revision downward in the schedule of earnings as now established would make it impossible for workers to obtain for themselves and their families the necessities of life.

It is my judgment, based on recent studies, that the present schedule of monthly earnings may contain too many levels of earnings and it is my intention to take administrative action necessary to correct this condition.

My purpose in mentioning the matter at this point is because there was up for consideration in connection with the first supplemental appropriation this year an amendment introduced in Congress fixing the maximum differential at 25 percent in wages anywhere in the United States. That amendment apparently applied to hourly rates of pay, although there was some uncertainty as to what it did apply to. I testified at that time, I believe it was before the Senate committee, because the amendment was introduced in the House. The application of an amendment of that character would require the Administrator to adopt a choice between various alternatives.

If you have pay rates put up to 25 percent of the top rates, that will obviously decrease the amount of employment you can provide, because if the pay of the individual worker is increased, the number that can be employed is decreased. If you maintain your average, that will mean a reduction of the top rates and a raising of the bottom rates. Now, as a matter of practical knowledge I think we all know that the differential in wage scales in this country is considerably in excess of 25 percent. Without going into the question of the desirability of a uniform wage scale, which is a broad social question, I do not believe that W. P. A. should be made the guinea pig in this experiment. I think that if the wage differentials are to be wiped out in this country—and I am not talking about Government wages, but the whole wage structure—it should apply to everybody and W. P. A. should not be the first one to be operated on in that respect.

I wish briefly to point out the difference in living costs between the North and the South. I should like to have Senators know that this question does not concern New England alone. It concerns all the Northern States across the country, where it becomes extremely cold for long periods during the year, where there is a need for the purchase of fuel and warmer clothing, and where rents are higher because of the tremendous difference in building costs.

While Colonel Harrington is making a study of the law in an effort to determine how much it is necessary to reduce wages, if at all—and he now seems to think it is necessary—I should like to have him know that we realize that a can of beans or a can of corn may cost as much in the South as it does in the North. However, there are ever so many other things, due to the severity of the weather for a period of 6 or 7 months in the year, which account for differences in the cost of living. For these reasons I am hopeful that Senators will help Colonel Harrington to know what the sentiment of the Senate is, what the intention of the Senate was, and what sort of situation would be created in many States if on September 1 the security wages were reduced.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point, in connection with my remarks, an editorial in the Hartford Times entitled "W. P. A. Workers' Plight," commenting upon earlier remarks which I have made in connection with this matter.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Hartford Times of July 22, 1939]

W. P. A. WORKERS' PLIGHT

That the majority of men on W. P. A. are there because they need help and not because they are interested in agitation was proved by the dismal failure of the labor-union-sponsored W. P. A. strike against the Government. Such a "strike" never can win.

Although the unemployed made no strike demonstration worthy of notice, they have the sympathy of most persons in the arbitrary removal of so many of them from W. P. A. rolls because for 18 months they have been unable to find work in private employment. When the monthly wage, now averaging $63, is cut to a probable $52 in September, their present scanty means will be seriously reduced. This cut, to come as a result of an act of Congress which Administrator Harrington interprets as leaving him no discretion, will have the effect of increasing the welfare expenses of the communities.

Senator MALONEY's plea in the Senate for the W. P. A. workers and his letter to Administrator Harrington declaring that the new law does not compel the Administrator to slash the wages of northern and southern W. P. A. workers in order to raise the average paid to southern workers may result in some beneficial action. One hopes so, for the great majority of the persons on W. P. A. are not there because they want to be. A land oversupplied with food and gold will not, in the long run, suffer by maintaining at least a decent subsistence wage.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, the Hartford Times is one of the newspaper chain of Frank Gannett. It is a reasonably liberal but not an extremely liberal newspaper, and it points with emphasis to the serious situation which would be created were the wages of this particular group reduced on September 1.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article appearing in the New Haven Register of a few days ago entitled "W. P. A. Workers Face Cut in Wages After August 31." I want to have this article printed in order to have Senators better know what is happening.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New Haven (Conn.) Register]

W. P. A. WORKERS FACE CUT IN WAGES AFTER AUGUST 31—SULLIVAN TELLS RELIEF OFFICIALS OF STATE AT MEETING HERE THAT SLASH IS NECESSARY UNDER NEW FEDERAL ACT—800 MORE EMPLOYEES WILL BE DROPPED TOMORROW IN THIS AREA

Already sharply cut in numbers under the provisions of the new Federal Emergency Relief Act, Connecticut W. P. A. workers are facing a reduction in wages after August 31. That was made known by State W. P. A. Administrator Vincent J. Sullivan at a meeting today in the Hall of Records of municipal officials in charge of local relief programs throughout the State.

Sullivan said that section 15 of the act requires an adjustment in the monthly earning schedule of security wages and in this adjustment the present national average must be maintained. That average is approximately $53 a month.

"I am not prepared to state at this time the details of how this will affect Connecticut," said Sullivan, "but obviously it can mean only one thing—lowering of wages because the average at the present time is in excess of $53 a month."

As a result of invitations sent out to municipal and welfare officials in 85 towns in the State by Sullivan, about 100 came here for the conference with the State administrator.

PROVISIONS EXPLAINED

He explained provisions of the new act and clarified sections which mean dismissal of W. P. A. workers throughout the State so as to bring about a reduction of 5,000 in the rolls by October 1. Reduction of the State's W. P. A. quota, Sullivan said, is necessary under the 1939 Relief Act. The State's quota has been set at 17,800 employees. At present there are 23,170 persons on W. P. A. in Connecticut.

Tomorrow 800 workers in the New Haven area will be dropped from the rolls in the second slash made under the mandatory order of Congress. In the first cut a week ago 335 were dismissed. The number of Connecticut relief workers laid off by reason of the section requiring removal of all those, excepting veterans, who have been employed for more than 18 months, was expected to reach more than 8,000, Administrator Sullivan said.

The law requires that a worker so laid off shall be eligible for reemployment only after the expiration of 30 days and a recertification of his eligibility for a relief job. "This is not a 30-day furlough," Sullivan asserted, "as it has been termed in some circles."

MUST INCREASE CONTRIBUTIONS

The State administrator said that local contributions to W. P. A. projects must be increased under the new law by about 7 percent. In the past local contributions have averaged about 18 percent. The new law requires a minimum contribution of 25 percent of the total cost of the project.

None of the projects now in operation in New Haven is to be abandoned, the State administrator said.

"It is contemplated that the work on these projects now in operation will be continued until they are completed. This will be done with a reduced number of people working than are now employed under the present schedule," said Sullivan.

No orders have been issued for the suspension of any W. P. A. project in this city, he added.

JOB-SEEKING RUSH LIKELY

As a result of the dismissal of W. P. A. workers the Connecticut State Employment Service is anticipating a rush of former relief workers who will be seeking employment. It is the hope of the officials of the service that the W. P. A. people forced out of jobs will be absorbed by private industry. Frank Craddock, of the employment bureau, today expressed hope that private industry will cooperate and in the present situation offer jobs to those being dropped from W. P. A.

In discussing the present W. P. A. lay-off, Craddock said, "The Connecticut State Employment Service has these men already registered. They are available for work in private industry, and they can be sent to employers on the basis of their qualifications. Since the employment offices serve all persons looking for work in private industry, regardless of their economic status, these people laid off by W. P. A. will receive the same consideration as other applicants registered with us. We are ready and willing as usual to cooperate with employers who desire to interview these people for openings in private industry."

Since these people are already registered in the offices of the employment service, Craddock pointed out that it would be inadvisable for all of them to visit the office the first day after they are laid off, and arrangements will be made to have reinterviews over a period of 2 weeks.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a letter and an article which I have received from Paul V. Betters, executive director of the United States Conference of Mayors. While I know that other Senators have received the same material,

I think it appropriate that it go into the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS,
Washington, D. C., July 22, 1939.

DEAR SIR: I have been directed by the executive committee of the United States Conference of Mayors to forward to you the attached report dealing with the present and future W. P. A. situation. I am,

Faithfully yours,

PAUL V. BETTERS,
Executive Director.

[Report]

WORK RELIEF AND THE IMMEDIATE FUTURE

(A memorandum prepared by the United States Conference of Mayors)

INTRODUCTION

The problems which have recently arisen—and much more serious problems which will soon arise—in connection with the Federal work-relief program under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939 prompt the United States Conference of Mayors to present the viewpoints of the major cities. It is not the intent to present an unduly alarming picture of what lies immediately ahead. But it is already unmistakably clear that the whole work program is jeopardized as a result of certain provisions of the 1939 law. This situation is of such serious import to the needy unemployed, to the success of W. P. A. operations, and to the cities as responsible co-administrators of the work projects as to warrant a frank and realistic discussion.

STATUS AND INTEREST OF THE CITIES

At the outset several points should be emphasized. While the W. P. A. is a Federal agency, the cities are deeply concerned in the execution and administration of the work program. As sponsors of projects the cities are called upon for large contributions in cash and in kind. In most instances this financial burden on local real-estate taxpayers is in addition to direct relief costs as well as the local share of the social-security expenditures.

Second, as cooperating agents in supervising work projects, the cities are vitally concerned with efficient execution of the work.

Finally, insofar as W. P. A. provides work relief to destitute employable persons, the number of such persons given employment is an important factor in local financing. For if hundreds of thousands of eligible needy persons are not assigned to the W. P. A. they must be provided with local direct relief.

The scheme of Federal work program along the lines of the present program had its inception on January 4, 1935, when the President made the following recommendation to the Congress:

"But the stark fact before us is that great numbers still remain unemployed.

"A large proportion of these unemployed and their dependents have been forced on the relief rolls. The burden on the Federal Government has grown with great rapidity. We have here a human as well as an economic problem. When humane considerations are concerned, Americans give them precedence. The lessons of history, confirmed by the evidence immediately before me show conclusively that continued dependence upon relief induces a spiritual and moral disintegration fundamentally destructive to the national fiber. To dole out relief in this way is to administer a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit. It is inimical to the dictates of sound policy. It is in violation of the traditions of America. Work must be found for able-bodied but destitute workers.

"The Federal Government must and shall quit this business of relief.

"I am not willing that the vitality of our people be further sapped by the giving of cash, of market baskets, of a few hours of weekly work cutting grass, raking leaves, or picking up papers in the public parks. We must preserve not only the bodies of the unemployed from destitution but also their self-respect, their self-reliance, and courage and determination. This decision brings me to the problem of what the Government should do with approximately 5,000,000 unemployed now on the relief rolls.

"About one million and a half of these belong to the group which in the past was dependent upon local welfare efforts. Most of them are unable for one reason or another to maintain themselves independently—for the most part, through no fault of their own. Such people, in the days before the great depression, were cared for by local efforts—by States, by counties, by towns, by cities, by churches, and by private welfare agencies. It is my thought that in the future they must be cared for as they were before. I stand ready through my own personal efforts, and through the public influence of the office that I hold, to help these local agencies to get the means necessary to assume this burden.

"The security legislation which I shall propose to the Congress will, I am confident, be of assistance to local effort in the care of this type of cases. Local responsibility can and will be resumed, for after all, common sense tells us that the wealth necessary for this task existed and still exists in the local community, and the dictates of sound administration require that this responsibility be in the first instance a local one.

"There are, however, an additional three and one-half million employable people who are on relief. With them the problem is different and the responsibility is different. This group was the victim of a Nation-wide depression caused by conditions which were not local but national. The Federal Government is the only governmental agency with sufficient power and credit to meet this situation. We have assumed this task, and we shall not shrink from it in the future. It is a duty dictated by every intelligent consideration of national policy to ask you to make it possible for the United States to give employment to all of these three and a half million employable people on on relief, pending their absorption in a rising tide of private employment."

Passage of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 marked this new approach to the relief problem as suggested by the President.

But since 1935 complete Federal responsibility for the so-called employable group has never been assumed by the Federal Government. At no time have all needy employable persons been provided with W. P. A. work. It is now estimated that over 1,000,000 persons are eligible for but unassigned to W. P. A. work. The W. P. A. Administrator himself has officially stated that at least 750,000 eligible people had not been given work.

And it should further be emphasized that since 1935 an ever-increasing share of the cost of Federal work relief has been contributed by the cities. The costs of direct relief, however, have remained completely with the States, counties, and cities without financial aid from the National Government. In other words, the original formula providing for Federal responsibility for the employables has never actually been carried out by the Government while the financial responsibilities of the cities have been increased year by year.

Until such time as a more equitable and balanced Federal-State-city tax program can be effected, the cities can stand no additional financial burdens. They do not have available the same sources of revenue as the Federal Government; they are restricted and hamstrung by constitutional and charter restrictions; and they are confined to real-estate taxes which in most communities are so high as to have reached the point of diminishing returns. It has been suggested that charter and constitutional limitations, if they exist, can be changed. It should be emphasized in the strongest possible terms that, as the Members of Congress know, such changes would at the best take time and cannot legally be accomplished in time to avert the destructive effects of this law.

This is not an attempt merely to dodge a responsibility, or to shift a burden to the Federal Government. It is a question of taking care of the unemployed in the only way they can be cared for, taking care of them in a decently adequate minimum way until such time as the national economic system gets back into gear and they can be reabsorbed in private jobs. The Nation has no alternative but to do this if the present economic system is to endure.

What we are now seeking to impress upon Congress, with all the emphasis and seriousness in our power, is that if the law stands as recently enacted by the Congress, problems lie just ahead which must be faced jointly by W. P. A., the cities, and the unemployed which will be so serious that their full import is not yet generally realized, even by Congress.

These problems, if the law is not changed, will bring about an almost complete collapse of the work-relief program in industrial cities.

The full effects of this law can be properly analyzed only when its various phases are considered together. No single provision, except that requiring posting of 25 percent of the cost of all projects, in itself could be sufficient to wreck the program. But taken together, their cumulative effect would be its destruction.

I. Mandatory 25-percent contribution: If this provision stands, the appropriation by Congress of money for the unemployed will be, so far as many cities are concerned, but an idle gesture. The funds are not available and will not be available to meet this requirement.

II. Reduction of W. P. A. rolls: Because of the lower appropriation, we are now confronted with a reduction in W. P. A. employment during the period July 1–August 31 of approximately 650,000 persons. This coincides with the necessity of "furloughing" by August 31 all persons who have been on the rolls continuously for 18 months. But in actual practice this will mean laying them off, regardless of need. For under its appropriation of $1,477,000,000, W. P. A. will be forced to reduce its rolls to 1,800,000 in September, and the scheduled national quota for next June is down to 1,500,000.

We must point out that this wholesale discharge of needy persons can only result in widespread suffering. To say arbitrarily that after a certain date hundreds of thousands of people cannot eat is not what we consider the proper policy for Congress to declare.

III. Fixing new monthly earnings: The new law requires on September 1 that security wages in different localities shall not be varied in greater degree than is justified by differences in the cost of living. The same section of the law also requires that the current national average security wage, which is around $53, shall be maintained.

This can mean but one thing—substantial reductions in many cities and areas. If the security wages are too low in some areas, the proper approach should be to increase them. But here we are faced, not with meritorious increases for certain areas but drastic reductions as well where there is not justification for it. Who is to supplement the needs of many workers who must now accept wage slashes on September 1? Those familiar with the facts know that even the present security wage offers only the barest subsistence.

In addition to these provisions, the cumulative effect of other sections of the law in themselves would jointly be enough to seriously cripple the program. The reduction of the $7 per man-month for material, particularly in view of the fact that the increase in hours to 130 will mean use of more materials; the restrictions placed around sponsors' credits; the limit of $52,000 as the maximum building project; the fact that many communities cannot legally make contributions for white-collar projects, which means they would be killed by the impact of the 25-percent clause; the provision that sponsors must assume the burden of providing skilled workers whenever they cannot be found on relief rolls—all pyramid to make the law virtually an administrative impossibility.

SUMMARY

The questions here presented can only be answered by legislation. They are not susceptible of remedial administrative action.

To avoid wholesale dismissals, a supplementary appropriation is needed, or the section in the law requiring the appropriation to last the full 12 months of the current fiscal year must be amended.

We do not want to witness a collapse of the work program. It is our duty to state that there will be such a collapse unless the issues here discussed are remedied by Congress, a fact fully realized by those administering W. P. A., and we must inquire, What good is it to appropriate funds for work relief if the conditions around the appropriation are such as to actually prevent providing work?

As stated by the President on June 30, when he signed the bill, this "will work definite hardship and inequality on more than 2,000,000 American citizens—about 8,000,000 if we count in their families—people who through no fault of their own are in dire need."

We do think that Congress, when it fully understands what it means, will want the law to stand as written. We only hope that it realizes the situation in time to prevent suffering.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask further unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article by Ernest K. Lindley, referring to the new so-called works-financing bill, expressing his opinion as to the effectiveness of this particular effort to return men to employment and to keep men employed. I think this is an important opinion, because Mr. Lindley is not only an unusual writer and a very able observer, but is generally understood to enjoy a very wide friendship in official circles and to have the confidence of the administration officials, as well as all who know him, who are especially concerned with this bill.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PREMATURE CRITICISM

(By Ernest K. Lindley)

WORKS FINANCE BILL

The "Budget balancers" and the chronic opponents of the President has given the works-finance bill—the new lending bill—a pretty thorough going over. The main result so far has been a mild frenzy of oratory and columnar calls to arms, but little that can be classed as serious criticism.

The fact is that most of the critics jumped too soon. When the plan was put forward they denounced it as another great spending program, another raid on the Treasury, another menace to sound "Budget-balancing" finance. Actually it is a conservative program which Henry Morgenthau, Jr., seized upon and prevailed upon the President to use to head off another big appropriation for P. W. A.

It is true that some of the Government officials and economists of the "spending-investment" school worked up the program. But their purpose was to find genuine self-liquidating projects which could—and should—be separated from the regular operating expenses of the Government.

SOUND INVESTMENTS AND SELF-LIQUIDATING

They sifted and sorted all kinds of proposals until they had left what they considered a group of sound, self-liquidating investments for public funds. They omitted a great range of other sound investments for public funds because they were not self-liquidating in the usual businessman's sense of the word.

The greater part of the new program is only an expansion of existing lending activities. The largest sector, for the first year at least, will be the Farm Security Administration. The F. S. A. makes two kinds of loans. The first kind is under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, to enable tenant families to purchase land of their own. It has made about 7,000 of these loans. Up to March 31, 1939, the amounts due on them totaled $103,033, and the borrowers already had repaid $138,978. The loans are secured by first mortgages on real estate bearing 3 percent interest and repayable over 40-year periods.

The second type of F. S. A. loan is a rehabilitation loan—a small loan to a needy farmer to help him to buy tools, livestock, seed, etc. Since 1935 F. S. A. has made 750,000 of these loans. Most of them were for 5-year periods, but at the end of 4 years 87,000 families had paid off their loans in full. F. S. A. officials estimate that they will get back with interest at least 80 percent of all the money put out in rehabilitation loans.

F. S. A. PROGRAM IS WELL TESTED

There are bound to be some losses under the rehabilitation loans. They are made to people at the bottom of the farm heap, most of whom would be on relief and remain there indefinitely if not assisted in getting on their feet. The poor loans can be charged up against the regular F. S. A. appropriations and the good ones kept in the self-liquidating portfolio financed under the new program.

The F. S. A. program has been well tested. F. S. A. had a great backlog of applications which it could not handle because it lacked funds. Last year it had to turn down 400,000 families who wanted rehabilitation loans, and three out of four applicants for the larger loans under the Farm Tenant Act. It seems altogether sensible to let F. S. A. go ahead as rapidly as it can. The result will be more self-supporting people, a smaller relief load, and an increase in the national wealth. (A recent survey of 230,000 F. S. A. borrowers showed that they had increased their net worth 37 percent since receiving rehabilitation loans.)

The Rural Electrification Administration is another tested agency which has been making self-liquidating loans for almost 4 years. Last year it allotted $135,000,000 for such loans. Its regular appropriation for the current year is only $40,000,000. Applications on hand or in sight run up to $100,000,000. There is no doubt that R. E. A. can make good use of additional funds. Even today only one farm out of five in the United States has electricity.

There is nothing new or startling about loans for self-liquidating local public works. The only question is whether there will be many borrowers.

PROGRAM AS A WHOLE CALLED CONSERVATIVE

The plan for buying new railroad equipment and renting it to the railroads has been discussed in this column previously. It is ingenious, but unless the railroads want to make use of it nothing will come of it. The R. F. C., of course, can make direct loans for new equipment if the roads prefer that way.

Whether toll highways can be made self-liquidating is an open question—and whether, as a matter of public policy, they should be built is also debatable. Likewise, lending via the Export-Import Bank gets into problems of policy which go far beyond the stimulation of economic recovery.

But on the financial side the program as a whole is conservative. And the total volume of investment made under it during the coming year or so probably would fall far short of the President's original estimates. What a good many people in the administration really would like to see is the works finance bill, plus another $350,000,000 or $500,000,000 for P. W. A.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment which I propose to offer to the pending bill, Senate bill 2864, be printed and lie on the table, and also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. MALONEY to the bill (S. 2864) to provide for the financing of a program of recoverable expenditures, and for other purposes, viz: At the end of the bill insert a new title as follows:

TITLE II—PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 201. (a) In order to increase employment by providing for useful non-Federal public works projects of the kind and character which the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works has heretofore financed or aided in financing, pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937, or the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, there is hereby appropriated to the Public Works Administration (herein called the "administration") in the Federal Works Agency, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000,000, together with the balance of the appropriation made under section 201 of such act of 1938, not reserved for administrative expenses of the administration and not now or hereafter expended pursuant to allotments heretofore made, which amounts shall be available until June 30, 1941, and may be expended by the Commissioner of Public Works (hereinafter referred to as the "Commissioner") for (1) the making of loans or grants, or both, to States, Territories, possessions, political subdivisions, or other public bodies (herein called "public agencies"); or (2) the construction and leasing of projects, with or without the privilege of purchase, to any such public agencies.

(b) No amount available under this title shall be allotted for any project which, in the determination of the Commissioner, cannot be commenced prior to March 1, 1940, or the completion of which cannot be substantially accomplished prior to July 1, 1941: Provided, That this limitation upon time shall not apply to any project involved in litigation in any Federal or State court.

(c) Under the funds available in this title, no grant shall be made in excess of 30 percent of the cost of any project, and no project shall be constructed for lease to any public agency unless the Commissioner shall determine that the nonrecoverable portion of the cost of such project shall not exceed 30 percent of the cost thereof.

(d) No moneys for a non-Federal project shall be paid from the funds made available by this title to any public agency unless and until adequate provision has been made, or in the opinion of the Commissioner is assured, for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds.

(e) Not more than $6,825,000 of the amount available under this title may be used for administrative expenses of the Administration during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, in connection with this title; such amount shall be available for administrative expenses thereof during such fiscal year for the purposes set forth for such Administration in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1940. The Commissioner shall reserve from the amount available under this title an adequate sum for administrative expenses of the Administration in connection with this title for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, subject to authorization hereafter by annual appropriation acts for the utilization thereof.

(f) No funds made available under this act shall be allotted for any project undertaken pursuant to this act which will compete with any privately owned or operated public utility whose rates are subject to public regulation on the date of enactment of this act (1) until such public utility has been notified by the Commissioner that a competing project of such character is proposed to be financed with such funds, and (2) until such public utility (A) has rejected, or has failed to accept within 30 days after it is made, a bona fide offer by a public agency, or by or on behalf of the United States, to purchase the property of such public utility at a price fixed by a board of arbitration appointed as hereinafter provided, or (B) has failed to appoint within the time specified a member of the board to be created for the purpose of fixing such price: Provided, That the board of arbitration in each such case shall consist of three members, of whom one shall be appointed by the public utility, one by the public agency which is to construct such competing project or to which such project is to be leased, and one by the two members so appointed, and all such appointments shall be made within 30 days after the notification by the Commissioner to the public utility as provided in clause (1) of this subsection: Provided further, That if the members of any such board appointed by the public utility and the public agency are unable to agree upon the third member of the board within such 30-day period, then the Governor of the State in which the competing project is proposed to be located shall, within 10 days after the expiration of such period, appoint a third member of such board: Provided further, That the price fixed by the board for the property of the public utility in any such case shall be a price which in its opinion is the fair and reasonable value of such property to the public agency, and such price shall be agreed upon by at least two members of the board, and shall be fixed within 60 days after the third member of the board is appointed: Provided further, That in any case in which the Governor of any such State fails to appoint a third member of a board of arbitration within the time specified for such appointment by him, and in any case in which any such board fails to fix the price for the property of the public utility within the time specified therefor, funds appropriated under this title may be allotted for the competing project.

(g) The rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects under the appropriations in this act shall be not less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Commissioner: Provided, That if minimum rates of pay for persons employed by private employers in any occupation are established by or pursuant to the authority conferred by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, not less than the minimum rates of pay so established shall be paid to persons in similar occupations in the same locality employed on projects under the appropriation in this title.

(h) No funds made available under this act, whether administered by the Federal Government or by the States or local governmental agencies from funds contributed in whole or in part by the Federal Government, shall be used by any Federal, State, or other agency to purchase, establish, relocate, or expand mills, factories, or plants, which would manufacture or produce for sale articles, commodities, or products in competition with existing industries.

SEC. 202. Moneys realized from the sale of securities acquired by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works or the Public Works Administration, or the proceeds of such securities, may be used by the Commissioner for the making of loans in connection with projects under this title, notwithstanding any previous limitation on the total amount of such securities or proceeds thereof that may be used for loan purposes.

SEC. 203. The Public Works Administration is hereby continued to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform on July 1, 1939. All laws, Executive orders, and other documents referring to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works shall be deemed to refer to the Public Works Administration, and all laws, Executive orders, and other documents referring to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works shall be deemed to refer to the Commissioner of Public Works.

SEC. 204. (a) Section 206 of the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937, as amended by the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 206. No new applications for loans or grants for non-Federal projects shall be received by the Administration after September 30, 1939: Provided, That this section shall not apply to applications amendatory of applications for projects received prior to October 1, 1939, and such amendatory applications shall be confined to projects which, in the determination of the Commissioner, can be started and completed within the time limits specified in section 201 (b) of the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1939."

(b) That portion of section 201 (f) of the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938 which reads "for the completion (except liquidation) of the activities of such Administration," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 205. (a) There is hereby appropriated to the Administration, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1941, the sum of $50,000,000, to be expended at the direction of the Commissioner, for the making of allotments to Federal agencies for the financing of Federal construction projects (including projects for making surveys and maps) in continental United States outside of the District of Columbia, and the acquisition of land for sites therefor, such projects to be selected from (1) projects authorized by law and (2) projects for the enlargement, extension, or remodeling of existing Federal plants, institutions, or facilities.

(b) No Federal construction project, except flood control and water conservation or utilization projects now under actual construction, shall be undertaken or prosecuted with funds made available by this section unless and until moneys sufficient for the completion thereof shall have been irrevocably allocated or appropriated therefor.

SEC. 206. This title may be cited as the "Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1939".

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. McCARRAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr MALONEY. I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there is nothing in the law requiring the Director to reduce the security wage in any State, is there?

Mr. MALONEY. I have tried to point out that fact to Colonel Harrington and to the Senate; but Colonel Harrington seems to think the language of the law compels him to do it.

Mr. BYRNES. I am asking the Senator, who is familiar with the law, if he does not agree that there is nothing in the law requiring it.

Mr. MALONEY. That is my interpretation. I wish the very able Senator from South Carolina, who knows so much about this subject and about the law, would join me in that interpretation.

Mr. BYRNES. There can be no question about the language of the law, as the Senator from Connecticut has stated. It provides that what is called a security wage should be just what the word implies—security.

Mr. MALONEY. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. And that it should represent such difference as is justified by the difference in cost of living. It is the Director's duty to ascertain the cost of living. The factors to which the Senator has referred, such as the additional cost of heating a home, or wearing an overcoat for a longer time, would be factors entering into the cost of living as between different States; and all the Director is required to do is to find the difference in the cost of living, and fix the security wage accordingly. There is nothing in the law requiring him arbitrarily to reduce the wage.

Mr. MALONEY. I am very grateful to the Senator from South Carolina; and because I have already pointed out that Colonel Harrington stated in his testimony before the House committee that these men were now receiving a bare subsistence wage, I think the Senator from South Carolina has put his finger on exactly the right spot. I think he has aided greatly, if not made it mandatory, upon Colonel Harrington to continue the security subsistence wage in the North.

Mr. BYRNES. I can only say, as one member of the conference committee, that there was no intention on my part to reduce the wage in any State of the Union.

Mr. MALONEY. I am sure of that.

Mr. BYRNES. However, the cost of living is ascertainable. The Works Progress Administration itself has made a very splendid investigation of the subject. In the Department of Labor a similar investigation has been made covering all factors, such as rent, taxes, interest, insurance, clothing, fuel, and every factor entering into the cost of living.

The differences in the cost of living ought to be ascertained; and if it be true that there is not as great a difference in the cost of living as is now represented by the difference in the wages—for example, a difference between $26 in one State and $60.50 in another State—the wages should be adjusted in accordance with the cost of living. The Senator from Connecticut does not think that for the same class of labor in one State we should pay $26 when $60.50 is paid in another State; does he?

Mr. MALONEY. Of course not; and I so stated in my remarks.

Mr. BYRNES. There should be no such difference unless it represents the difference in the cost of living. If it does represent the difference in cost of living, then under the law there would be no change.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I think it is a sin to pay any man as little as $26.50 a month.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. As the author of the so-called cost-of-living amendment, I desire to say that it was certainly far from my intention to bring down the wage scale being paid by the W. P. A. in any section of the United States. What I was striving to do was to correct an injustice which I have brought to the attention of the Senate time after time, whereby a wage scale of only $26 per month was being paid to some heads of families in this Nation, when they happened to live in the South, and twice this much and more was paid workers in other sections of the Nation. I am trying to eliminate the discrimination against those who are so unfortunate as to be on the W. P. A. in the Southern States. I do not believe any fair-minded American would say that it is just or proper to pay one W. P. A. worker $26 a month, and another W. P. A. worker doing the same type of work $60.50 a month. My object was to bring about a correction of that condition, and not to tear down the monthly security wage in any State. For years prior to the adoption of this amendment, the officials of the W. P. A. have seriously discriminated against the southern worker in fixing the monthly wage.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I should like to answer the Senator from Georgia. I want the RECORD to show that it was because Senators agree with him concerning the pitiful wage paid in the South that this amendment got into the act. Certainly it was far from his mind that it should be interpreted as it has been. There is no more conscientious member of the committee or of the Senate than is the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I will yield to the Senator, although I think I have but a minute remaining.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The question before the W. P. A. was not raised by reason particularly of the language in the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia but by the first sentence of section 15 (a) of the relief appropriation act approved June 30, 1939, which reads, as follows:

> The commissioner shall fix a monthly earning schedule for persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by section 1—> which shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person of the Work Projects Administration.

And then follows the particular language to which I call attention—

It is my understanding that it is the opinion of those who are in charge of this matter in the W. P. A. that if the wages are raised in one section of the country this provision will make it necessary to reduce wages in other sections in order to comply with the provision to maintain the average labor cost per person.

I do not think that was the intention of Congress. I know it was not the intention of the Senator from Georgia, I know it was not the intention of the Appropriations Committee, and I know it was not the intention of the Senate; but it ought to be made clear just what the difficulty is.

Mr. MALONEY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator is about to yield the floor, I do not want him to yield to me. I was wondering if we could not proceed now to vote on the bill that is under consideration? There is a motion pending to recommit it. I think the debate is practically exhausted and the amendments have been agreed to. Unless the Senator from Connecticut has finished, I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. MALONEY. Let me inquire if, under the parliamentary situation, I am about to be taken off the floor by some unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; there has been no agreement.

Mr. MALONEY. I will conclude in a few minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr President, I merely want to add to what I was attempting to say when interrupted, that all of us are appreciative of the efforts of the junior Senator from Georgia. Because of his fine appeal, because of the justice of his argument, and because of the unfairness of the W. P. A. wage paid in the South this amendment was added to the relief bill. The Senator from Georgia is as much surprised as a man can be to find that this amendment has been so construed that the wages in the North may be cut. I know of his feeling of distress about that possibility; and I know I now have his support, and that those of us in the Senate who are now concerned with the problem have his support. What I have been trying to do is impress upon Colonel Harrington the intention of the Senate, and what we feel the language of the bill implies, in order that the threatened wage cut, which is pointed out in his letter to me, may be headed off. I am grateful to the Senate; and regret that it so happens that conditions in the Senate, created by a last-minute rush to get through, limit my time. I almost feel that I am stealing time when I attempt to talk about it at a time when the leadership is pressing to bring up another matter. I am denied a fair chance to fully discuss this matter at very great length, for I find that something else is about to be considered as a result of an agreement earlier made. But once more I implore Senators to give serious thought to this subject, because only a few days remain between now and the 1st of September. We have got to make our intentions known, and, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has pointed out, endeavor to help Colonel Harrington toward a fair and liberal and merciful interpretation of the law if we are going to save more than a million workers from having their meager wages cut on the eve of winter.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in 1933 when the first relief bill was under consideration we presented and tried to prevail on this body to accept an amendment providing for the prevailing wage in the several sections where public money was to be put to use.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber? There is so much confusion it is impossible to hear what the Senator is saying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. There is a great amount of confusion both on the floor of the Senate and in the galleries. Let us, please, have order while this important question is being discussed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, following the action of the Senate, the President, in putting the law into effect, found it necessary to issue an Executive order that carried out the very spirit if not, indeed, the letter of our proposed amendment. In every relief bill that has been passed that Executive order has been carried down through the years up to the present time. The Executive order resulted in very careful studies and research being made. After those studies the Nation was divided into three distinct zones, each having its prevailing wage and each a cost of living standard specified, fixed and determined, as best the study could determine it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to point out to the Senator from Nevada—I am sure it is merely an oversight on his part—in regard to the statement that the prevailing wages were affected by the three zones; that there were two separate wages, one the prevailing hourly wage and the other the monthly security wage. The three zones only applied to the monthly wage and did not affect the hourly wage. As a matter of fact, there were possibly twelve or fifteen hundred different sets of hourly wages. Under the security wage, which is the monthly wage, the amount that was paid each person upon the W. P. A. for a month's service was limited in these three geographical wage areas. For some reason the lowest monthly wages were paid in the southern area.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is correct. I did not intend to go into the matter so much in detail at this time, but if the lending bill continues to be the order of the Senate, I propose to go into it in detail; and I now offer again, as I offered and had adopted by the Senate when the relief bill was pending before this body, an amendment to be offered to the lending bill that will be helpful in getting us back again on the basis that led to so much harmony and so much content during the time we were executing relief bills in the past. I offer the amendment and ask that it it be printed in the usual form, printed in the RECORD, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. McCARRAN to the bill (S. 2864) to provide for the financing of a program of recoverable expenditures, and for other purposes, and which was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

"SEC. —. Section 15 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939, approved June 30, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15. (a) The Federal Works Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") shall fix a monthly earning schedule for persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by section 1. Such monthly earning schedule shall be so fixed that the monthly earnings payable under such schedule to any class of workers shall not be less than the monthly earnings payable to such class of workers under the schedule of earnings of the Works Progress Administration in effect on June 30, 1939. After August 31, 1939, the monthly earning schedule fixed by the Administrator (1) shall not provide for differentials in the monthly earnings of workers engaged in similar work in the same wage area, and (2) shall not provide for differentials between cities or counties within the same wage area upon the basis of the degree of urbanization or any other factor that will tend to discriminate against the less urbanized areas.

"'(b) The rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by this joint resolution shall not be less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Administrator and shall not be less than the current minimum wage required to be paid by private employers under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.'"

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wonder if we may now have a vote on the motion to recommit?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to offer a few remarks on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

INTERLOCKING BANK DIRECTORATES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the motion for just a moment so that I may present and move the adoption of a conference report to which I know there is no objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. I withhold the motion.

Mr. WAGNER. I present the conference report on Senate bill 2150.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2150) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "1943."

And the House agree to the same.

ROBERT F. WAGNER,
CARTER GLASS,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
EMANUEL CELLER,
ZEBULON WEAVER,
U. S. GUYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report at this time?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator briefly explain the report?

Mr. WAGNER. The report is on the so-called interlocking directorate bill. The Senate bill provided that there should be an extension of time for a period of 5 years during which the situation as to interlocking directorates might be adjusted to comply with the law. The House reduced that to 1 year. The conferees have agreed upon 4 years. The bill originally passed the Senate without opposition.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before I renew that motion, I wish to say that for some time everybody in Congress has had his mind, apparently, on final adjournment. I desire to cooperate as fully as I can in trying to arrange the program of the Senate so as to bring about final adjournment at the earliest possible date consistent with the proper consideration of legislation.

The bill now under consideration has taken longer than was anticipated, and I think that, in view of the importance of the legislation that is on our doorstep, we cannot consume any more time on the judicial bill until we shall have disposed of the work financing bill which has been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The committees have practically finished their work for the session, and I think the Senate might well meet every day from now on at 11 o'clock, and, if necessary, hold night sessions. I do not intend to attempt to hold a night session tomorrow night, but it may be possible that we will have to begin holding night sessions on Wednesday and continue to do so in an effort to finish the legislation necessary to be enacted.

I have conferred with the responsibile leaders of the House of Representatives in regard to adjournment, and it is practically certain that we cannot adjourn this week, but I hope that we may be able to adjourn by the middle of next week. Looking toward that end, I ask the cooperation of all Members of the Senate, on both sides of the Chamber, not only in meeting earlier and staying later but in remaining on the floor so that it will not be necessary to consume time calling for quorums because of the absence of Senators.

I had a gentlemen's agreement with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that at 4 o'clock today the Senate would go into executive session to consider the Panama Treaty. It is for that purpose that I am going to move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BARKLEY. I withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. MALONEY. I am wondering why the Senator suggests that we wait until Wednesday before holding night sessions, when there is so much for the Senate to do before it may finally adjourn?

Mr. BARKLEY. Personally, I would have been glad to have started night sessions tomorrow night, but I have conferred with other Senators who find it difficult to arrange their programs so as to attend night sessions earlier than Wednesday. I think, however, that we might all contemplate beginning night sessions Wednesday night.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REED. May I have an understanding with the Senator from Kentucky as to the position of the bill creating additional judges if his motion to go into executive session should prevail?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The judicial bill is the unfinished business; and, so far as I am concerned, it will remain such. We have an agreement that the Senator from Kentucky may displace the unfinished business at any time he chooses to consider the—I do not know just how to designate the Senator's bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. The works financing bill.

Mr. ASHURST. The works financing bill; I adopt the suggestion of the Senator.

I am going to follow the Senator from Kentucky, because I have found him to be a safe and wise leader; but I wish to say that when a motion for final adjournment is made, it will not be debatable. No Senator has greater reason, public as well as private, than have I to want Congress to adjourn. But, Mr. President, we shall make a poor showing, we shall cut a poor figure when we begin to talk about final adjournment with many bills before the Congress that should be considered. This is pleasant weather; it is not distressing. We should press forward with high courage and much resolution, and remain here until all the work is done. The Congress is not going to adjourn until it passes the judicial bill; it is not going to adjourn until it passes the works financing bill.

So, Mr. President, seizing the only opportunity I may have, I wish to protest against early adjournment. I am advised today that I have some political fences in a sad condition of disrepair. [Laughter.] I have other reasons which impel me to go home; but in the Senate Chamber is where we belong in these times; and I hope there will be no talk of final adjournment until the consideration of various bills shall have been concluded.

Before I yield the floor I wish to secure some sort of an arrangement about a vote on the judicial bill. I do not wish an agreement as to time, because the able Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] wishes to discuss the bill, and that is his right. He wishes to offer some amendments; but tomorrow afternoon I shall ask the Senator from Kentucky to lay aside his bill in order that we may conclude the consideration of the judicial bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that, of course, he and I have a thorough understanding about this situation. We thought the judicial bill would not consume more than 2 hours today. It has consumed four hours and a quarter. I should be perfectly willing now to enter into an agreement, if possible, to vote on the motion to recommit, and on the bill itself at 12 o'clock tomorrow, or even at 1 o'clock.

Mr. ASHURST. Make it 2 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's bill would come up following the disposition of the works-financing bill, at any rate, whether the Senator's bill is finished before or after that bill; and I will say to the Senator that I will cooperate with him in attempting to hold Congress here until his bill is passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator is generous; but no power on earth can hold Congress here for the purpose of passing the judicial bill. The judicial bill must be passed anterior to other bills which Senators want passed. I am sufficient of a strategist to know that I must get my bill disposed of before other bills come up which Senators wish to have passed. That is the reason why I am so anxious that the bill remain the unfinished business.

If the Senator will give us another half hour, I think we can finish the judicial bill in that time.

Mr. REED. I would not guarantee it at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the trouble; no guaranties can be given about concluding in half an hour, or even an hour.

Mr. President, when we finish the session today I am going to move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. We have just had a roll call. I now ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 12 o'clock tomorrow the Senate vote on the motion to recommit the judicial bill; and, if that motion is defeated, that it then proceed to vote on the bill itself, and all amendments thereto.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, when the judicial bill was brought before the Senate today it was the understanding, expressed by the Senator from Arizona—whose attention I should like at the moment—that it would be laid aside for two purposes: First, to consider the motion which has been entered to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Secondly, to consider the works-financing or self-liquidating-projects bill.

Mr. KING. Or waste bill.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Wyoming is correct in his statement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. At that time I asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed at 1 o'clock to take up the motion which had been made by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who at that time said he was awaiting the receipt of a telegram which he expected in a few moments. The telegram has not as yet been presented to the Senate. It is most important, before we proceed to finish the judicial bill or to take up the bill in which the Senator from Kentucky is interested——

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope I am not the only Senator who is interested in that bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That the decision of the Senate with respect to the truth-in-fabric bill shall be made final. So, Mr. President, I do not find myself in a position to grant consent to the request of the leader in the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who shortly afternoon was under the impression that within a few minutes he would be able to present to the Senate the telegram because of which we laid aside the further consideration of the motion relative to the truth-in-fabric bill.

Can the Senator from Kentucky give us any idea as to when it may be possible to proceed to the conclusion of the truth-in-fabric bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that I desire to have the motion to reconsider disposed of at the earliest possible moment. I had hoped we could dispose of it this afternoon. The Senator from Oklahoma is not present, and I do not want to take it up in his absence; but I will cooperate with the Senator from Wyoming. I am equally interested in having that bill disposed of.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that the Senator is.

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot at this time suggest an hour when we can take up the motion, but I shall try to arrange to take it up at some time tomorrow. I will cooperate to the best of my ability. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will be here, so that we may dispose of the matter.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think, then, I shall be very glad, so far as I am concerned, to accede to the Senator's unanimous-consent request if he will modify is so as to provide that at 12:30 o'clock tomorrow the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider, which can be disposed of very quickly, because a motion will promptly be made to lay it on the table.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that unless I can secure the agreement I have just propounded, that sort of an agreement will not be appropriate, because if any objection is made to the request I am now making that we vote at 12 o'clock tomorrow, the while thing will fail. Is the Senator from Oregon going to object?

Mr. MCNARY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then I am not going to waste any time in trying to get an agreement. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to make a comment on the situation. The Senator is contemplating a recess or an adjournment until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. That is in his program. It happens that the deficiency subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee has called a meeting at 11 o'clock in the morning for the purpose of taking up the relief matters which have been discussed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] and certain amendments which have been offered by certain other Senators. I merely want to say that I hope the Senator will arrange matters so that that meeting can be held.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Colorado—I do not mean this statement to be taken facetiously—that from 11 o'clock until 12 I think there will be debate on this question, and the Appropriations Committee probably would lose nothing by going ahead with its business. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Is the Senator from Kentucky going to participate in the debate? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Probably.

I renew my motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator from Wyoming want to be heard on the motion to go into executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Wyoming that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I do not desire to debate it. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I desire to ask the Senator whether he will not consent to amend his motion so that at the conclusion of the vote on the pending bill, the bill in charge of the Senator from Arizona, a motion may be made to proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no way of knowing how long the debate on the Panama Treaty will last, and whether the Senate will be in a mood to return to legislative session and consider the motion. That is a matter upon which I cannot pass in advance. I think we had better wait and see what the situation may be later.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, the suggestion I made was that the Thomas motion to reconsider may be presented and voted on after the final vote on the bill now the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be that the Senator from Oklahoma will want to have his motion taken up before the final vote on the judicial bill, because that bill may go over. I will cooperate with the Senator.

I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE DURING RECESS

Under authority of the order of the 21st instant,

On July 22, 1939, Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of George F. Yantis, of Washington, to be a member of the National Resources Planning Board.

He also, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary the nomination of Miles N. Pike, of Nevada, to be United States attorney for the district of Nevada. The committee was unanimous in ordering the nomination reported favorably.

Mr. President, this is a matter which has occupied the attention of the Senate for a considerable length of time. The junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and myself are very happy that we have been able to obtain a very excellent lawyer for this position, a gentleman of high standing, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Miles N. Pike, of Nevada, to be United States attorney for the district of Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

TREATY REGULATING COPYRIGHTS

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, on Friday the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, made some reference to a treaty dealing with the question of copyrights. A short time ago a group interested in the whole subject of copyrights prepared, after a series of conferences in New York, what purports to be an entirely new copyright law. It is a complete rewriting and revamping of the entire copyright statute of the United States, which is over a hundred years old.

Therefore it affects the basic law of the country.

I think the able Senator from Nevada was probably in error, possibly had been misinformed, when he stated that the interests which are involved in the question of copyrights have agreed on legislation, that the Committee on Education and Labor has considered it and reported it to the Senate. It is my opinion that that has not been done. I think probably the Senator had been misled by some information he received.

It is my judgment that we should not ratify a treaty dealing with copyrights—for it is a very serious and certainly an all-embracing subject—until the Senate of the United States has had an opportunity to consider a proposal respecting copyright legislation. I desire to say to my colleagues that the Committee on Patents, if the bill to which I have referred shall be introduced—and the proposal which came from New York were half or three-quarters of an inch thick and contained hundreds of pages—should consider it before anything is done with the copyright treaty. I understand it has been suggested that we take up the treaty on copyrights and ratify it during the present session of Congress. I think it should go over until next January.

GENERAL TREATY WITH PANAMA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the Treaty, Executive B (74th Cong., 2d sess.), a general treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, signed at Washington on March 2, 1936, which was read the second time, as follows:

SUMMARY OF ESSENTIAL FEATURES OF AGREEMENTS OF MARCH 2, 1936

I. General treaty.

Article I establishes a basis of friendship and cooperation between Panama and the United States.

Article II. The compliance of Panama with the provisions of article II of the convention of November 18, 1903, in turning over to the United States additional lands and waters beyond those specifically mentioned therein is recognized. The requirement of further lands and waters is considered improbable by both Governments, but they nevertheless recognize their joint obligation to insure the continuous operation of the Canal and undertake to reach an agreement should additional lands and waters be in fact necessary for this purpose.

Article III contains various provisions restricting the commercial activities of the United States in the Canal Zone in order that Panama may take advantage of the commercial opportunities inherent in its geographical situation. In this article are listed the classes of persons who may reside in the Canal Zone and the persons who are entitled to make purchases in the Canal Zone commissaries.

Article IV provides for the free entry of merchandise entering Panama destined for agencies of the United States Government, and provides that no taxes shall be imposed upon persons in the service of the United States entering Panama or upon residents of Panama entering the Canal Zone.

Article V provides that port facilities other than those owned by the Panama Railroad Co. in the ports of Panamá and Colón may be operated only by Panama; exempts from Panamanian taxation vessels using the Canal which do not touch at ports under Panamanian jurisdiction; and provides for the establishment of Panamanian customhouses within the Canal Zone. The United States undertakes to adopt such administrative regulations as may be necessary to assist Panamá in controlling immigration into that country.

Article VI revises article VII of the convention of November 18, 1903, in that the United States renounces the right to acquire, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, lands or properties in or near the cities of Panamá and Colón, although retaining the right to purchase necessary lands or properties. The third paragraph of the said article VII, granting the United States the right to intervene in the cities of Panamá and Colón and the territory adjacent thereto for the purpose of maintaining order, is abrogated.

Article VII provides that beginning with the 1934 annuity payment the annual amounts of these payments shall be four hundred thirty thousand balboas (B/430,000.00) or the equivalent thereof. In a supplementary exchange of notes the balboa is defined as having a gold content equal to that of the present United States dollar.

Article VIII provides for a corridor under Panamanian jurisdiction to connect the city of Colón with other territory of Panamá.

Article IX establishes a similar corridor under American jurisdiction to connect the Madden Dam area with the Canal Zone proper.

Article X provides that in case of emergency both Governments will take such measures of prevention and defense as they may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests.

Article XI reserves to each country all rights enjoyed by virtue of treaties now in force between the two countries, and preserves all obligations therein established, with the exception of those rights and obligations specifically revised by the present treaty. The juridical status of the Canal Zone, as defined in article III of the 1903 convention, thereby remains unaltered.

Article XII provides that the treaty shall take effect immediately on the exchange of ratifications in Washington.

II. The 16 exchanges of notes which accompany the general treaty deal with the following subjects:

1. Applicability of the treaty to all lands and waters of Panama used, occupied, or controlled by the United States.
2. For the purpose of making purchases at the Canal Zone commissaries the term "officers, employees, workmen, or laborers in the service or employ of the United States" is interpreted as referring only to such officers and employees as are connected with the Panama Canal, or exercising official duties in Panama.
3. As exceptions to the general rule regarding residence in the Canal Zone, certain truck gardeners and hucksters are permitted to continue residing therein.
4. Exemption of the Canal Zone hotels from the general restrictions on residence in the zone pending the establishment of a satisfactory hotel business in Panama.
5. As an exception to the general rule regarding purchases at the Canal Zone commissaries, residents of the Canal Zone are permitted to purchase essential provisions for their servants.
6. The United States undertakes to withdraw from the "hold for orders" business as soon as satisfactory bonded warehouse facilities become available at reasonable rates in Panamanian jurisdiction.
7. The use and services of hospitals, dispensaries, restaurants, lunchrooms, messes, clubhouses, and moving-picture houses in the zone are limited to Canal Zone residents and their guests, and officers and employees of the United States of America.
8. Agreement to confer regularly with a view to preventing smuggling.
9. Private enterprises temporarily engaged in construction work having a direct relation to the operation, maintenance, sanitation, or protection of the Canal are permitted to operate in the zone for that purpose.
10. Regulation of sales to ships by the Canal Zone commissaries.
11. Reservation of the rights of the Panama Railroad Co. to operate port facilities in Panamá and Colón.
12. Reservation of certain rights of officers and employees of the United States in regard to the immigration laws of Panama.
13. Cooperation for the sanitation of the cities of Panamá and Colón.
14. Agreement to hold conversations to discuss problems which have arisen in connection with the distribution of water in the cities of Panamá and Colón.
15. Equality of opportunity and treatment of Panamanian and American employees in the Canal Zone.
16. Monetary agreement redefining the gold content of the Balboa in terms of the present United States dollar.

III. Convention for the Regulation of Radio Communications in Panama and the Canal Zone.

Among the important provisions of this convention are the following:

1. Establishment of radio boards in each jurisdiction.
2. Licensing of transmitting and receiving apparatus.
3. Licenses for operating radio stations to be granted only to citizens or concerns of either Panama or the United States.
4. Inspection of radio stations, using the services of members of the radio boards.
5. Traffic between fixed and mobile stations to be carried on solely by Government stations of the United States or Panama within a restricted area surrounding the cities of Panamá and Colón. This area is defined in a supplementary exchange of notes as being measured by two radii of 125 miles from those cities.
6. Right of the United States to establish radio stations in Panamanian territory if necessary for the operation and protection of the Canal.
7. Joint supervision of all radio matters in case of emergency.
8. Reciprocal instruction of a limited number of radio operators by each government.

The three exchanges of notes accompanying this Convention provide for the following:

1. Supervision, when necessary, of radio broadcast receivers;
2. Definition of the term "concerns" as used in Article V; and
3. Definition of the restricted area within which only the two governments can carry on radio communications with mobile stations.

IV. Convention for the transfer of naval radio stations.

This convention provides for the transfer to Panama, under certain conditions, of the naval radio stations at Puerto Obaldía and La Palma, which the Navy ceased to operate last July, and from which the radio equipment has been removed.

V. Trans-Isthmian Highway Convention.

The United States undertakes to obtain from the Panama Railroad Co. a waiver of that company's exclusive right to establish roads across the Isthmus of Panama in order to permit the construction of a trans-Isthmian highway between the cities of Panamá and Colón. The specifications of the proposed highway are set forth, provision is made for the establishment of a joint board to deal with questions of detail, the two Governments agree to coordinate the construction work to be performed by them respectively, and each Government shall enjoy equally the use of the highway when completed. As a contribution to the completion of the highway, the United States will construct, at an estimated expense of $300,000, a stretch of about 3 miles within the Canal Zone on the Atlantic side near Colón, which portion shall thereafter be maintained by Panamá at its expense. The balance of the uncompleted construction of the highway will be paid for by Panamá, including a short section under American jurisdiction near Madden Dam. This latter section is to be constructed by the Canal Zone authorities at an estimated expense to Panama of about $125,000.

I

General Treaty

The United States of America and the Republic of Panama, animated by the desire to strengthen further the bonds of friendship and cooperation between the two countries and to regulate on a stable and mutually satisfactory basis certain questions which have arisen as a result of the construction of the interoceanic canal across the Isthmus of Panama, have decided to conclude a treaty, and have designated for this purpose as their Plenipotentiaries—

The President of the United States of America;

Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and Mr. Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

The President of the Republic of Panama;

The Honorable Doctor Ricardo J. Alfaro, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Panama to the United States of America, and The Honorable Doctor Narciso Garay, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Panama on special mission;

Who, having communicated their respective full powers to each other, which have been found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE I

Article I of the Convention of November 18, 1903, is hereby superseded.

There shall be a perfect, firm, and inviolable peace and sincere friendship between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama and between their citizens.

In view of the official and formal opening of the Panama Canal on July 12, 1920, the United States of America and the Republic of Panama declare that the provisions of the Convention of November 18, 1903, contemplate the use, occupation and control by the United States of America of the Canal Zone and of the additional lands and waters under the jurisdiction of the United States of America for the purposes of the efficient maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the Canal and of its auxiliary works.

The United States of America will continue the maintenance of the Panama Canal for the encouragement and use of interoceanic commerce, and the two Governments declare their willingness to cooperate, as far as it is feasible for them to do so, for the purpose of insuring the full and perpetual enjoyment of the benefits of all kinds which the Canal should afford the two nations that made possible its construction as well as all nations interested in world trade.

ARTICLE II

The United States of America declares that the Republic of Panama has loyally and satisfactorily complied with the obligations which it entered into under Article II of the Convention of November 18, 1903, by which it granted in perpetuity to the United States the use, occupation, and control of the zone of land and land under water as described in the said Article, of the islands within the limits of said zone, of the group of small islands in the Bay of Panama, named Perico, Naos, Culebra, and Flamenco, and of any other lands and waters outside of said zone necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the Panama Canal or of any auxiliary canals or other works, and in recognition thereof the United States of America hereby renounces the grant made to it in perpetuity by the Republic of Panama of the use, occupation, and control of lands and waters, in addition to those now under the jurisdiction of the United States of America outside of the zone as described in Article II of the aforesaid Convention, which may be necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the Panama Canal or of any auxiliary canals or other works necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the said enterprise.

While both Governments agree that the requirement of further lands and waters for the enlargement of the existing facilities of the Canal appears to be improbable, they nevertheless recognize, subject to the provisions of Articles I and X of this Treaty, their joint obligation to insure the effective and continuous operation of the Canal and the preservation of its neutrality, and consequently, if, in the event of some now unforeseen contingency, the utilization of lands or waters additional to those already employed should be in fact necessary for the maintenance, sanitation, or efficient operation of the Canal, or for its effective protection, the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama will agree upon such measures as it may be necessary to take in order to insure the maintenance, sanitation, efficient operation and effective protection of the Canal, in which the two countries are jointly and vitally interested.

ARTICLE III

In order to enable the Republic of Panama to take advantage of the commercial opportunities inherent in its geographical situation, the United States of America agrees as follows:

(1) The sale to individuals of goods imported into the Canal Zone or purchased, produced, or manufactured therein by the Government of the United States of America shall be limited by it to the persons included in classes (a) and (b) of Section 2 of this Article; and with regard to the persons included in classes (c), (d), and (e) of the said Section and members of their families, the sales above mentioned shall be made only when such persons actually reside in the Canal Zone.

(2) No person who is not comprised within the following classes shall be entitled to reside within the Canal Zone:

(a) Officers, employees, workmen, or laborers in the service or employ of the United States of America, the Panama Canal, or the Panama Railroad Company, and members of their families actually residing with them;

(b) Members of the armed forces of the United States of America and members of their families actually residing with them;

(c) Contractors operating in the Canal Zone and their employees, workmen, and laborers during the performance of contracts;

(d) Officers, employees, or workmen of companies entitled under Section 5 of this Article to conduct operations in the Canal Zone;

(e) Persons engaged in religious, welfare, charitable, educational, recreational, and scientific work exclusively in the Canal Zone;

(f) Domestic servants of all the before-mentioned persons and members of the families of the persons in classes (c), (d), and (e) actually residing with them.

(3) No dwellings belonging to the Government of the United States of America or to the Panama Railroad Company and situated within the Canal Zone shall be rented, leased, or sublet except to persons within classes (a) to (e), inclusive, of Section 2 hereinabove.

(4) The Government of the United States of America will continue to cooperate in all proper ways with the Government of the Republic of Panama to prevent violations of the immigration and customs laws of the Republic of Panama, including the smuggling into territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of goods imported into the Canal Zone or purchased, produced, or manufactured therein by the Government of the United States of America.

(5) With the exception of concerns having a direct relation to the operation, maintenance, sanitation, or protection of the Canal, such as those engaged in the operation of cables, shipping, or dealing in oil or fuel, the Government of the United States of America will not permit the establishment in the Canal Zone of private business enterprises other than those existing therein at the time of the signature of this Treaty.

(6) In view of the proximity of the port of Balboa to the city of Panamá and of the port of Cristobal to the city of Colón, the United States of America will continue to permit, under suitable regulations and upon the payment of proper charges, vessels entering at or clearing from the ports of the Canal Zone to use and enjoy the dockage and other facilities of the said ports for the purpose of loading and unloading cargoes and receiving or disembarking passengers to or from the territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama.

The Republic of Panama will permit vessels entering at or clearing from the ports of Panamá or Colón, in case of emergency and also under suitable regulations and upon the payment of proper charges, to use and enjoy the dockage and other facilities of said ports for the purpose of receiving or disembarking passengers to or from the territory of the Republic of Panama under the jurisdiction of the United States of America, and of loading and unloading cargoes either in transit or destined for the service of the Canal or of works pertaining to the Canal.

(7) The Government of the United States of America will extend to private merchants residing in the Republic of Panama full opportunity for making sales to vessels arriving at terminal ports of the Canal or transiting the Canal, subject always to appropriate administrative regulations of the Canal Zone.

ARTICLE IV

The Government of the Republic of Panama shall not impose import duties or taxes of any kind on goods destined for or consigned to the agencies of the Government of the United States of America in the Republic of Panama when the goods are intended for the official use of such agencies, or upon goods destined for or consigned to persons included in classes (a) and (b) in Section 2 of Article III of this Treaty, who reside or sojourn in territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama during the performance of their service with the United States of America, the Panama Canal, or the Panama Railroad Company, when the goods are intended for their own use and benefit.

The United States of America shall not impose import duties or taxes of any kind on goods, wares, and merchandise passing from territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama into the Canal Zone.

No charges of any kind shall be imposed by the authorities of the United States of America upon persons residing in territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama passing from the said territory into the Canal Zone, and no charges of any kind shall be imposed by the authorities of the Republic of Panama upon persons in the service of the United States of America or residing in the Canal Zone passing from the Canal Zone into territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama, all other persons passing from the Canal Zone into territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama being subject to the full effects of the immigration laws of the Republic.

In view of the fact that the Canal Zone divides the territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama, the United States of America agrees that, subject to such police regulations as circumstances may require, Panamanian citizens who may occasionally be deported from the Canal Zone shall be assured transit through the said Zone, in order to pass from one part to another of the territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama.

ARTICLE V

Article IX of the Convention of November 18, 1903, is hereby superseded.

The Republic of Panama has the right to impose upon merchandise destined to be introduced for use or consumption in territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama, and upon vessels touching at Panamanian ports and upon the officers, crew, or passengers of such vessels, the taxes or charges provided by the laws of the Republic of Panama; it being understood that the Republic of Panama will continue directly and exclusively to exercise its jurisdiction over the ports of Panama and Colon and to operate exclusively with Panamanian personnel such facilities as are or may be established therein by the Republic or by its authority. However, the Republic of Panama shall not impose or collect any charges or taxes upon any vessel using or passing through the Canal which does not touch at a port under Panamanian jurisdiction or upon the officers, crew, or passengers of such vessels, unless they enter the Republic; it being also understood that taxes and charges imposed by the Republic of Panama upon vessels using or passing through the Canal which touch at ports under Panamanian jurisdiction, or upon their cargo, officers, crew, or passengers, shall not be higher than those imposed upon vessels which touch only at ports under Panamanian jurisdiction and do not transit the Canal, or upon their cargo, officers, crew, or passengers.

The Republic of Panama also has the right to determine what persons or classes of persons arriving at ports of the Canal Zone shall be admitted to the Republic of Panama and to determine likewise what persons or classes of persons arriving at such ports shall be excluded from admission to the Republic of Panama.

The United States of America will furnish to the Republic of Panama free of charge the necessary sites for the establishment of customhouses in the ports of the Canal Zone for the collection of duties on importations destined to the Republic and for the examination of merchandise, baggage, and passengers consigned to or bound for the Republic of Panama, and for the prevention of contraband trade, it being understood that the collection of duties and the examination of merchandise and passengers by the agents of the Government of the Republic of Panama, in accordance with this provision, shall take place only in the customhouses to be established by the Government of the Republic of Panama as herein provided, and that the Republic of Panama will exercise exclusive jurisdiction within the sites on which the customhouses are located so far as concerns the enforcement of immigration or customs laws of the Republic of Panama, and over all property therein contained and the personnel therein employed.

To further the effective enforcement of the rights hereinbefore recognized, the Government of the United States of America agrees that, for the purpose of obtaining information useful in determining whether persons arriving at ports of the Canal Zone and destined to points within the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama should be admitted or excluded from admission into the Republic, the immigration officers of the Republic of Panama shall have the right of free access to vessels upon their arrival at the Balboa or Cristobal piers or wharves with passengers destined for the Republic; and that the appropriate authorities of the Panama Canal will adopt such administrative regulations regarding persons entering ports of the Canal Zone and destined to points within the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama as will facilitate the exercise by the authorities of Panama of their jurisdiction in the manner provided in Paragraph 4 of this Article for the purposes stated in Paragraph 3 thereof.

ARTICLE VI

The first sentence of Article VII of the Convention of November 18, 1903, is hereby amended so as to omit the following phrase: "or by the exercise of the right of eminent domain."

The third paragraph of article VII of the Convention of November 18, 1903, is hereby abrogated.

ARTICLE VII

Beginning with the annuity payable in 1934 the payments under Article XIV of the Convention of November 18, 1903, between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, shall be four hundred and thirty thousand Balboas (B/430,000.00) as defined by the agreement embodied in an exchange of notes of this date. The United States of America may discharge its obligation with respect to any such payment, upon payment in any coin or currency, provided the amount so paid is the equivalent of four hundred and thirty thousand Balboas (B/430,000.00) as so defined.

ARTICLE VIII

In order that the city of Colón may enjoy direct means of land communication under Panamanian jurisdiction with other territory under jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama, the United States of America hereby transfers to the Republic of Panama jurisdiction over a corridor, the exact limits of which shall be agreed upon and demarcated by the two Governments pursuant to the following description:

(a) The end at Colón connects with the southern end of the east half of the Paseo del Centenario at Sixteenth Street, Colón; thence the corridor proceeds in a general southerly direction, parallel to and east of Bolivar Highway to the vicinity of the northern edge of Silver City; thence eastward near the shore line of Folks River, around the northeast corner of Silver City; thence in a general southeasterly direction and generally parallel to the Randolph Road to a crossing of said Randolph Road, about 1,200 feet east of the East Diversion; thence in a general northeasterly direction to the eastern boundary line of the Canal Zone near the southeastern corner of the Fort Randolph Reservation, southwest of Cativá. The approximate route of the corridor is shown on the map which accompanies this Treaty, signed by the Plenipotentiaries of the two countries and marked "Exhibit A."

(b) The width of the corridor shall be as follows: 25 feet in width from the Colón end to a point east of the southern line of Silver City; thence 100 feet in width to Randolph Road, except that, at any elevated crossing which may be built over Randolph Road and the railroad, the corridor will be no wider than is necessary to include the viaduct and will not include any part of Randolph Road proper, or of the railroad right of way, and except that, in case of a grade crossing over Randolph Road and the railroad, the corridor will be interrupted by that highway and railroad; thence 200 feet in width to the boundary line of the Canal Zone.

The Government of the United States of America will extinguish any private titles existing or which may exist in and to the land included in the above-described corridor.

The stream and drainage crossings of any highway built in the corridor shall not restrict the water passage to less than the capacity of the existing streams and drainage.

No other construction will take place within the corridor than that relating to the construction of a highway and to the installation of electric power, telephone, and telegraph lines; and the only activities which will be conducted within the said corridor will be those pertaining to the construction, maintenance, and common uses of a highway and of power and communication lines.

The United States of America shall enjoy at all times the right of unimpeded transit across the said corridor at any point, and of travel along the corridor, subject to such traffic regulations as may be established by the Government of the Republic of Panama; and the Government of the United States of America shall have the right to such use of the corridor as would be involved in the construction of connecting or intersecting highways or railroads; overhead and underground power, telephone, telegraph, and pipe lines; and additional drainage channels, on condition that these structures and their use shall not interfere with the purpose of the corridor as provided hereinabove.

ARTICLE IX

In order that direct means of land communication, together with accommodation for the high tension power transmission lines, may be provided under jurisdiction of the United States of America from the Madden Dam to the Canal Zone, the Republic of Panama hereby transfers to the United States of America jurisdiction over a corridor, the limits of which shall be demarcated by the two Governments pursuant to the following descriptions:

A strip of land 200 feet in width, extending 62.5 feet from the center line of the Madden Road on its eastern boundary and 137.5 feet from the center line of the Madden Road on its western boundary, containing an area of 105.8 acres or 42.81 hectares, as shown on the map which accompanies this Treaty, signed by the Plenipotentiaries of the two countries and marked "Exhibit B."

Beginning at the intersection of the located center line of the Madden Road and the Canal Zone Republic of Panama 5-mile boundary line, said point being located N. 29°20′ W. a distance of 168.04 feet along said boundary line from boundary monument No. 65, the geodetic position of boundary monument No. 65 being latitude N. 9°07′ plus 3,948.8 feet and longitude 79°37′ plus 1,174.6 feet;

Thence N. 43°10′ E. a distance of 541.1 feet to station 324 plus 06.65 feet;

Thence on an 8° curve to the left a distance of 446.4 feet to station 485 plus 84.9 feet;

Thence N. 30°12′ E. a distance of 479.6 feet to station 490 plus 64.5 feet;

Thence on a 5° curve to the left a distance of 329.4 feet to station 493 plus 93.9 feet;

Thence N. 13°44′ E. a distance of 1,639.9 feet to station 510 plus 33.8 feet;

Thence on a 5° curve to the left a distance of 832.3 feet to station 518 plus 66.1 feet;

Thence N. 27°53′ W. a distance of 483.9 feet to station 523 plus 50.0 feet;

Thence on an 8° curve to the right a distance of 469.6 feet to station 528 plus 19.6 feet;

Thence N. 9°41′ E. a distance of 1,697.6 feet to station 545 plus 17.2 feet;

Thence on a 10° curve to the left a distance of 451.7 feet to station 549 plus 68.9 feet, which is the point marked Point Z on the above-mentioned map known as "Exhibit B."

(All bearings are true bearings.)

The Government of the Republic of Panama will extinguish any private titles existing or which may exist in and to the land included in the above-described corridor.

The stream and drainage crossings of any highway built in the corridor shall not restrict the water passage to less than the capacity of the existing streams and drainage.

No other construction will take place within the corridor than that relating to the construction of a highway and to the installation of electric power, telephone and telegraph lines; and the only activities which will be conducted within the said corridor will be those pertaining to the construction, maintenance, and common uses of a highway, and of power and communication lines, and auxiliary works thereof.

The Republic of Panama shall enjoy at all times the right of unimpeded transit across the said corridor at any point, and of travel along the corridor, subject to such traffic regulations as may be established by the authorities of the Panama Canal; and the Government of the Republic of Panama shall have the right to such use of the corridor as would be involved in the construction of connecting or intersecting highways or railroads, overhead and underground power, telephone, telegraph, and pipe lines, and additional drainage channels on condition that these structures and their use shall not interfere with the purpose of the corridor as provided hereinabove.

ARTICLE X

In case of an international conflagration or the existence of any threat of aggression which would endanger the security of the Republic of Panama or the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama will take such measures of prevention and defense as they may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests. Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one Government to take, and which may affect the territory under the jurisdiction of the other Government, will be the subject of consultation between the two Governments.

ARTICLE XI

The provisions of this Treaty shall not affect the rights and obligations of either of the two High Contracting Parties under the treaties now in force between the two countries, nor be considered as a limitation, definition, restriction, or restrictive interpretation of such rights and obligations, but without prejudice to the full force and effect of any provisions of this Treaty which constitute addition to, modification or abrogation of, or substitution for, the provisions of previous treaties.

ARTICLE XII

The present Treaty shall be ratified in accordance with the constitutional methods of the High Contracting Parties and shall take effect immediately on the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Washington.

In witness whereof, the Plenipotentiaries have signed this Treaty in duplicate, in the English and Spanish languages, both texts being authentic, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

EXCHANGES OF NOTES

LEGACIÓN DE PANAMÁ,
Washington, March 2, 1936.

The Honorable CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In connection with the treaty signed today and the exchange of notes accessory thereto we have the honor to confirm the understanding we have reached during the negotiations that wherever the provisions of the said treaty and the statements contained in the accessory notes refer to the Canal Zone, such provisions and statements are applicable to all such lands and waters as may be used, occupied, or controlled by the United States of America.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of our highest consideration.

The Honorable CORDELL HULL,

SIR: In connection with that part of Article III of the treaty signed today in which the persons are specified who are entitled to reside within the Canal Zone, we have the honor to state in the name of our Government that in view of the residence in the Canal Zone of the officers, employees, and laborers of the United States of America, members of the forces of the Army and Navy, and members of the families of all those persons, our Government would have no objection to the residence therein of the following persons also: settlers engaged in the cultivation of truck gardens to furnish vegetables to the residents of the Canal Zone; hucksters engaged in the sale of such vegetables; proprietors of small establishments for the supply of such settlers and hucksters, and members of the families of all these persons.

It is also understood that the settlers engaged in the cultivation of small tracts under agricultural licenses issued by the Panama Canal will continue to reside in the Canal Zone, subject to the conditions, as stated by the representative of the Government of the United States of America during the negotiations in regard to the settlers, to wit: that at present about 1,568 agricultural licenses in the Canal Zone are outstanding; that all of these licenses except a few, such as those for Chinese gardens, are being terminated by natural processes, that is, as the licensees abandon the ground, die, or fail to live up to the terms of the licenses; that it is the policy of the Panama Canal not to permit the license to be transferred to dependents when the licensee dies, except only in exceptional cases where real hardship would otherwise result; and it is also the policy of the Panama Canal to issue no new licenses, except an inconsequential number regarded as necessary to the Canal Zone, such as for Chinese gardens.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of our highest consideration.

The Honorable CORDELL HULL,

SIR: In connection with the part of Article III of the treaty signed today, in which the persons are specified who have a right to reside in the Canal Zone, we have the honor to state in the name of our Government that the restrictions established in the matter of residence in no wise affect the guests of hotels which the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Company maintains and manages for account of the Government of the United States of America in the Canal Zone, as such guests in entering such hotels do not go to the Zone as residents but as transients and the object of their stay in the Canal Zone for an indeterminate period is not to establish a permanent domicile there.

It is also understood that the restrictions do not apply to persons who wish to establish a permanent residence in any hotel in the Canal Zone either, provided such persons are among the number of those who have a right to reside in the Zone, in accordance with Section 2 of Article III of the treaty to which we have referred.

We wish to express our great pleasure at the statement made by the representatives of the Government of the United States of America during the negotiation of the treaty, that it is not the intention or desire of the Government of the United States of America to compete with Panamanian industry. We are also pleased to know with respect to the hotels in the Canal Zone that they were established for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the passenger traffic at a time when the hotels established in Panama were not entirely in position to do so; that as soon as this situation is satisfactorily altered the hotel business proper will be left in the hands of the industry established in Panama, and that the prosperity of the Republic of Panama in this, as in other respects, is earnestly desired by the United States of America.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of our highest consideration.

SIRS: With reference to Article III of the treaty signed today and to the joint statement issued by President Arias and President Roosevelt on October 17, 1933, I have the honor to advise you that the Canal Zone authorities will continue to take administrative measures to limit the use and services of hospitals, dispensaries, restaurants, lunch-rooms, messes, clubhouses, and moving picture houses maintained and operated in the Canal Zone to residents of the Canal Zone and to the following persons who may not be residents of the Canal Zone and members of their families actually living with them: officers and employees of the Government of the United States of America, the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Company, and members of the armed forces of the United States of America. As regards laundries and cleaning and pressing establishments so maintained and operated, similar restrictions will be made, and moreover such service of laundries and cleaning and pressing establishments will not be available for ships and their crews and passengers transiting the Canal so long as satisfactory service is furnished by similar establishments in Panama.

It is understood that these measures will not preclude admission to and services of the hospitals and dispensaries of the United States of America in cases of emergencies occurring within the Canal Zone, and that those facilities will likewise be available for officers and members of the crews of ships arriving at the Canal Zone ports; and that these measures will not preclude admission to the restaurants, lunch-rooms, messes, clubhouses, and moving picture houses of guests of the persons entitled to use these establishments when the admission or consumption expenses are paid by those persons.

The Honorable CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Your Excellency's note of today's date, reading as follows:

"With reference to Section 5 of Article III of the treaty signed today regulating the establishment in the Canal Zone of private business enterprises, I have the honor to express the understanding of the Government of the United States of America that the provisions of this section shall not prevent the establishment in the Canal Zone of private enterprises temporarily engaged in construction work having a direct relation to the operation, maintenance, sanitation or protection of the Canal."

In reply we have the honor to confirm the understanding set forth in Your Excellency's note under reference.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of our highest consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
March 2, 1936.

The Honorable Doctor RICARDO J. ALFARO,
The Honorable Doctor NARCISO GARAY,
Members of the Panamanian Treaty Commission,
Washington, D. C.

SIRS: With reference to the question of the sale to ships of goods imported into the Canal Zone by the Government of the United States of America, I have the honor to advise you that it will be the policy of this Government to effect such sales on the following basis:

Articles classed by the Panama Canal as "ships stores", such as articles, materials, and supplies necessary for the navigation, propulsion, and upkeep of vessels will continue to be sold as at present;

Articles classed by the Panama Canal as tourist or luxury goods will not be sold to ships;

Articles classed by the Panama Canal as "sea stores", such as articles for the use or consumption of the passengers and crew of the ship upon its voyage, and articles of other classes, will be sold at prices which, in the judgment of the Government of the United States of America and insofar as may appear feasible, will afford merchants of Panama fair opportunity to sell on equal terms. To arrive at the prices at which these articles will be sold to ships the retail prices of such articles to Canal Zone employees will be taken as a base, and a surcharge added thereto, when necessary; and no discount for purchases of large quantities will be granted to ships making such purchases.

For your information I am enclosing herewith four lists illustrative but not in any sense exhaustive of the various articles included in the four classes mentioned above, namely: (1) ships stores; (2) tourist or luxury goods; (3) sea stores; and (4) articles of other classes.

It is the hope of the Government of the United States of America that in benefit of Panamanian commerce merchants of Panama may be able to furnish in satisfactory quantities and qualities and at reasonable prices many or all of the articles classed as "sea stores" and as "articles of other classes" purchased by ships arriving at terminal ports of the Canal or transiting the Canal. It will be the policy of the United States of America that whenever and for so long as merchants of Panama are in fact able to furnish certain articles as so described in satisfactory quantities and qualities and at reasonable prices, the Canal Zone commissaries will refrain from selling like articles to ships.

In accordance with the policy of affording merchants of Panama full opportunity for making sales to ships, the launch facilities now employed by the Government of the United States of America in effecting sales to ships will be made available on equal terms to merchants of Panama, subject to appropriate administrative regulations of the Canal Zone.

The Governor of the Panama Canal will be prepared to appoint a representative to meet with a representative of Panamanian commerce appointed by your Government, in order that regular and continuing opportunity may be afforded for mutual conference and helpful exchange of views bearing on these questions, including the amount of the surcharge to be established, when necessary, in connection with "sea stores" and "articles of other classes".

Accept, Sirs, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

CORDELL HULL.

[Enclosures]

Ships' stores.—Fuel; Oil and grease; Hardware (bolts, nuts, nails, tools, et cetera); Paints; Disinfectants and insecticides; Rope, cable, chain.

Tourist or luxury goods.—Articles of personal adornment; Women's and children's fancy and foreign wearing apparel; Perfumes and expensive lotions and fancy and foreign toilet articles; Foreign high quality linens, table ware and house furnishing articles; Expensive and foreign bolt goods; Men's foreign articles and wearing apparel; Panama hats; Liquors, wines, and beer.

Sea stores.—Goods only of standard quality and almost without exception of American source; Food supplies; Medical supplies; Stationery and stationery supplies; Galley and table utensils and equipment; Table and bunk linen; Mosquito bars, canvas, cheese cloth; Work clothes; Cleaning materials and equipment.

Articles of other classes.—Goods similar to those listed under sea stores, but of better than standard quality; Many articles of many classes, such as those sold in department stores, excepting those articles classed under "tourist or luxury goods."

LEGACIÓN DE PANAMÁ,
Washington, March 2, 1936.

The Honorable CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Your Excellency's kind communication, in which you indicate what will be the policy of the United States of America in regard to the sale to ships of articles imported by the United States into the Canal Zone.

With regard to this matter the Government of the Republic of Panama must make a special reservation of its rights, in conformity with its opinion that the exemptions covered by Article XIII of the Convention of November 18, 1903, were stipulated exclusively for the benefit of the Canal enterprise, of the persons in the service of the United States of America in connection therewith, and of their families; but until an understanding is reached regarding this matter, the Panamanian Government desires to express its deep satisfaction at the decision of the Government of the United States of America to put into effect measures such as those set forth in the note to which this is a reply, for the purpose of restricting sales to ships, which in former times had been made without any limitation. The Panamanian Government feels an equal satisfaction at the basic purpose set forth in the said note that the business of provisioning vessels arriving at terminal ports of the Canal or transiting the Canal will be left in the hands of the merchants of Panama and that the Government of the United States of America will abstain from making such sales whenever and for so long as merchants of Panama effectively demonstrate their ability to supply merchandise to vessels in satisfactory quantities and qualities and at reasonable prices.

Our Government is prepared to appoint a representative selected by the business men of Panama to come to meet with a representative of the Canal Administration, in order that regular and continuing opportunity may be afforded for conference and cooperation for the accomplishment of the above-mentioned purposes.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of our highest consideration.

LEGACIÓN DE PANAMÁ,
Washington, March 2, 1936.

The Honorable CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In the course of the recent negotiations for a revision of the Convention of November 18, 1903, we have brought to the attention of your Government certain questions which have arisen in respect of that part of Article VII of the said Convention which refers to the construction by the United States of America of the water works and sewers in the cities of Panamá and Colón, and to the amortization of the cost thereof within a period of fifty years, thinking at first that these matters could be disposed of during the negotiations.

It was found, however, that to reach a complete understanding of these matters, a long, painstaking, and exhaustive examination of the technical, legal, and financial aspects thereof would be required, and it was therefore decided that formal discussion of these questions would be held in abeyance and that after the conclusion of the new treaty the two Governments would engage in friendly discussions in an endeavor to arrive at a fair and mutually satisfactory agreement.

It is the understanding of our Government that such discussions will involve a study of the contracts of September 30, 1910, between the Government of the Republic of Panama and the Isthmian Canal Commission, and an examination of the accounts between the two administrations relating to water rates in the cities of Panamá and Colón. In this connection, it is believed that due consideration should be given, among other things, to the representations made by the Panamanian Commission in the course of the recent negotiations, and especially to its memorandum of March 12, 1935, and its Aide-Memoire of August 14, 1935.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of our highest consideration.

March 2, 1936.

The Honorable Doctor RICARDO J. ALFARO,
The Honorable Doctor NARCISO GARAY,
Members of the Panamanian Treaty Commission,
Washington, D. C.

SIRS: I have the honor to refer to our conversations with respect to the effect upon the Monetary Agreement of June 20, 1904, between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama as modified by the exchanges of notes of March 26–April 2, 1930, and of May 28–June 6, 1931, of the action taken by the President of the United States of America in his Proclamation of January 31, 1934, reducing the weight of the gold dollar of the United States of America.

It has been recognized that, as a result of this action, the provision of the Monetary Agreement that the monetary unit of the Republic of Panama should be a gold Balboa of the weight of one gram, 672 milligrams, nine-tenths fine, is no longer consistent with the necessary condition of the Agreement that the standard unit of value of the United States of America, the dollar, and the standard unit of value of the Republic of Panama, the Balboa, should continue at a parity at the rate of one dollar for one Balboa. It has also been recognized that in the Republic of Panama and in the Canal Zone silver Balboas and fractional currency of the Republic are circulating together with United States currency at the rate of one Balboa for one dollar.

For these reasons, it is desirable that the existing Monetary Agreement, as modified, be further modified to make provision for the reduction of the weight of the gold Balboa so that the legal standard units of value of the Republic of Panama and of the United States of America shall be equal. Accordingly, for the purpose of Article VII of the General Treaty signed today, the Balboa shall be regarded as defined to consist of 987½ milligrams of gold of 0.900 fineness.

It is understood that the reduction in the weight of the gold Balboa shall not necessitate an alteration of the weight of the silver coins of the Republic of Panama, but that these shall continue to be of the same size, weight, and fineness as at present.

Notwithstanding any language contained in the existing Monetary Agreement, as modified, which has been interpreted or might be interpreted as limiting the number of coins of any denomination to be issued by the Republic of Panama within the total amount of coins of all denominations, it is now understood and agreed that the Monetary Agreement, as modified, shall not be considered as contemplating any such limitation, so that, as long as such total amount is not exceeded, that total amount may be apportioned among the coins of the various denominations referred to in the Agreement as may seem fitting to the Government of the Republic of Panama.

As a further modification of the existing Monetary Agreement, it is agreed that the Government of the United States of America shall not be required to accept Panamanian silver currency for the payment of tolls for the use of the Panama Canal.

I may say that the above understandings and agreements are acceptable to my Government, and that upon receipt of a note confirming them on behalf of the Government of the Republic of Panama, the Government of the United States of America will consider as further modified in accordance therewith the Monetary Agreement of June 20, 1904, as modified.

Accept, Sirs, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

The understandings and agreements stated in your note under acknowledgement are hereby confirmed by our Government, and, accordingly, the Government of the Republic of Panama will consider as further modified in accordance therewith the Mone-Monetary Agreement of June 20, 1904, as modified."

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of our highest consideration.

R. J. ALFARO.
NARCISO GARAY.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it was understood that we would take up at this time the question of advising and consenting to the ratification of the so-called Panama Treaty. It was agreed it should be taken up at this hour for the convenience of several Senators who desired to discuss the treaty.

I consider this one of the most important treaties that has been submitted to the Senate in a great while. Whether we consider the Canal in connection with the question of possible war in the future, or whether we consider the Canal from a purely commercial standpoint, in any event, it is the life line of the United States. There is no doubt that this thin Canal across the Isthmus of Panama is subject to destruction. It may be destroyed from without or it may be destroyed from within. In any event, the destruction of the Canal would be a tremendous loss to the commerce of this country, and, in the event of war at any time, its destruction would be a disaster. Looking far into the future, without the Canal it might be possible that our country would have to prepare to have a dominating Navy both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, so far as its defense is concerned.

The treaty was entered into March 2, 1936. It was ratified by Panama in December 1936. It has been pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate ever since. The committee have not been negligent in the matter, they have not been inactive.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has just called attention to the fact that the treaty was ratified by Panama 3 years ago. In view of the fact that the Panamanian Government has ratified it, I ask what effect a supplemental agreement made 3 years later by the Secretary of State of the United States and the Panamanian Minister has upon the situation?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that when a government interprets the language of a treaty it governs the construction forever thereafter, whether the interpretation is made the day after the treaty is signed or 3 years after it is signed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not see how the Senator can take that position, in view of the fact that the Panamanian Legislature acted without knowing the interpretation put upon the treaty by those who had no legal authority to bind their country in that aspect.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator's memory does not serve him, because at the time the treaty was negotiated minutes of interpretation were made. The minutes of interpretation were before the Panamanian Parliament and the minutes of interpretation then made have since been confirmed by Government action.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the memory of the Senator from Michigan serves him completely accurately. The notes to which the Senator from Nevada refers were so inadequate and so unsatisfactory to the Government of the United States, and particularly to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, that a note dated February 1, 1939, was necessary to clear up finally the major point of controversy, and I submit to the Senator that the Panama Legislature certainly did not know in 1936 what notes were going to be exchanged in 1939.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator will examine the report of the subcommittee, of which he was a member, he will ascertain that the notes were in the exact words of the minutes. The only difference was that the minutes were not authenticated by the Government. They were the minutes of the negotiators. The Government has since finally confirmed the minutes of interpretation.

As I was saying, this treaty has been pending in the committee for 3 years. I am not surprised that such is the case, because when the treaty was first sent to the Senate 3 years ago it did not meet with the approval of either the War Department or the Navy Department. It did not meet with their approval because the minutes of interpretation, as was afterward disclosed, were not submitted to either the War Department or the Navy Department.

Returning to the minutes of interpretation, which bear quite materially on the construction of the treaty——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to say that I agree with the Senator that the notes are of the greatest importance, because this treaty is the only one I have ever seen in my life which contains 6 pages of treaty and 13 pages of notes to try to tell what the treaty says.

Mr. PITTMAN. They were very careful to interpret it.

Article X was the controversial article, both in the War Department and in the Navy Department. Article X reads as follows:

ARTICLE X

In case of an international conflagration or the existence of any threat of aggression which would endanger the security of the Republic of Panama or the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama will take such measures of prevention and defense as they may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests. Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one government to take, and which may affect the territory under the jurisdiction of the other government, will be the subject of consultation between the two governments.

It was urged that the words "the subject of consultation" meant that the United States Government could not take independent action without the consent of the Panama Government.

We now turn to the minutes of interpretation adopted at that time. These minutes have since been authenticated by notes between the two governments. Let me read the minutes:

1. In connection with the declared willingness of both the Government of the United States of America and the government of the Republic of Panama to cooperate for the purpose of insuring the full and perpetual enjoyment of the benefits of all kinds which the Canal should afford them (art. I of the general treaty of March 2, 1936), the word "maintenance" as applied to the Canal shall be construed as permitting expansion and new construction when these are undertaken by the Government of the United States of America in accordance with the said treaty.

The word "maintenance" allows the United States Government—what?

Expansion and new construction when these are undertaken by the Government of the United States of America in accordance with the said treaty.

These are the minutes of interpretation which have now been authenticated by the two governments.

2. The holding of maneuvers or exercises by the armed forces of the United States of America in territory adjacent to the Canal Zone is an essential measure of preparedness for the protection of the neutrality of the Panama Canal and, when said maneuvers or exercises should take place, the parties shall follow the procedure set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 2, 1936.

Here is the important minute. Here is the important interpretation given at the time, and since that time authenticated:

3. As set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 16, 1935, in the event of an emergency so sudden as to make action of a preventive character imperative to safeguard the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, and if by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the Government of Panama as provided in article X of said treaty, the Government of the United States of America need not delay action to meet this emergency pending consultation, although it will make every effort in the event that such consultation has not been effected prior to taking action to consult as soon as it may be possible with the Panamanian Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. What the Senator has just read is an extract from some note construing article X, but the difficulty about that is that article X must speak for itself. I read article X:

In case of an international conflagration or the existence of any threat of aggression which would endanger the security of the Republic of Panama or the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama will take such measures of prevention and defense as they may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests.

Further:

Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one Government to take, and which may affect the territory under the jurisdiction of the other Government.

Which will be Panama.

will be the subject of consultation between the two governments.

It seems to me that under that language we are bound to consult Panama before we take any action.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator from Georgia will let me answer the Senator from Texas, I shall then yield to him.

Mr. President, that would appear to be a reasonable construction, because it is only a matter of consultation. But at the time they negotiated that article the negotiators agreed that if an emergency arose requiring action on the part of the United States Government, it might take separate action without consultation, but there should be consultation thereafter as soon as possible. That was not only contained in the minutes, but it appeared in the communications.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is a principle of law that when there is a written contract no collateral or outside agreement is effective in any way unless made a part of the contract.

Mr. PITTMAN. When there is doubtful language in a contract, it will be interpreted by recourse to the intention of the party if expressed in writing at the time the contract was entered into.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the language is ambiguous, that is possible, but where the language is not ambiguous, the instrument must speak for itself.

Mr. PITTMAN. All the negotiators thought it might be ambiguous, and therefore the meaning was put down in the minutes of the negotiations. But that was not satisfactory to our Government or our committee. Consequently, on February 1, 1939, a letter was addressed to Señor Dr. Don Augusto S. Boyd, Minister of Panama. The letter says:

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the general treaty signed between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama on March 2, 1936, and to the record of the proceedings of the negotiations leading to this accord. As you may recall, on several occasions during the course of the negotiations, it was found necessary to discuss and to reach a mutual understanding as to the interpretation to be placed upon certain draft provisions eventually incorporated in the signed treaty. These discussions and understandings were, after each meeting, embodied in the duly attested typewritten record of the proceedings of the treaty negotiations.

It seems possible that, following the favorable report at the close of the last session of Congress by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate on the general treaty and accompanying conventions, the individual Members of the Senate in their consideration during the current session of Congress of the treaty and conventions, may ask for clarification as to the precise meaning of certain important provisions of the general treaty which affect the security and neutrality of the Panama Canal. With a view to anticipating these inquiries, and in the hope of avoiding further delay on this account in the consideration of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, it has seemed to my Government advisable to set forth in an exchange of notes between our two Governments the substance of some of these abovementioned understandings as mutually reached. I should be grateful, accordingly, if you would inform me whether your Government shares the understanding of my Government upon the points which follow in subsequent paragraphs.

And then follows the language which I previously read. That letter was answered on February 1 by Señor Dr. Don Augusto S. Boyd, Minister of Panama, setting out the language of the minutes which I have read.

I take it, therefore, there can be no question that the language "will be the subject of consultation" under the interpretation given at that time, and confirmed later by the Minister of Panama, means that the consultation does not have to take place in advance of action by our Government.

I should like to have the Senator from Georgia, who has discussed that question in the minority report very carefully, express his views.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to ask a question. The Senator asserts that he thinks an exchange of notes now makes it indisputably plain that the consultation does not need to precede action if there is an emergency.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does not that still leave the argument as to whether or not there is an emergency?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Nevada thinks not. The Senator from Nevada thinks it is perfectly evident that the United States acts, determines the emergency, and consults as soon thereafter as may be possible.

I should like to have the Senator from Georgia express himself on that point. He gave careful study to it as chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this was one of the provisions of the treaty to which the subcommittee gave great attention. The fact was called to the attention of the subcommittee that at one time perhaps the War and Navy Departments were fearful that the treaty did not sufficiently safeguard the interests of our country in its defense. After further consideration, and a review of the notes taken at the time and the correspondence passing between the Panamanian Government and our own, both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy agreed that it did adequately provide for our defense.

Let me call attention to one factor in addition to the statements already made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the chairman of the committee. This treaty does not abrogate or touch certain provisions of the existing treaty, the 1903 treaty. Among other things, article XXIII of the 1903 treaty between Panama and the United States is preserved.

Article XXIII reads as follows:

> If it should become necessary at any time to employ armed forces for the safety or protection of the Canal or of the ships that make use of the same, or the railway and auxiliary works, the United States shall have the right at all times and in its discretion to use its police and its land and naval forces or to establish fortifications for these purposes.

That is in the treaty, unaffected by it; and, read in connection with and in the light of what the 1936 treaty undertakes to do, it strikes me that there is no real ambiguity.

It will be borne in mind that under the 1936 treaty, the one now under consideration, the entire status between the Panamanian Republic and the United States is changed. Under the 1903 treaty the United States was given virtually a protectorate over Panama. It incurred the obligation to defend Panama. It secured a great many rights in terms rather absolute; but it also assumed a great obligation. In 1936, with the Canal completed and open to the public as well as to the uses of both Panama and the United States, with all the preliminary considerations that had to be safeguarded in the acquisition of the right to construct the Canal and in the construction of the Canal out of the way save the right to protect and to maintain the neutrality of the Canal, and save the right of expansion if necessary to enlarge the Canal in order to take care of the commerce that must pass through it, a new treaty is made, a treaty which surrenders the rights given the United States as the protector of the Republic of Panama. It recognizes Panama as a Republic; and Panama assumes the mutual obligation, along with the United States, of protecting the Canal, and preserving and protecting the neutrality of the Canal. The Republic of Panama assumes an equal obligation.

When we come to article X of the treaty, with those facts in mind, it seems to me there is no difficulty in understanding what it means. The two governments are contracting on terms of equality so far as the integrity of both is concerned, and provision is made for the mutual protection of the Canal and its neutrality. Of course, it is provided that if one country sees fit to act to protect its rights, there shall be consultation. At the time the treaty was under consideration the notes clearly disclose that the United States, in case of a great emergency, was not obliged to engage in consultation prior to taking such steps as it deemed essential; or, to go back to article XXIII of the 1903 treaty, which is preserved, such steps as in its discretion it saw fit to take.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at this point?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to yield in a moment, if the Senator will withhold his question and permit me to finish this thought.

Not only did the notes disclose what the contracting parties had in mind—that is to say, that a preliminary or prior consultation was not, in certain events and under certain emergencies, absolutely necessary—but the two countries having recognized the complete sovereignty of each other; that is, the United States having relinquished its protectorate and having treated with Panama as an independent Republic, the United States recognized its obligation to consult when the two nations were mutually defending the Canal or taking steps to defend the Canal or to preserve and protect the neutrality of the Canal. That is a mutual obligation. The right of the United States to assert its own independent right to protect the Canal in the face of a great emergency is preserved. The notes so show. The notes were taken before Panama ratified the treaty. Then, the question having subsequently arisen, the Secretary of State addressed to the Panamanian Government the explicit note which the chairman of the committee has read. The explicit reply conceded the right of the United States to proceed in the defense of the Canal in the event of some great emergency. That right is very clearly set forth and very clearly conceded.

It is not a proper interpretation to say that the treaty must speak for itself, that it is not ambiguous in any sense, and that the notes are no part of it. The notes were part of the treaty, without the subsequent correspondence; but the subsequent correspondence between the two Governments not only does not weaken the effect of the original understanding, but strengthens it, because one party to the contract not having ratified it, that party is again assured that its right to protect its vital interest in the preservation of the Canal is not affected by the agreement which prima facie, would indicate a purpose to engage in a consultation prior to taking the necessary steps to preserve the Canal.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is arguing that the new mutuality of obligation to defend the Canal is a source of strength to us in the interpretation of the new language. I submit to the Senator that the new mutuality of defense circumscribes our right of independent action rather than enlarges it; and the very fact that we are now establishing a mutuality of defense makes the serious question under article X more pressing. To my way of thinking, if we still maintained our exclusive right of defense, there would be far less danger of misunderstanding article X. To my way of thinking, the new establishment of mutuality increases the difficulty in relying upon article X for our rights.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I am not sure that the Senator from Georgia has fully answered the question which was in my mind. From a reading of article X of the pending treaty it will be observed that we have agreed to take such measures of prevention and defense as they—meaning the two countries—may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests. It says:

> Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one government to take * * * will be the subject of consultation between the two governments.

That obligation of consultation is limited by the language "for the protection of their common interests."

Is it not true that there are interests in the Canal which are peculiarly and exclusively the interests of the United States, with respect to which, under the language of article X, we would not be under any obligation to consult because they are not common interests? It occurs to me that the Senator answered the question when he said that the defense of the Canal was an exclusive interest of the United States. I had rather assumed—and if I am mistaken I should like to be corrected—that our interest in the Canal and its preservation and defense was a peculiar and exclusive interest of the United States, and that we could act to defend the Canal without recourse to consultation because we would be obliged to consult only about the common interests. Am I correct in that interpretation?

Mr. GEORGE. I have taken the identical view which the distinguished Senator from Maine has just so well expressed. For the purpose of the RECORD, I should like now to read the whole of the language of article X, and invite the attention of the Senate thereto:

> In case of an international conflagration or the existence of any threat of aggression which would endanger the security of the Republic of Panama or the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama will take such measures of prevention and defense as they may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests. Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one Government to take, and which may affect the territory under the jurisdiction of the other Government, will be the subject of consultation between the two Governments.

Even if it be conceded that standing alone, without the explanatory notes taken in the conference, and without the subsequent reaffirmation of the understanding then had by the representatives of the two Governments, there would be some ambiguity, it seems to me there can be no reasonable doubt now of the meaning of this provision of the treaty, and that that meaning is read into it in such a way as fully to protect the interests of the United States. When it is remembered, as I have already tried to say, that the status of the United States with respect to Panama is changed by the terms of this treaty, when certain common obligations which did not exist under the original treaty have been assumed by Panama and the United States, when Panama is taking on herself a great obligation to act jointly with the United States for the protection of the Canal and the neutrality and security of the Canal, and when it is recalled that article XXIII of the original treaty is not affected by this treaty, it seems to me to be clear beyond peradventure of a doubt that if the United States in any great emergency should deem immediate action necessary upon her part, she would take it and would be absolutely justified and protected under the terms of the treaty in taking that action.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And are we the sole judges of what a great emergency is?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; I do not think the United States could captiously raise the claim of an emergency, or manufacture one.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I ask if we are the sole judges as to whether an emergency amounts to the dignity and magnitude the Senator describes?

Mr. GEORGE. I think so, so far as the protection of the Canal is concerned. So far as the protection of the primary rights of the United States in the maintenance of the Canal is concerned, I think she would have a right to do that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Article XXIII of the original treaty of 1903 says:

> If it should become necessary at any time to employ armed forces for the safety or protection of the Canal, or of the ships that make use of the same, or the railways and auxiliary works, the United States shall have the right, at all times and in its discretion, to use its police and its land and naval forces or to establish fortifications for these purposes.

It seems to me that that provision in the original treaty is modified in no respect whatever by the treaty of 1936.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is correct. It is not modified. It is left as it stands in the original treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Then, when we come to article X, it reads:

> In case of an international conflagration or the existence of any threat of aggression which would endanger the security of the Republic of Panama or the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama will take such measures of prevention and defense as they may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests. Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one government to take, and which may affect the territory under the jurisdiction of the other government, will be the subject of consultation between the two governments.

Adding to that the letter accompanying the 1936 treaty, in which we are told that if an emergency arises the United States may act without consultation, may determine for itself the existence of the emergency and what shall be done, I cannot see any right in the Canal which is not protected by the two treaties. Article XXIII protects the matter as a general thing, and the letter in connection with the 1936 treaty protects the right to act when an emergency arises.

Mr. GEORGE. I agree with the Senator's view.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield for a question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the treaty says "will be the subject of consultation between the two governments," does that mean before action or after action?

Mr. BORAH. In connection with——

Mr. CONNALLY. Not in connection with anything. Does that language mean before or afterward?

Mr. BORAH. It might be either.

Mr. CONNALLY. What would be the use of doing something, and then afterward consulting about it? Is not the clear implication of that language that the consultation must take place before action?

Mr. BORAH. That might be true; but when it is read in connection with the letter——

Mr. CONNALLY. I know about the letter. I just want to get the Senator's interpretation of the treaty as it stands. It seems to me that if we consider the clear language of the treaty, forgetting about the letter—the letter may cure it; I do not know—the implication is inescapable that the consultation must take place first.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; but when the Senator speaks about the treaty aside from the letter, let me say that in my opinion there is no treaty aside from the letter. The letter is a part of the treaty.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is another point. The letter sets out in haec verba the minutes; and the Secretary, in writing to the Panamanian Government, states that the minutes were made at the time of the conference. Evidently there was some ambiguity in the minds of the negotiators, particularly the negotiator on behalf of the United States; so they discussed the question at the time they wrote the treaty. They made the minutes at the time they wrote it. Those minutes governed the parliamentary body of Panama. They were not considered sufficient by our Government, and therefore I suggested to the Secretary of State that he have the Panamanian Government authenticate and confirm the minutes before we were asked to act on the treaty here, which was done.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. PITTMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GERRY. Was that done before the treaty was agreed to by the Panamanian Government?

Mr. PITTMAN. It was. It was done at the time the negotiators were negotiating and writing the treaty, which was a month or more prior to ratification by the Panamanian Government.

Mr. GERRY. Was there any record of that fact? Was that fact brought to the attention of the ratifying powers of the Panamanian Government?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no information on that subject.

Now let me call attention to some very plain language in article I. I think this language is quite pertinent in the consideration of the interpretation of article X. This is article I of the new treaty:

There shall be a perfect, firm, and inviolable peace and sincere friendship between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama and between their citizens.

In view of the official and formal opening of the Panama Canal on July 12, 1920, the United States of America and the Republic of Panama declare that the provisions of the Convention of November 18, 1903—

What? Mind you, they are reaffirming the 1903 treaty. I should like to have the Senator from Rhode Island listen to this language as confirmation of what was meant, because this is in article I of the treaty:

the United States of America and the Republic of Panama declare that the provisions of the Convention of November 18, 1903, contemplate the use, occupation, and control by the United States of America of the Canal Zone and of the additional lands and waters under the jurisdiction of the United States of America for the purposes of the efficient maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the Canal and of its auxiliary works.

The United States of America will continue the maintenance of the Panama Canal for the encouragement and use of interoceanic commerce, and the two Goverments declare their willingness to cooperate, as far as it is feasible for them to do so, for the purpose of insuring the full and perpetual enjoyment of the benefits of all kinds which the Canal should afford the two nations that made possible its construction as well as all nations interested in world trade.

Again they recognize that the 1923 treaty meant, and still means—and it is still preserved—that the United States Government should protect the Panama Canal and auxiliary works. That, taken into consideration with article X, which provides for action by the respective governments in the protection of the Canal, and taken in connection with the minutes of negotiation, which show that the treaty does not require the Government of the United States to await consultation, but to act, seems to me to make it quite plain what the intention was.

Let me call attention to another matter. I have read the word "maintenance" in the provision that the Government shall continue the maintenance of the Panama Canal and auxiliary works. In this note the Minister of Panama says with regard to the meaning of the word "maintenance":

In connection with the declared willingness of both the Government of the United States of America and the government of the Republic of Panama to cooperate for the purpose of insuring the full and perpetual enjoyment of the benefits of all kinds which the Canal should afford them (art. I of the general treaty of March 2, 1936), the word "maintenance" as applied to the Canal shall be construed as permitting expansion and new construction when these are undertaken by the Government of the United States of America in accordance with the said treaty.

So the word "maintenance" was construed as expansion, reconstruction, or new construction. I do not think there can be any question about that.

I admit that at first the representatives of the Army and Navy who examined the treaty were under the impression that there must first be consultation, but, unfortunately, at the time it was submitted to the War and Navy Departments, the minutes of construction and interpretation which were adopted at the time of the negotiation were not submitted.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. The question bothering me is that, while the treaty-making powers of Panama have agreed to the treaty, there is nothing to show that they knew anything about the notes, the negotiations. What they agreed to was the treaty.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think they are presumed to know about the notes. When their duly appointed negotiators—and they had duly appointed negotiators—in negotiating a treaty, make minutes of the terms of the negotiations and interpretations, and the Government ratifies the treaty and submits it to us with the same notes of interpretation, further confirmed by the Government authentication, I think they would be estopped to question the notes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does not a reading of the letters passing between the Department of State and the Government of Panama disclose that they were familiar with these matters?

Mr. GERRY. That is the question I was asking the chairman of the committee. That is what I wanted to have made clear.

Mr. BORAH. That is really what the letters were about.

Mr. GERRY. The question I was asking was, Was that the action of the treaty-making power?

Mr. PITTMAN. It was the action of the negotiators under the law of Panama, apparently. We had our Secretary of State.

Mr. GERRY. Did they ratify the treaty, or did it have to be submitted again to the Legislature of Panama?

Mr. PITTMAN. It was negotiated as any other treaty would be between the representatives of the two governments, whose authority was set forth. In the negotiation of the treaty the minutes of interpretation were made, and they were attached to the treaty and sent back to each of the respective governments, and they have been a part of the treaty ever since.

Mr. BORAH. The letter from the Panamanian Government says:

I take pleasure in informing Your Excellency—

That is, the Secretary of State—that I have been authorized by my Government to effect this exchange of notes and to clarify the points propounded by Your Excellency—

The Secretary of State—and which, for greater clarity, are set forth in the English language as follows.

He had been authorized by his Government to clarify the language we have been discussing today.

Mr. GERRY. The point I make is that the representative of Panama stated that he had been authorized to clarify. Then the question arises whether, when the legislative representatives of Panama received the treaty for ratification, they ratified the treaty from a consideration of the language contained in it, and knew nothing about the explanation in the notes. If they had had the notes, they might have put an entirely different interpretation on the treaty. That is why I am raising the question.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from Nevada, when the instrument went back to the Panama Legislature for ratification, these interpretive notes went with the definitive treaty. Is not that correct?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true. It is so stated in the letter of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MINTON. So they did have these matters before them at the time they ratified?

Mr. GERRY. Who ratified the treaty on the part of the Panama Government? That is really what I should like to know.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was ratified as other treaties are ratified.

Mr. GERRY. The question is whether they had these notes before them, and had knowledge of them, when they ratified the treaty.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, on Friday last the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] were very kind to me, because I had to be absent during the afternoon, and they postponed the consideration of the treaty now pending until this afternoon at 4 o'clock. I am obliged to them, and I express my sense of obligation to them for their consideration.

The Senator from Nevada is quite right. This is an important treaty. It is important particularly at this time, because it involves the life line of the Republic, and we should not do anything which would in the slightest degree militate against the safety of the Panama Canal, or our ability to protect it, and protect it fully.

Mr. President, this particular treaty has been before us for 3 years. Only now has it been brought up. There seems to be some haste at the present moment for the ratification of the treaty, which perhaps may be perfectly legitimate and perfectly plain. But unfortunately we have had little time to look into it in the fashion in which it should be examined.

The first treaty concerning the Panama Canal was made in 1903. It was a treaty which was in reality negotiated by Theodore Roosevelt and his Secretary of State, and it was signed by the representatives of Panama—one representative, indeed, Bunau-Varilla, an individual who had lived in Panama, had become a soldier of fortune there, and had become the representative of Panama.

I may digress a moment to mention him. He went back to France during the World War. He fought there at Verdun during the war. When I met him he had lost a leg, and he had just exactly the same mood, the same characteristics, the same good nature he had always manifested. But it was remarkable to me to find this man, old as he was, going back to the land of his birth in its time of stress and fighting its battles. That, of course, is apart from his participation in the making of the treaty. If Senators wish to read about the early days of the Panama Canal, concerning the initiation of the work on the Canal by Theodore Roosevelt, they can find no more interesting work on the subject, no more dramatic recital of those events, than are contained in the volume which Bunau-Varilla wrote at that time. Panama then was a morass, a wilderness. It has now a population which is less than that of many of our States. That population consists of various races. Very few of its people are our sort of people.

Panama did not exist until Roosevelt cut it off from Colombia, and then we paid $20,000,000 for that during Harding's administration, I think it was. But Panama during all this time has been of no value as an ally, of no value in the protection of the Panama Canal, of no value by way of fighting force; and any thoughts that Panama will go to bat with us when the day comes that we may have to defend the Panama Canal are wholly illusory and born of a fevered imagination. It is not in the possibilities that that can occur.

The Panama Canal will be protected, if protected, by us. The Panama Canal, if it be retained, and if it serve its purpose, will do so because of our efforts; and the Panama Canal, because of the peculiar relation we have to it, should not be in any degree tied, or hamstrung, or put in a strait jacket by a treaty made by the United States of America.

The treaty of 1903 gave us ample and full authority. The treaty of 1936 does not do the same thing. You may talk until doomsday concerning those two treaties, and you cannot find that one parallels with respect to the protection of the Canal with the other, and you have to go back to 1903 and the treaty of that time to be certain of what Panama's ability was for the defense of the Canal.

I could stand here all night and talk to the Senate about various provisions of this treaty. The one to which the Senator from Michigan referred of itself is enough to condemn the treaty, when you are dealing now delicately with such a subject as the life line of the Republic. That of itself—I do not care how legalistic or casuistic you may be—is sufficient to put us upon our guard, and sufficient to make us careful in dealing in any way with this particular matter.

ARTICLE I

The two main problems confronting our Government in the operation of the Panama Canal are, first, to keep it open for our fleets in the aid of national defense; and, secondly, to expedite water-going domestic and world commerce, and the remarks I am about to make will be confined largely to the points bearing upon those two items.

The Republic of Panama has complied—and oh, how fulsome in our praise we are that the Republic of Panama has complied with all the provisions of the treaty to be performed by it. And then we, from that premise, go on and treat Panama in a manner different from what we treated her in 1903, and give her power—power to interfere with us when they may wish in anything that may occur respecting the defense of the Canal.

ARTICLE II

The Republic of Panama has complied with the obligations of the Convention of November 18, 1903, no more loyally than has our Government. In fact, we have discharged practically all of our obligations under this treaty, have bought and paid for certain rights to be exercised in the maintenance and operation of the Canal, and have not only guaranteed the independence of the Republic of Panama, but have also guaranteed the neutrality of the Canal. In view of these obligations, there would seem to be no good reason to justify us in abandoning our rights given to us under article II of the Convention of November 18, 1903, to occupy and control lands and water, in addition to those we already have, should it be found necessary to do so in the future. The rapid development of airplanes, submarines, scientific aids to navigation, and others that we know not what, now, will undoubtedly make it necessary to occupy additional locations in the Republic of Panama, if we are to operate and defend the Canal in a way to meet modern requirements. As an example, almost any day it may be necessary to establish other lighthouses, radio directing ray stations, and so forth. I fail to see why we should renounce our rights to these things that we have paid for and that do not comprise the sovereignty of Panama to any additional extent. It must be remembered that after all the Republic of Panama compromised its sovereignty when it sold to us the extensive rights that we acquired in the Convention of November 18, 1903. In the last paragraph of article II, the possibility of acquiring these locations is recognized, but the method provided by this paragraph of requiring the two governments to agree upon such measures as may be necessary is, to say the least, a hazy proposition that would result in mulcting our Government out of large sums of money, not to mention serious delays that would ensue in attempting such a cooperation.

The records of the joint commission to fix fair land values, as provided in article VI of the Convention of November 18, 1903, will demonstrate clearly the confusion and expense involved that would ensue to our Government if this treaty is approved, for in this present treaty our rights would be much less defined than in the above-mentioned Convention.

ARTICLE III

Article III will hamper the operation of the Canal and especially in expediting shipping, for the methods proposed by this article and the letters exchanged touching on it show plainly that it is proposed to settle all disputes growing out of the Panama merchants selling supplies to ships transiting the Canal by a committee of two, one of whom is to be a Canal Zone official and the other a Panamanian official, appointed by the merchants of Panama. It would seem to be a waste of language to point out that no scheme is possible that would be more prolific of bickerings, misunderstandings, and delays in supplying ships transiting the Canal, whose one object is to expedite these ships.

ARTICLE V

It is not quite clear why this article is substituted for article IX of the convention of November 18, 1903, unless it be to weaken the power of Canal officials in the ports of Panama and Colon. The operations of the Canal during the World War demonstrated clearly that it is utterly impossible to guarantee the neutrality of the Canal unless some authority of the officials operating it should extend to the ports of Panama and Colon. It must be remembered that these ports are simply ports of the Canal terminals themselves; and that unneutral acts could be committed, or an assembly of war material would be possible, while the Canal officials would have to stand by helpless, unless they had some authority over such activities. As a matter of fact, when we entered the World War it was found that the Panama Government itself recognized the necessity of becoming a belligerent and almost immediately joined us in the war. If this had not been done, these ports could not have been handled with the terminal ports of the Canal, and the situation would have early arrived at a point of absurdity in having the terminal ports of the Canal operated by a belligerent while the areas within these ports were supposed to be neutral.

ARTICLE VI

By omitting the phrase "or by the exercise of the right of eminent domain" we simply open the door to the Panamanian Government, as well as Panamanian citizens who may own land or rights that we may require for the operation of the Canal to enter into interminable lawsuits, delays, and final exactions of costs and prices out of all proportion to the property concerned. I say this after observing for 2½ years the operation of the joint commission in attempting to fix fair values of property taken over in the Canal Zone. It is difficult for me to see why we should give up the right of eminent domain which, I take it, is one of the large items we acquired when we purchased the Canal Zone from Panama.

In abrogating the third paragraph of article VII of the convention we are, in my opinion, inviting conflict and misunderstanding with the Republic of Panama instead of salving their feelings and attempting to be friendly with them, which, as stated in the attached papers, is one of the reasons for this treaty. It would seem to be easily recognized that in case of disturbances and disorders in Colon and Panama or anywhere in the Republic of Panama that affected seriously the operation of the Canal, we would be forced to step in or abandon our obligations assumed when we built the Canal and undertook to operate it. It may be said that if the situation became acute, we would step in anyway; but certainly we should not abrogate powers we now have, in a new treaty that we would be required to violate, because the considerations would have such a large national bearing.

ARTICLE X

It is well to remember that in case of an international conflagration or the existence of any international disturbance or war between two nations, our duties and responsibilities in the operation of the Canal become immediately very much alive and subject to the aggression of one or both belligerents who may be attempting to use the Canal to the disadvantage of their opponent. In other words, our obligation to keep the Canal neutral will require positive and quick action at all times when a war is in progress anywhere in the world. With such responsibilities confronting us, it is impossible for me to see how we could agree to the arrangement provided in this article for the solution of these problems, namely, to make it the "subject of consultation between the two Governments." I cannot help but believe that the people who drew this article did not realize the necessity for positive and quick action at times to maintain the neutrality of the Canal when we are not involved in a war, an even more vital consideration when we might happen to be a belligerent in a war. Panama has no responsibility for the operation of the Canal or for maintaining its neutrality; and still we obligate her to make considerations vitally involving this, the subject of consultation with Panama before we take action. When Panama sold to us the rights for the Canal Zone and signed the Convention of 1903 she vacated certain sovereign rights as a nation; and no amount of treaties, negotiations, nor agreements can return these sovereign rights to Panama short of our evacuating the Canal Zone and turning the Canal over to the Republic of Panama. Even then it would be necessary for us to guarantee the independence of the Republic of Panama which, after all, contains fewer inhabitants than many of the Middle West States of our country.

I have not touched on the radio or on the conveniences provided for the release of radio communication, or the one with regard to the construction of a transisthmian highway, as I have no particular information on this, but I imagine both of them have a very vital bearing on the defenses of the Canal.

Mr. President, the treaty before us and the treaty of 1903 were not the only treaties. There was a treaty of 1927, which Calvin Coolidge sent to the Senate of the United States and after some time withdrew. I cannot recall why it was withdrawn or what was the particular contest upon it. However, I know that it was withdrawn because it contained various provisions relating to Americans which were obnoxious to some of the Members of the Senate at that time.

There are other provisions relating to Americans besides the one to which we have referred. What do Americans amount to in these days? They have no standing anywhere. I confess that they are nobodies and should not be considered. However, the treaty deals with Americans in the Canal Zone in a fashion which we ought to resent and ought not permit. I was told that Americans may not afterward do any business in that particular territory. They may not do anything which they have been accustomed to do. When they die their business dies with them. They may not bequeath it as an American might ordinarily bequeath his business. We say that because the Panamanians desire it and because a good-neighbor policy demands it we leave Panama and the Panama Canal Zone to the people who reside there and who are perhaps natives of that territory. But remember that the people residing down there are a very great mixture indeed. I had the figures in percentages but I have forgotten them. It makes little difference anyhow. When I was down there one of the strange things I found was English cockneys among the colored men who drove tourists about in the cities of Colon and Cristobal. They talked just exactly as English cockneys talk. They were brought there at the time the Panama Canal was built because they could stand the climate and were able to bear the burden of it. They were the principal ones who built the canal from the laboring standpoint.

Another thing has been done in this connection. It is all right. I believe in it. The treaty never was presented to the United States Senate until we had agreed to give to the Panamanians what we would not give to our own people, and that is an agreement to pay them in 100-cent dollars for the money we owed them. They asked for that agreement and insisted on it, until finally we agreed to pay it. The amount we agreed to pay them was $250,000 a year in addition to the other sums that were paid; and that $250,000 a year was to be paid in gold coin. When we deflated the dollar in our country they insisted that they should have a sufficient amount to make up the balance of the deflation, and we paid it. I say we ought to have done it. I am very glad we did, because we made the contract, just as we made it with our own citizens. However, we gave them what we did not give our own people. That is the only distinction I make, and the only thing of which I complain.

I notice it is now 20 minutes to 6; but I am going to read some letters before I conclude. I am going to read them because I want them in the RECORD. They are letters from Americans, letters which very plainly describe the situation.

According to the newspapers, the proposed treaty with the Republic of Panama will soon be submitted to the Senate for ratification.

I understand that the proposed treaty, among other things, abrogates so much of articles I and II of the existing treaty as respectively provide (a) that the United States guarantees the independence of Panama, and (b) that the United States may acquire additional territory in Panama which is deemed necessary or convenient for the operation or protection of the Canal.

The abrogation of articles I and II of the treaty of 1903 is, in my opinion, extremely inadvisable for the United States and can result in no real advantage to the people of Panama. The argument made by our State Department that these provisions of the proposed treaty are desirable to effectuate the good-neighbor policy is demonstrably unsound; indeed, such abrogation would have precisely the opposite ultimate effect.

For, whether provided in the treaty or not, it is clear that our own interests will require our intervention whenever necessary to guarantee the security of Panama, and this regardless of the consent of the Government of that country. Today, under article I of the existing treaty, we have the acknowledged legal right to intervene—a right which is also embodied in the constitution of Panama.

Prior to its independence, Panama suffered from revolutions after almost every election. They were not revolutions designed to effect independence, but merely revolts to overthrow the ruling faction or in protest against what were deemed unfair electoral practices. Since the 1903 treaty there has been only one revolution in Panama, and that lasted but a single day.

Just recall that! We remember—you all do, doubtless—how revolution after revolution occurred in Panama, and how Panama, trying to get her independence, had to break loose from Colombia and was always unable to do so until Roosevelt, with the "big stick," undertook to do the job in order to get the Panama Canal.

As everyone acquainted with Panama is aware, the reason there have not been more frequent upheavals is the general recognition of the fact that without the approval of the United States a revolution would be a futility, since it would immediately be throttled by the ever-present Canal Zone garrison's merely blocking access to the only two important cities of the Republic, both of which are practically surrounded by Canal Zone territory. As a result Panama, for a Latin-American country, has had an extremely peaceful existence in the last 35 years.

You may talk about your yielding to Panama upon various questions involving power, and you may say that you have made Panama a sovereign state with us to deal with the Panama Canal; but all that is mere moonshine. We do not do anything of the sort, and we do not enable Panama to become a strong or a sovereign state by the mere fiction of pretending that she is working in common with us.

But let us once relinquish our admitted right to intervene, and certain unfortunate results will inevitably follow: (a) Revolutions will be encouraged, since it always will be doubtful whether the United States would intervene; (b) the Canal works will be endangered, not only because of proximity, but because one faction or another will conceive it desirable to embroil the United States; (c) ultimate intervention will be necessary, but will come late, after public feeling has arisen, and when the difficulties have been enhanced; and (d) any intervention will be attacked as illegal, and arouse public opinion against us throughout Latin America. Thus, the abrogation of article I will promote bad feeling and insecurity rather than good will.

Similarly, under article II of the existing treaty the United States wisely reserved to itself the right to acquire territory in addition to the basic Canal Zone area. Under the proposed treaty the United States relinquishes this right. Our Secretary of State has referred to a vague clause in the new treaty about consulting Panama if operations in its territory are required in case of aggression or international conflagration, and interprets this clause as permitting the United States to act first and consult afterward in case of an acute emergency. But, even if this clause can be so construed, it is hard to see anything in it which entitles the United States under the new treaty to acquire territory which it deems necessary to the protection of the Canal if the Government of Panama then in power is opposed.

A very interesting letter came to me from one who was formerly connected, I think, with the State Department, F. M. Huntington Wilson. It is very brief and singularly pertinent:

I wish to express my full agreement with the objections to the pending treaty with Panama which you expressed on the 15th instant. To substitute consultation with Panama for our absolute legal right to do all things necessary in defense of the Canal Zone weakens our position, however, many notes may have been exchanged to explain away this change. In the 3 years since this amazing treaty was negotiated, world conditions have changed in a direction to make this provision even worse.

American rights and obligations regarding the Canal Zone are too important to be shared or obscured in any way.

That is the position I take. I dislike to take it in opposition to the distinguished Senator who is the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. PITTMAN], or the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who wrote the report; but I do say that "American rights and obligations regarding the Canal Zone are too important to be shared or obscured in any way."

The dependability of Panama's cooperation and realization of common interest with the United States was tested once shortly before the World War.

Here is an incident detailed of which I know nothing. Perhaps the Senator from Nevada can tell me about it:

At that time the Government of Panama was found to be on the point of leasing the Gulf of Darien—a deep-water harbor suitable for a naval base—to a politically and financially powerful German group with German Government backing. The project was known as the Zuick concession, and it carried with it rights of wide exploitation in the hinterland of Panama. This menace to the Canal Zone, in which Panama was eager to acquiesce, was stopped only by assertion of the right of the United States to veto any action by Panama which might interfere with our defense of the Canal.

The newspaper account of the treaty has it that additional American business enterprises in the Canal Zone shall not be allowed. This may be unobjectionable; but it would seem that the interest of the United States is to exclude foreign-business establishments from the region of the Canal, for the reason that these might be used as camouflage for espionage or sabotage.

And I recall to you an article which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post a few weeks, ago, wherein I think it was stated that there were a great many barber shops down there, run by Japanese; that none of them pretended to do any business, but that they were all on the qui vive constantly to get news, and to bring the news to some center which was not disclosed.

As to the good-neighbor policy in general, to be of any value it must rest upon mutual consideration and fair dealing. Condoning the seizure of American properties, as in Mexico and Bolivia; complacency in the face of default upon American-owned bonds, or refraining from diplomatic intervention to right wrongs done American interests by foreign governments, of course, will engender only contempt in return for sacrifices made.

I want to make plain this to you: I am not asking you to refuse to ratify this treaty particularly because of any legalistic grounds. I am not asking you in any way to fight this treaty because it does certain things to American citizens and the like, and they are things that ought never to be done and we ought never to tolerate. I am not asking you to take this treaty by the four corners and analyze it; but I am saying to you that in the case of a treaty such as this, dealing with an important subject such as the Panama Canal, dealing with the life line of the Republic, we ought to pause before ratifying it, because at the present time there are not five men in this body who know anything about it.

We ought to pause, and if there be any doubt whatsoever in our minds that doubt should be resolved in favor of the rejection of the treaty. It will do no harm to reject the treaty. Panama is satisfied now, having received 100-cent dollars for the debt that is due it. We are satisfied in having paid that money to them, and it will do no harm to let this matter go, and for all of us to study what we are to do, and then there can be no hereafter and no regrets.

It is for our country—and that is all I speak of. I am not speaking in behalf of anything else—it is for our country, entitled as it is to the best that is in us, entitled to have the best judgment each man here has, rather than the judgment of the Secretary of State or the President, as the case may be. It is our business to see that our country does not suffer, and to see that we establish every safeguard that is necessary to the defense of this country, and to protect it in its territory and rights.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations a question for information and not to indicate any predilection about the treaty.

I have not yet learned what land is ceded or agreed to be hereafter ceded by the United States of America to the Republic of Panama.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no land ceded by the United States under the treaty.

Mr. AUSTIN. What, if any, land and water are ceded or agreed to be hereafter ceded by the Republic of Panama to the United States of America, in the treaty?

Mr. PITTMAN. Under the terms of the treaty all land and water now occupied and in possession of the United States remain so, and under construction of the word "maintenance" in the minutes and the letters it is provided that the word "maintenance" means expansion and additional works. That is the interpretation of the word.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations anticipated, for I now wish to know as definitely as possible what political jurisdiction is by the treaty ceded or agreed to be ceded by the United States to the Republic of Panama.

Mr. PITTMAN. The right of eminent domain is ceded.

Mr. AUSTIN. By the United States?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. And that is the power to take, upon condemnation, property of the United States for public use upon payment of its value to the United States?

Mr. PITTMAN. The right of eminent domain has expressly been abandoned in view of the promise of Panama to cooperate with the United States in the maintenance and protection of the Canal, and the performance of all acts for the protection and maintenance of the Canal.

Mr. AUSTIN. One more question. What jurisdiction has been ceded or agreed to be ceded by the Republic of Panama to the United States?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, under the treaty the United States does not give the Republic of Panama the right to condemn land. It merely abandons the right it had under the treaty of 1903 to acquire land in the Republic of Panama either by purchase or by right of eminent domain.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. What is meant by this language in article II:

and protection of the Panama Canal or of any auxiliary canals or other works, and in recognition thereof the United States of America hereby renounces the grant made to it in perpetuity by the Republic of Panama of the use, occupation, and control of lands and waters, in addition to those now under the jurisdiction of the United States of America outside of the zone as described in article II of the aforesaid Convention, which may be necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the Panama Canal or of any auxiliary canals or other works necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the said enterprise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has addressed a question to someone.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Perhaps I addressed it to the circumambient atmosphere, and we will let it go at that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Nevada to answer the question.

Mr. PITTMAN. In the first place, I read the comment in the committee report on article II:

Article II. The compliance of Panama with the provisions of article II of the convention of November 18, 1903, in turning over to the United States additional lands and waters beyond those specifically mentioned therein is recognized. The requirement of further lands and waters is considered improbable by both Governments, but they nevertheless recognize their joint obligation to insure the continuous operation of the Canal and undertake to reach an agreement should additional lands and waters be in fact necessary for this purpose.

If Senators will read article II, they will find that that promise is made.

Mr. AUSTIN. Specifically, Mr. President, there is another section, is there not, found in article VIII, whereby—

The United States of America hereby transfers to the Republic of Panama jurisdiction over a corridor, the exact limits of which shall be agreed upon—

And so forth. Assuming that to be a cession, I ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations whether it is intended to be exclusive jurisdiction in Panama, or whether it is to be concurrent jurisdiction exercised by both the United States of America and Panama.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is concurrent jurisdiction. It is over a corridor extending from Colon through a small part of the zone, to the end of the zone. In some places it is 20 feet wide, in other it is a hundred feet wide, as it gets further away from the town of Colon, and finally it is about two hundred feet wide. It may be used by the United States and Panama concurrently. The treaty also provides that in the building and maintenance of the road it shall not interfere with any stream flow or any of the privileges and rights of the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will answer a further question, there seems to be another cession of jurisdiction, to be found in article IX, which purports to cede another zone or corridor, this cession being by Panama to the United States, "a corridor, the limits of which shall be demarcated by the two Governments," and so forth. That is something more than jurisdiction, is it not, for is it not contemplated that there shall be erected therein structures, the property of the United States of America, to be operated by the United States of America?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is for the Madden Road. That is to give a corridor connection through a part of Panama itself to connect with the highway in the zone.

Mr. AUSTIN. I assume that the same language for the transfer or cession of jurisdiction is made for the transfer covered in article VIII, to which we have alluded, and I wonder if the distinguished chairman of the committee comes to the same conclusion with regard to the extent of the jurisdiction, namely, that this means concurrent jurisdiction of both the United States and Panama over that corridor in which American structures are to be erected?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will read it, and the Senator may use his own judgment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, I have one.

Mr. PITTMAN. The language is:

The Republic of Panama shall enjoy at all times the right of unimpeded transit across the said corridor at any point, and of travel along the corridor, subject to such traffic regulations as may be established by the authorities of the Panama Canal; and the Government of the Republic of Panama shall have the right to such use of the corridor as would be involved in the construction of connecting or intersecting highways or railroads, overhead and underground power, telephone, telegraph, and pipe lines, and additional drainage channels on condition that these structures and their use shall not interfere with the purpose of the corridor as provided hereinabove.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have drawn my conclusion, and it is that there is concurrent jurisdiction.

I ask the distinguished chairman another question. In both of these corridors there are by this treaty assumed to be private rights and titles to land and water held by persons, and I note the peculiar characteristic of both provisions respecting those titles. It is that the obligor will extinguish any private titles existing therein.

Mr. PITTMAN. Will the Senator kindly read that while he has it before him?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. It is in article VIII:

The Government of the United States of America will extinguish any private titles existing or which may exist in and to the land included in the above-described corridor.

The question with respect to that and the corresponding obligation of Panama is, Who will hold the title in that land in the corridor after it shall have been extinguished?

Mr. PITTMAN. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. AUSTIN. On page 13, the fourth paragraph from the bottom, of Executive Report No. 5.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is the Senator reading from article VIII?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am reading from article VIII on page 13.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Government of the United States agrees to perfect titles to that land—to the corridor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, who will hold the title?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no question that the United States will hold the title. It only grants an easement. That is all that is granted.

Mr. AUSTIN. In this case "extinguishment" means "purchase" then, does it?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I assume so. Or it might not. One of its own corporations may have abandoned it. The Panama Railroad might own part of it. The Government controls the Panama Canal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Executive of the United States initiates a treaty, and the Executive of Panama negotiates with him. The Panama Senate ratified the treaty some 2 or 3 years ago, as I understand the situation. Is that correct?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then the contracting parties are the President and the Senate of Panama, and the President and the Senate of the United States. Why is it that these side agreements or interpretations are not put in as reservations so that they may be confirmed by the ratifying body in Panama just as they are ratified by the United States Senate? In other words, instead of having the opinion of certain executive officers such as the Secretary of State of Panama and the Secretary of State of the United States, would it not be better to have the language made perfectly clear, so that it could be understood, by way of reservations? That is the question I put to the Senator. I think this is a very important matter and one concerning which we should be very careful. I wonder why instead of depending upon the opinion of some officer of our Government and of some officer of the other government, the understanding should not be put into the treaty itself.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, I should say in the first place it is a very poor way to make treaties, to include reservations in them. It would have been very much more fortunate if the treaties had been definite, so as to require neither interpretation nor reservations.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. Usually, however, we find it is not so. Most treaties are indefinite, I assume, by the necessities of the case.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. In just a moment. And the negotiators are like members of committees. Each committee member or negotiator insists upon his own particular language. Frequently after a bill is drawn, or a section is drawn, its language is found to be quite confusing. A court may have to interpret its meaning. The same thing is true in drafting a treaty between two different races, one of which speaks, let us say, the Spanish language, and the other speaks the English language. It is difficult to get the idioms to express exactly the same thing. After the treaty in question was written in both Spanish and English the negotiators may have called attention to the fact that those words, "the subject of consultation," might be ambiguous, and insisted that it should be understood that they did not mean that the consultation must first be had before action was taken.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not want to take up the Senator's time, but, if the Senator will yield, I should like to submit some remarks on that point.

The Senator will recall that earlier in the day I raised a question as to the meaning of article X. It seems to me that article X of this treaty clearly implies that the consultation shall take place before the United States Government may take military action. It seems to me that the most vital thing in this whole treaty or in any of our treaties with Panama is the right of the United States to take any naval or military measures that may be necessary to safeguard and protect the Canal. The only business we have in Panama is the Canal. That is the very heart of it all.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Nevada concurs entirely.

Mr. CONNALLY. And we all know that with improved military weapons and aircraft it becomes more vital than ever before that the United States, when it comes to the defense of the Panama Canal, shall have the absolute liberty to do what is necessary without having to consult anyone. My view is that the language of article X clearly signifies that the consultation shall be first. What is the use of having any consultation after it is all over?

Any measures—

Not some measures—

Any measures—

Any number of them—

Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one Government to take—

That is the United States—and which may affect the territory under the jurisdiction of the other Government—

Of course, that is Panama—

will be the subject of consultation between the two Governments.

It cannot mean anything except that the consultations shall take place first, and I will prove that in a moment, I think, by the letter of the Foreign Minister of Panama. It is contended by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the eminent Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the eminent and distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], for whose opinions I have the greatest respect—it is contended by all three Senators that the letter written by the Foreign Minister of Panama saying that article X shall be construed otherwise is governing. I telephoned the State Department a moment ago and asked them when this treaty was ratified. The State Department said that the Panama Congress ratified this treaty on December 23, 1936, and that the President of Panama appended his signature to it and approved it on the 24th day of December 1936.

When was the letter of the foreign minister written? Was it written contemporaneously? No. Was it written while the negotiations were pending? No. It was written more than 2 years after the Panamanian Congress had ratified the treaty.

Mr. PITTMAN. One moment. The Senator does not want to become confused.

Mr. CONNALLY. It was written on February 1, 1939.

Mr. PITTMAN. I know; but does not the letter state that the minutes were prepared at the time of the negotiations?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course the minutes were; but what do the minutes amount to? Negotiations are in progress, and the negotiators put down what Mr. Jones says, and what Mr. Smith says. Then, when they get through with all that, they go out and write a treaty. If the minutes control, what is the use of writing a treaty? The treaty controls; and the assumption is that after the representatives of governments have negotiated and made propositions back and forth, their agreement is crystallized in the treaty.

What does the Panamanian Foreign Secretary say, and when did he say it? He said it on the 1st day of February 1939; and his letter confirms my view that it was meant that consultation should take place first. Let us see what he says. I read paragraph numbered 3, on page 3 of the report:

3. As set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 16, 1935, in the event of an emergency so sudden as to make action of a preventive character imperative to safeguard the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, and if by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the Government of Panama as provided in article X.

Meaning that by article X it is required that the consultation shall be first. That is what he says:

If by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the Government of Panama as provided in article X—

Mr. PITTMAN. Let us see if the Senator and I cannot agree.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me finish reading this paragraph:

and if by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the Government of Panama as provided in article X of said treaty, the Government of the United States of America need not delay action to meet this emergency pending consultation—

Who says it need not delay action? Not the Panamanian Congress, which ratified the treaty, but the Foreign Minister, 2½ years after the treaty was ratified by Panama. What right or authority did he have to do that? Suppose we should ratify a treaty and Secretary Hull should say, a year afterward, "The treaty does not mean that, it means this," what government on earth would accept his statement?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has the floor. The colloquy is in his time.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall divide the time with the Senator. I prefer to do it in that way.

Suppose I agree with the Senator that the intention was to consult before action is taken.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and other Senators to understand that.

Mr. PITTMAN. But suppose there is intended to be an exception. Suppose the parties were to consult when there was no emergency, but that if there was an emergency they did not have to delay for the consultation. That is just what is stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Who says it? The Foreign Minister says it, after the treaty has been ratified.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; the negotiators said it.

Mr. CONNALLY. He was a negotiator.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; they said it at the very moment they wrote the article.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Nevada is too good a lawyer not to know that all antecedent—not contemporary, but antecedent—understandings, discussions, and negotiations are superseded by the terms of the treaty when it is written.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think I am as good a lawyer as that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am afraid the Senator is not.

Mr. PITTMAN. When there is an enlarged interpretation to the effect that during normal times there shall be consultation, and that during emergencies the United States need not delay action for consultation, and the negotiators discuss that very clause, and write down that in case of an emergency confirmation in advance is unnecessary——

Mr. CONNALLY. Where is that written down?

Mr. PITTMAN. Read the letter.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am reading the letter; but what right has the writer of the letter to determine that question?

Mr. PITTMAN. The letter states that the minutes were taken down at the time of the negotiations, and were authenticated at that time. That was what happened.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand that, but the Senator contends that the minutes control. Why does he not bring in the minutes, and let us ratify the minutes instead of the treaty?

Mr. PITTMAN. The minutes have been certified by both Governments.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course they are certified as minutes, simply as a record of what took place. However, they do not control. The treaty is what we finally sign and what we finally ratify.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment. If the Senator from Nevada were negotiating for a silver mine in Nevada, and he offered $100,000, and the other man said he would not take that price but would take $200,000, and a stenographer were present taking down the minutes for a week during the negotiations back and forth, and the parties should finally agree on $100,000, what would be the price? Would it be $100,000, or what somebody said during the course of the negotiations, as shown by the minutes? Everybody knows that the final agreement, when it is signed in a written contract, would control.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we all agree as to what is meant, and the officials of both governments know exactly what is meant, why not put it in the treaty by an amendment? We have a perfect right to amend the treaty, and it can then be agreed to or not agreed to by Panama.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Senator has made a wise suggestion.

Mr. McKELLAR. If Panama does agree to the stipulation, as the distinguished Senator from Nevada argues, then it will certainly ratify our amendment, and we shall have a treaty carrying out exactly what we want.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. In answer to the Senator from Tennessee, I will say that I have an amendment which I intend to offer as a reservation to article X.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, getting away from the law of the matter, I agree with the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that the Panama Canal is our life line. However, it is the opinion of many of the greatest naval officers in the United States—and some of them have publicly expressed such an opinion—that the Canal is in less danger from outside attack by an enemy than from sabotage from within. I agree with that statement. We have certain military posts at each end of the Canal, and we have others spotted here and there. Military authorities have not the opportunity of being in contact with spies and saboteurs who would certainly threaten the Canal if we ever got into a position, whether from war or any other cause, in which it would be of advantage to foreign nations to destroy the Canal. The people living throughout the whole zone and coming in contact with those who come into the zone from every country on earth are in a far better position to ascertain who are the spies and who are the prospective saboteurs than are any soldiers in the Canal Zone. I think the greatest protection we can have to the Canal is to have the wholehearted friendship of the people who live in its vicinity. I do not think we treat the people of Panama fairly in our speech. I do not think it is well for us to say that we do not need their assistance or that we shall never have their assistance. I do not agree with either one of those statements. I think we need their assistance, and I think that if we treat them halfway decently we shall have their assistance.

I know how the canal came into existence. Do we want to retain the treaty of 1903, the treaty which we say was "negotiated" in 1903? The idea of calling the treaty of 1903 negotiated. Fourteen days after Panama became a so-called republic, 5 days after we recognized it, they signed this treaty. Of course they signed it. They absolutely signed away their sovereignty. After the years have gone by, and they have assumed the dignity of a republic, and we have recognized them as a republic, as an intelligent, respectable people, we have been playing with them for 3 or 4 years. It is said they should be satisfied because we have paid them the money that is coming to them according to the contract. No; we are contracting now to pay them, but we have never paid them a cent since 1934—not a cent—and we are not anxious to pay them. They cannot pay the interest on their bonds by reason of that fact, and the bonds are held all over by this country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. So far as I am concerned, I think we ought to pay them 100 cents on the dollar. I am not opposing that course.

Mr. PITTMAN. Now we come down to the proposition, "Why do we not put it in a reservation?" Because we know what a reservation means. We know that it simply will arouse anger. They have said to us, as plainly as language can say it, in the minutes which were signed by the negotiators at the time, that the consultation does not apply if there is a great emergency. It does not apply. That is what they have said. We could put in a reservation the words, "It does not apply in a great emergency," but the treaty would be no stronger and no more binding than it now is, because it would have to go back to Panama for re-ratification, and all the political excitement and fighting that ensued there during the original ratification of the treaty.

Oh, yes; we can do it, of course. We can cause another political fight in Panama. We can arouse their hatred against us more than ever by doing it. It is as plain as day, however, that the word "consultation," by reason of the minutes made at the time, by virtue of the communication of the Government of Panama to us, means that it applies only in normal times, and does not apply in case of emergency.

Why should we not consult with them on the use of their territory if there is no emergency? We should. We do not doubt them, in the first place. They have promised to support the Canal in every possible way. They have promised to give us more land and more water—that is in the treaty—when we need it. They have promised that we may expand the Canal. Are we to believe them or not believe them? But beyond all that, article XXIII of the original treaty of 1903, which grants to us the exclusive right to use the territory of Panama to protect the Canal against aggression and destruction, is still in existence.

I think we are making a great mistake. I think we are threatening the Canal by the manner in which we are acting toward the Panamanian people far more than it is endangered by any foreign enemy.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Aside from the statement the Senator from Nevada has made to the Senate, and the question of justice and fair play, has not the matter of turning down this treaty further implications?

For the past 7 years the administration has been trying to prove to the Latin-American countries its good will. Would not turning down this treaty make those people believe that it has all been nothing but talk? The Latin-American people now actually believe they have a friend in this continent in the national administration; and if now we do not do justice and observe fair play in our dealings with Panama, what will they say about all this good-will talk?

Mr. PITTMAN. That may be true; but I shoud dislike far more than anything else I know of sacrificing the confidence of the people living next to the Canal.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the matter of good will is an important one, of course. Nevertheless, the matter of good will should not obscure our duty to know just what we are doing in this treaty.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment.

If I should conclude that the rights of the United States are not fully protected, the question of good will and things of that nature, so far as I am concerned, would go aside. But I cannot find, in my limited knowledge of the law and construction of the law, any failure upon the part of the United States fully to protect the rights of the people of the United States.

Let me go ahead for just a minute. Then I will answer the question of the Senator from Tennessee.

Let us start with the proposition of seeing what Panama has left in this thing. What rights has she left after we get through with the treaty? We have trimmed it down to absolutely nothing so far as her power is concerned. We start with the proposition that we leave intact that part of the old treaty. It says:

> If it should become necessary at any time to employ armed forces for the safety or protection of the Canal, or of the ships that make use of the same, or the railways and auxiliary works, the United States shall have the right, at all times and in its discretion, to use its police and its land and naval forces or to establish fortification for these purposes.

The United States retains the absolute right to utilize its police force, its land and naval forces, at any time, and in its discretion, to protect the Canal in any way the United States thinks it ought to act in order to protect it. That is the basic proposition with which we start. What more could we ask? The difficulty all arose over the question of a few words in article X; but the basic principle that the United States retains the absolute right with all its power, military and naval, to protect the Canal according to its discretion, is left here unassailed and unattacked in any way by the subsequent treaty. What more do we need?

We come then to the other proposition about which all the discussion seems to arise:

> In case of an international conflagration or the existence of any threat of aggression which would endanger the security of the Republic of Panama or the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama will take such measures of prevention and defense as they may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests. Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one government to take, and which may affect the territory under the jurisdiction of the other government, will be the subject of consultation between the two governments.

That of itself, Mr. President, is a very slight protection for a Nation or a country like Panama as against the United States. We agree to have a consultation in regard to it. Lying back of the consultation is the absolute agreement upon our part, and our right conceded by Panama, to take possession of the Canal with our armed forces whenever we think it is necessary to contribute, through our police force and our naval and military force, whatever effort we think is proper to take care of the Canal.

But the treaty says we will have a consultation. That is where the difficulty arose. It was said that the mere fact of consultation might delay the action of the United States in protecting its interests, notwithstanding this broad and comprehensive and absolute provision in article XXIII. So, the question being raised, Secretary Hull sent his letter stating that the question had been raised, and stating precisely what it was. If Senators will read that letter, they will find that Mr. Hull did not leave unexplained what he was driving at, to wit, not a change of the treaty, not a modification of the terms of the treaty, but an explanation of what "consultation" meant. He desired to know whether that word "consultation" implied the necessity of taking action upon the part of this Government after consultation.

What did they do with regard to that? They sat down and wrote a letter to the Secretary of State, and in that letter they stated:

> I take pleasure in informing Your Excellency that I have been authorized by my Government to effect this exchange of notes and to clarify the points propounded by Your Excellency, and which, for greater clarity, are set forth in the English language as follows.

What are they doing? They are clarifying, not changing, not modifying, but clarifying the language of the treaty, and doing it by authority of the Panamanian Government upon request of our Government.

What does he further say?

> As set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 16, 1935, in the event of an emergency so sudden as to make action of a preventive character imperative to safeguard the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, and if by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the government of Panama as provided in article X of said treaty, the Government of the United States of America need not delay action to meet this emergency pending consultation, although it will make every effort in the event that such consultation has not been effected prior to taking action to consult as soon as it may be possible with the Panamanian Government.

What is left? We have extended to Panama nothing more than the right to consult in case an emergency arises, to consult after we have determined that there is an emergency, and after we have acted in the emergency. That is all Panama has left.

It does seem to me that our rights are very fully protected, in view of article XXIII, in view of the explicit statement to our Government that "you need not wait when the emergency arises. Do as you will and when you will." In view of those provisions, what more could the Government of the United States have? It is fully protected.

It seems to me there is such a thing as asking too much. After we have solicited all the substantial rights and after we have received all of the substantial rights to protect our interests, are we not content, and have we not fully protected our interests?

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment, which I should like to have read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of article X the following:

"Either prior to or subsequent to the taking of such measures."

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, it has become very apparent in the debate, and also from a perusal of Senate Document No. 5, containing the data in regard to the treaty with Panama, that there is ambiguity in article X, and that ambiguity the State Department has tried to correct. Personally, I feel that when there is ambiguity in a treaty, if a great national crisis should arise, much more harm would be done to the good feeling between the two countries than if the ambiguity were corrected by a reservation. I see no reason why we cannot correct the ambiguity in article X. It seems to be a very simple matter. If the correction of that ambiguity should be made now, so that everyone would know of it and have a clear understanding of the treaty, it would make, I should think, rather for good feeling than bad.

The difficulty I have is that after the treaty was agreed to, in 1936, it was then confirmed by the Senate of Panama, as I understand the procedure—and if I am in error I hope the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will correct me—and subsequent to that time the Secretary of State, on February 1, 1939, wrote to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Panama attempting to clarify what was meant by the treaty. That communication was replied to on February 1, 1939. But the difficulty was that the treaty was ratified by the Senate of Panama in 1936, and whatever the minutes may show as to what took place between the respective governments, there is nothing here to show that the Senate of Panama, when they ratified the treaty, had any knowledge of those minutes. If a treaty were brought before the Senate of the United States, what I should be interested in would be what the wording of the treaty meant and what the wording of the treaty was. I would not know anything about the minutes of the negotiations. Unless the debates in the Senate of Panama show that that matter was brought up and discussed and understood, I think it would raise a very grave question as to what was involved, and if a question like that is raised, whether or not it is a good legal point, the fact remains that strong feeling can be stirred up and cause great difficulty in time of crisis.

What we have here is the assurance of the two Departments of State after the treaty has been ratified. That assurance may be amply sufficient to bind the present government in power in Panama, and I should think it would be. I should think they would be estopped from going back of the agreement, but if a different government were in power in the future I do not believe they would be estopped, at least I think there might be a question. I can see how a political situation might well arise which would be very troublesome. That was the sole reason why I presented the clarifying amendment, and the Senator from Tennessee had the same idea.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GERRY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee asked me a question a while ago and I deferred the answer, but I do not intend to avoid answering it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure of that.

Mr. BORAH. I shall be glad to answer any question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure of that. I merely want to make one observation. I am very much in favor of the treaty. As explained by the Senator from Nevada, the treaty may be ratified by the Senate. I am very much in favor of ratifying the treaty with Panama, but when we make a treaty with another country let us make it according to our laws and its laws; and, according to our laws and its laws, the treaty must be negotiated by the executive departments of the two governments, and it must be ratified by the United States Senate, and in the case of Panama it must be ratified by the Congress itself—the entire Congress. But why has our State Department and why has the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Panama gone to such extreme lengths, as it seems to me, to write in, as between themselves, an explanation of what this treaty means, when it is perfectly easy for the Senate of the United States to amend it in such a way as to make clear that it means exactly what the two governments say it means? How could there be any offense to Panama or to Panamanians to agree to just what the Panama Government, through its Secretary of Foreign Affairs says it means?

I think we should be very careful about it, and I want to give my reason for saying that. I remember reading of a remarkable situation in which our country was placed by a very unfortunate treaty which we made with Great Britain about the Panama Canal away back in 1852. Of course, old as I am, I do not remember that far back, but I remember, from reading history, that the British Government claimed to have some kind of interest in the Panama Canal, and the Government of the United States at that time, probably without considering the question very carefully, entered into what was known as the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty in 1852, and it came back to plague us when we started the building of the Canal in 1901, 1902, and 1903.

So when we all agree, when, as the distinguished Senator from Nevada said, the Panama Government agrees just what the treaty means, when the Senator from Nevada tells us just exactly what it means, why not put it into the treaty itself.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why would it not be agreeable to put a reservation in the form of paragraph 3 of the Foreign Minister's letter, who agrees to that? He says what it means. Why not put that in as a reservation?

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be all right. I have not examined into the wording. It seems to me that we ought to put in the treaty exactly what we say and what the Panama Government says is its meaning. Why make a mistake about it?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator agrees that the reservation should be the same as the admissions?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am afraid the admissions are merely the opinion of the present Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Panama Government. If the two Governments could make an agreement through the two Secretaries of State of the respective Governments, then it would be all right. But our Constitution provides that a treaty must be ratified by the Senate of the United States. I wish to say that I am heartily in favor of the treaty if it means what the distinguished Senator from Nevada, the distinguished Senator from Idaho, and the distinguished Senator from Georgia say it means. But why not make it legal in form and in fact by adding an amendment to that effect?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the interpretation of treaties the rules applicable are not altogether different from those which apply to the interpretation of an act of Congress, and the Supreme Court has frequently held that they have the right, and they do in interpreting an act of Congress, to take into consideration the debates in order to find out what was the intention.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Contracts are to be interpreted in the light of the intention—the meeting of the minds.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is, provided they do not show on their face what they mean.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, where there is any dispute about what a contract of any kind means, evidence is usually available as to conversations which transpired leading up to the contract. The same statement applies to a treaty, and it seems to me that neither side to this treaty, in view of the minutes, the correspondence, and the interpretation placed upon it by the two Governments, has any ground for misinterpreting what it means.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that be so, why not put it in by way of amendment, and have it acted upon in the way that the laws and constitutions of the two countries provide?

Mr. BARKLEY. That would mean, of course, interminable delay in negotiating a new treaty and the ratification of a new treaty when it seems to me that is not necessary.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have delayed ratification for 3 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, but that in itself does not justify further delay.

Mr. CONNALLY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Executive B (74th Cong., 2d sess.), a general treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, signed at Washington on March 2, 1936, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If we are ready to vote, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island to article X of the treaty. Those in favor of the amendment will signify by saying "aye."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, what are we voting on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think before the vote is taken a quorum should be present. Did the Chair announce that there was a sufficient number to order the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair announced that there was not a sufficient number.

Mr. CONNALLY. How many hands were counted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair counted 8 hands. The Chair again will ask for a show of hands. All in favor will raise their hands. The Chair counts 11 hands.

Mr. BAILEY. How many favorable votes are required?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Assuming that a quorum is present, one-fifth of the number.

Mr. BAILEY. Let us have a count and see if a quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Eleven would be one-fifth of 55.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. Eleven would be more than one-fifth of the number required for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Hughes	Pittman
Austin	George	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe
Bailey	Gerry	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Barbour	Green	La Follette	Sheppard
Barkley	Guffey	Lucas	Stewart
Borah	Gurney	McKellar	Taft
Capper	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Chavez	Hill	Nye	Truman
Connally	Holman	Pepper	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. MALONEY answered to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, at this hour I have no disposition to invoke the powers of the Sergeant at Arms in order to obtain a quorum. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 25, 1939, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate July 24 (legislative day of July 18), 1939

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Miles N. Pike to be United States attorney for the district of Nevada.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 24, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our most gracious Lord, tender and loving in Thy mercy, we pray that we may be altogether worthy of "life's well done" by being enthusiastic exponents of truth, justice, and Christian brotherhood. Do Thou enable us to live and work under the benignant sway of great truths, always aspiring after the heavenly genius of goodness. Blessed Father, may we not refuse through neglect or self-deception to confess our sins to Him who is faithful and just to forgive and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Put Thy hand upon us and inspire us to heed Thy call to seek not gold, but men; not fame, but men; not ease, but men. We wait, as we hark back to the prayer of the apostle:

Beloved, I pray that in all things thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

In the name of the Lord of Life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 22, 1939, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an article by Hon. Carlos S. Tan, of the Philippine Assembly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the Washington Post this morning.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a memorandum prepared by the United States Conference of Mayors.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including therein a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. DONDERO addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE FISCAL SITUATION

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, it seems to me it would be very wise if the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, would use a little red ink in the publication of his daily statements. Mr. Speaker, it is not right that he publish this statement in black ink all the time, because it is mostly all red. When you have a statement that should appear in red and then publish it in black, it only fools the American people. You Members of Congress realize that we have gone in the red $375,399,000 since July 1. That is almost $20,000,000 a day more than we take in. It certainly should be printed in red ink. Mr. Morgenthau ought to show that on his statements, and it should be published in red ink. Then you men on that side would realize just exactly the condition of the Treasury. It is the reddest thing in the country today. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who one day agrees with his friend John L. Lewis that the strikes of the W. P. A. workers on Government projects should be supported and the next day, when he gets the nod from the White House, changes his mind and loses all interest in the bill which the paper announced he would introduce restoring the "prevailing wage scale," I will not now speak about the activities of John L. Lewis, who is assuming to establish a dictatorship over labor, decreeing that no man shall work until he has paid the tribute levied by Lewis.

Permit me to call the attention of the leaders of the Democratic Party to another would-be censor, who assumes the right to abolish, temporarily at least, one of the branches of the Federal Government established by the Constitution some 150 years ago.

It is evident that the recent visit of royalty, the visit of a king and queen to the White House and to Hyde Park, is having its effect. The King and Queen, to the average American citizen, appeared to be, and many of us think they are, of the "salt of the earth"—a man and a woman whom all of us would be proud to hail as typical American citizens. But Elliott Roosevelt, the President's son, on whose face not so long ago there appeared the first evidence of a beard, must have assumed that Papa and Mama, having been visited by a king and queen, are endowed with some of the royal prerogatives formerly exercised by absolute rulers.

Saturday night, with intolerable assumption and conceit, with the arrogance and ignorance of youth and the judgment of an adolescent, he presumed to announce to the country at large, that, because some Congressmen's "chief desire is to see the administration take a trimming"—a laudable objective in the opinion of many—and because he erroneously assumed that a few Congressmen were "able to reduce Congress to a form of political slugfest," "Congress has outlived its usefulness."

No one enjoys a "political slugfest" better than Elliott and his dad, provided that they do the slugging and no one hits back. No President has ever thrown quite as much mud as F. D. R., who was outdone in that practice only by Charlie Michelson.

Beyond question, Elliott gets many of his ideas from Papa and Mama and was speaking in the characteristically Rooseveltian vein; so, having come from, as it might be said, the abode of the commissar—from the home of a would-be Stalin or a Mussolini—as a considered opinion of this, the third branch of our Government, may I presume to inquire of the majority leadership whether they intend to adjourn because this "Congress has outlived its usefulness"—to the administration—or whether they will wait until, by New Deal order or decree, Congress temporarily is abolished? The master has spoken; have we, like the dog which listens to the phonograph, heard our "master's voice"? [Laughter and applause.]

THE GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Saturday appeared an article wherein the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] wanted to compare the difference between the present Governor of Michigan and the former Governor of Michigan. I want to call his attention to the fact that the present Governor of Michigan, with the help of the Republican organization, sabotaged the civil service. In one of the Republican newspapers they have this to say:

> One way or another the State is being rapidly streamlined on accentuated spoils basis. It is more a state of spoils than it was under the first Fitzgerald administration or under any other recent administration. The only reason the turn-over is not more rapid than is the case is apparently difficulty about agreement as to who are to get the jobs.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, to show the real difference between Republicans and Democrats and the two gentlemen mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman going to put that in today?

Mr. HOOK. I am not so certain.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I just wanted to know if you are going to put it in today?

Mr. HOOK. I am not so certain.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You will put it in at your convenience?

Mr. HOOK. I will put it in either today or tomorrow.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOOK. But I assure you you will have something to answer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That will be fine, and that will be the first thing you ever offered that needed an answer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HOOK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Lea bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CALENDAR

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF MOTOR-VEHICLE OWNERS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of S. 2350, to amend the act of Congress approved May 3, 1935, entitled "An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes."

A similar House bill (H. R. 5996) has been reported, and is on the Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the chairman of the committee advise us whether the Senate bill is similar to the House bill?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; it is a similar bill. This bill passed the Senate a few days ago.

Mr. EBERHARTER. This bill provides that anybody found guilty of reckless driving would have his operator's permit revoked.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is right.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Where personal injury results.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a minute?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say that this bill amends existing law only with respect to reckless driving where personal injury results.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is right, where personal injury is caused.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I object to an automobile operator being deprived of his license by reason of having been found guilty of reckless driving by some magistrate. I believe in cases of this sort if a jury found an operator guilty of an offense which was really serious it would be all right, but to suspend a permit simply where a magistrate finds an operator guilty of reckless driving if there is only a minor injury is going too far. I think this is one of the measures that has the backing and support of the insurance companies so that they can charge about 33⅓ percent more premium to an operator of that sort.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman will remember that in Pennsylvania a few years ago, by order of Governor Earle, the principle was established that a person found guilty of reckless driving should have his permit suspended for 90 days. The gentleman will also remember that in Pennsylvania we have cut down the death rate about 20 to 25 percent. It certainly did a wonderful amount of good in Pennsylvania. If it is good for Pennsylvania, it should be good for the District of Columbia.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am familiar with the act of the assembly to which the gentleman refers, but that did not provide that a person's license should be suspended for 90 days simply upon the finding of a magistrate; that was done only after a special hearing was held in which all the facts were gone into. I feel the pending bill is entirely too stringent.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. In the District of Columbia, of course, we have no magistrate. I think there is not a court in the District that is not a court of record. I know what the gentleman is talking about, but in Oklahoma we call them justices of the peace. We do not have such offices in the District of Columbia.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I believe this matter should go before the Committee on the Judiciary and be given more consideration. There is no particular hurry for this bill to be rushed through at this time.

Mr. NICHOLS. But the gentleman must realize that an objection merely delays the committee, for the committee has the right on its calendar day to call up bills and have them voted upon.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the gentleman will yield further, I may say to him that there have been hundreds of cases of reckless driving here in the District resulting in serious personal injury to many people. I hope the gentleman will not object. We have given the bill most careful consideration and believe it should be passed.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, the very fact that there is, as the gentleman says, hundreds and hundreds of cases shows to me that this legislation should not be passed by unanimous consent, where it is going to affect hundreds and hundreds, and I must insist upon my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe that where we fail to curb reckless drivers his own life and the life of his own family as well as others are jeopardized? Why should we permit reckless drivers on the highway? I think the gentleman will find he is doing an injury to the District if he does not permit this legislation to be enacted.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FARMERS' MARKET

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 340, providing that the farmers' market in blocks 354 and 355 in the District of Columbia shall not be used for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas a farm market was conducted on Louisiana Avenue between Ninth and Twelfth Streets for 30 or 40 years under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture; and

Whereas the farmers were induced to give up this market on condition that other land of equal size and value would be obtained; and

Whereas $300,000 was appropriated in March 1929 for this purpose; and

Whereas two city blocks, known as 354 and 355 in southwest Washington, were obtained and deeded to the District of Columbia to be used expressly for a farmers' market; and

Whereas part of block 355 has now been taken for a District inspection station in direct opposition to this agreement and breaking the implied contract that this project would be available for a farm market; and

Whereas there is danger of the rest of the market also being confiscated: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the remaining parts of these lots shall from now on be inviolate as a farmers' market and shall not be taken from them as long as needed by said farmers as a market place.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LICENSE TO PRACTICE CHIROPRACTIC IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TO GEORGE M. CORRIVEAU

Mr. RANDOLPH.—Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4732) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. George M. Corriveau and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to issue a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. George M. Corriveau in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia," approved February 27, 1929, and on condition that the said George M.

Corriveau shall be found by said commission to be otherwise qualified to practice under the provisions of said act.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to George M. Corriveau."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LAURA T. CORRIVEAU

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4733) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. Laura T. Corriveau and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to issue a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. Laura T. Corriveau in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia," approved February 27, 1929, and on condition that the said Laura T. Corriveau shall be found by said Commission to be otherwise qualified to practice under the provisions of said act.

With the following committe amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Laura T. Corriveau."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN PARK LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2666, providing for the exchange of certain park lands at the northern boundary of Piney Branch Parkway, near Argyle Terrace, for other lands more suitable for the use and development of Piney Branch Parkway, and request its immediate consideration. I may say a similar House bill has been favorably reported and is pending on the calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to better adjust the boundaries of Piney Branch Parkway and to make said parkway more usable and more readily developed, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey, by and on behalf of the United States of America, to the owners of parcel 69/47, or to such party or parties as said owners shall designate, the title of the United States in and to a triangular piece of land containing approximately 22,000 square feet at the northern boundary of Piney Branch Parkway near Argyle Terrace and abutting parcel 69/47: Provided, That the owners of said parcel 69/47 shall furnish the United States of America with a good and sufficient title in fee simple, free of all encumbrances, to a triangular piece of land containing approximately 26,000 square feet, abutting the northern boundary of Piney Branch Parkway at its intersection with the eastern boundary of Rock Creek Park. The transfers provided for herein are designated approximately upon plat file No. 3.6–114 in the files of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The conveyances shall be by proper deed and other instruments containing full legal description by exact survey of the land exchanged, as provided by law.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A House bill, H. R. 6938, was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2139) to exempt from taxation certain property of the American Friends Service Committee, a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania for religious, educational, and social-service purposes, and request its immediate consideration. A similar House bill has been favorably reported and is pending.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the property situated in square 153, in the city of Washington, D. C., described as lot 804, owned, occupied, and used by the American Friends Service Committee, a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania for religious, educational, and social-service purposes, and known as the International Student House, is hereby exempted from all taxation so long as the same is owned, occupied, and maintained without profit by the American Friends Service Committee as a residence for students attending educational institutions in the District of Columbia, and primarily as a residence for students of foreign birth attending such institutions, subject to the provisions of section 8 of the act of March 3, 1877, as amended and supplemented (D. C. Code, title 20, sec. 712), providing for exemptions of church and school property.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A House bill (H. R. 4903) was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCORPORATION OF GROUP HOSPITALIZATION, INC.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6266) providing for the incorporation of certain persons as Group Hospitalization, Inc., and request its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, these bills have been reported by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes. They have been reported favorably by the committee. Does the gentleman want to make any comment on this bill?

Mr. RICH. No. I was just wondering whether all these bills, which are going through so rapidly, have been reported favorably by the committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; they have been.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Arthur C. Christie, M. D.; Maj. Gen. Charles R. Reynolds; Mrs. Joshua Evans, Jr.; Joseph H. Himes; Gen. Frank T. Hines; Frank R. Jelleff; Howard W. Kacy; Mark Lansburgh; Admiral Ross T. McIntire; George H. O'Connor; Sidney F. Taliaferro; Charles S. White, M. D.; Roger J. Whiteford; Thomas W. Brahany; and E. Barrett Prettyman; and their successors to be selected in the manner hereinafter declared, be, and they hereby are, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate, by the name of "Group Hospitalization, Inc.," and by that name may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded in any court of law or equity of competent jurisdiction, and may have and use a common seal.

SEC. 2. Said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered (a) to enter into contracts with individuals or groups of individuals to provide for hospitalization of such individuals, upon payment of specified rates or premiums, and to issue to such individuals appropriate certificates evidencing such contracts; (b) to enter into contracts with hospitals for the care and treatment of such individuals, in accordance with the terms of such certificates; and (c) to cooperate, consolidate, or contract with groups or organizations interested in promoting and safeguarding the public health.

SEC. 3. Said corporation shall not be conducted for profit, but shall be conducted for the benefit of the aforesaid certificate holders. The business and affairs of this corporation shall be conducted by its board of trustees, who shall have full power and authority in the premises, including authority to provide for all expenses incident to the conduct and management of its business and affairs. The number of trustees shall be fixed by the bylaws, but shall be at least 15, and shall be maintained so as to be divisible into three equal classes. The incorporators are hereby declared to be the first board of trustees of this corporation, and their respective terms of office shall be as follows: Gen. Frank T. Hines, Sidney F. Taliaferro, and Frank R. Jelliff, 5 years; Howard W. Kacy, Admiral Ross T. McIntire, and Arthur C. Christie, 4 years; Maj. Gen. Charles R. Reynolds, Joseph H. Himes, and Charles S. White, 3 years; Mrs. Joshua Evans, Jr., Mark Lansburgh, and George H. O'Connor, 2 years; Roger J. Whiteford, Thomas W. Brahany, and E. Barrett Prettyman, 1 year. Upon the expiration of the respective terms of said trustees, their successors shall be appointed as follows: One by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one by the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and one by a group consisting of the president or chairman of the boards of trustees or other designated individual of each hospital with which the corporation shall have contracts for hospitalization, at a meeting called 30 days in advance by the president of Group Hospitalization, Inc. If either of the other two groups aforesaid shall fail to name their respective quotas of trustees at any time, then such trustees shall be selected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. If the number of trustees shall be increased, each of the appointing authorities heretofore designated shall increase, proportionately, the number of trustees to be appointed by such appointing authority. Each of the trustees to be appointed as aforesaid shall serve for 5 years.

SEC. 4. The first board of trustees shall meet within 10 days after the approval of this act and elect a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer, and from time to time such additional officers as the bylaws may provide, and also transact such other business as may properly come before them, including the preparation for approval, from time to time, of the necessary bylaws for the proper conduct of the corporation. The treasurer shall give bond to the corporation, with sufficient surety, in such penalty as the trustees determine, for the faithful discharge of his duty. Thereafter the meetings of the trustees shall be held at such time and place as provided in the bylaws. In case of vacancy in the board of trustees caused otherwise than by expiration of term of office, such vacancy shall be filled by the remaining trustees for the unexpired term of such former trustee.

SEC. 5. The corporation shall file with the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia a certified copy of this charter, of its bylaws, and copies of the forms of contracts to be offered to the certificate holders, whereupon the company may commence operations under this charter. The corporation shall also file annually with said superintendent of insurance a statement disclosing the operations of the corporation for the preceding year, and its financial position. If said superintendent shall have reason to believe that this corporation is not complying with the provisions of this charter, or is being operated for profit, or fraudulently conducted, he shall cause to be instituted the necessary proceedings to enjoin such improper conduct, or to dissolve this corporation.

SEC. 6. The funds of this company may be invested only in securities in which the funds of insurance companies may be invested, as provided by the laws of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. This corporation shall not be subject to the provisions of statutes regulating the business of insurance in the District of Columbia, but shall be exempt therefrom unless specifically designated therein.

SEC. 8. This corporation is hereby declared to be a charitable and benevolent institution, and all of its funds and property shall be exempt from taxation other than taxes on real estate.

SEC. 9. The corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to take over, carry out, and assume all contracts, obligations, assets, and liabilities of a corporation heretofore organized and now doing business in the District of Columbia under the name of Group Hospitalization, Inc.

SEC. 10. This act may be altered, amended, or repealed at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States of America.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT OF 1939

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7320) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (c) of section 21 of title II of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Reciprocal exchange of information with the United States and the several States, notwithstanding the provisions of this section, the assessor may permit the proper officer of the United States or of any State imposing an income tax or his authorized representative to inspect income-tax returns, file with the assessor, or may furnish to such officer or representative a copy of any such income-tax returns provided the United States or such State grant substantially similar privileges to the assessor or his representative, or to the proper officer of the District charged with the administration of this title."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INSTALLATION OF PARKING METERS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5405) authorizing the installation of parking meters and other devices on the streets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and empowered in their discretion, within the limits of appropriations therefor by Congress, which are hereby authorized, to secure and install mechanical parking meters or devices on the streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction and control of the said Commissioners (in addition to those mechanical parking meters or devices installed pursuant to the authority conferred on the said Commissioners by sec. 11, p. 40, of Public Law No. 458, of the 75th Cong., 3d sess., approved April 4, 1938), such meters or devices to be located at such points as the Commissioners may determine, and the said Commissioners are authorized and empowered to make and enforce rules and regulations for the control of parking of vehicles on such streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces, and as an aid to such regulation and control of the parking of vehicles the Commissioners may prescribe fees for the parking of vehicles where meters or devices are installed.

SEC. 2. The said Commissioners are further authorized and directed to deposit all such fees as are collected to the credit of the special fund entitled "Highway fund, gasoline tax, and motor-vehicles fees, District of Columbia," except those which are required to complete the payment of the purchase price and cost of installation of such mechanical parking meters or devices as were authorized by section 11, page 40, of Public Law No. 458 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, approved April 4, 1938.

SEC. 3. The said Commissioners shall include in their annual estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1940 and for each fiscal year thereafter such amounts as may be necessary for the purchase and installation of additional mechanical parking meters or devices and the maintenance and operation of all such parking meters or devices, including personal services and other necessary expenses.

With the following committee amendment:

"SEC. 4. The Commissioners may purchase such additional meters as in their discretion may be necessary to insure uniformity of equipment in sections of the city within or contiguous to that in which meters have already been installed: Provided, That 50 percent of any number of meters installed during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, may be of the manually operated type, in accordance with specifications approved by the Bureau of Standards, and may be purchased and installed upon an experimental basis similar, except as to number, to that authorized for the original experimental installation by section 11, page 40, Public Law No. 458, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, third session."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REAL ESTATE BROKERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5685) to amend the act of Congress entitled "An act to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers, business-chance brokers, and real-estate salesmen; to create a Real Estate Commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions; and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1937, and ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title of the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers, business-chance brokers, and real-estate salesmen; to create a Real Estate Commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions; and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1937 (Public, No. 356, 75th Cong.), is amended to read as follows:

"An act to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers, real-estate salesmen, business-chance brokers, and business-chance salesmen; to create a Real Estate Commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions and in real-estate promotions and in business-chance transactions; and for other purposes."

SEC. 2. Section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That on and after 90 days from the date of enactment of this act it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation (foreign or domestic) to act as a real-estate broker, real-estate salesman, business-chance broker or business-chance salesman, or to advertise or assume to act as such, without a license issued by the Real Estate Commission of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 3. Section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Whenever used in this act 'real-estate broker' means any person, firm, association, partnership, or corporation (foreign or domestic) who, for another and for a fee, commission, or other valuable consideration, or who, with the intention or in the expectation or upon the promise of receiving or collecting a fee, commission, or other valuable consideration, lists for sale, sells, exchanges, purchases, rents, or leases or offers or attempts or agrees to negotiate a sale, exchange, purchase, lease, or rental of an estate or interest in real estate, or collects or offers or attempts or agrees to collect rent or income for the use of real estate, or negotiates or offers or attempts or agrees to negotiate, a loan secured or to be secured by a mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance upon or transfer of real estate, or who, as owner or otherwise and as a whole or partial vocation, sells, or through solicitation, advertising, or otherwise offers or attempts to sell or to negotiate the sale of any lot, plot or site in any tract of land used or proposed to be used for burial purposes, or any interest or right therein, either as an investment or for use thereof for burial purposes, or who is engaged in the business of erecting houses or causing the erection of houses for sale on his, their, or its land and who sells, offers, or attempts to sell such houses, or who, as owner or otherwise and as a whole or partial vocation, sells, or through solicitation, advertising, or otherwise, offers or attempts to sell or to negotiate the sale of any lot or lots in any subdivision of land comprising 10 lots or more: Providing, however, That this definition shall not apply to the sale of space for advertising of real estate in any newspaper, magazine, or other publication. A 'business-chance broker' within the meaning of this act is any person, firm, partnership, association, copartnership, or corporation who for a compensation or valuable consideration sells or offers for sale, buys or offers to buy, leases or offers to lease, or negotiates the purchase or sale or exchange of a business, business opportunity, or the goodwill of a business for others.

" 'Real-estate salesmen' means a person employed by a licensed real-estate broker to list for sale, sell, or offer for sale, to buy or offer to buy, or to negotiate the purchase or sale, or exchange of real estate, or to negotiate a loan on real estate, or to lease or rent or offer to lease, rent, or place for rent, any real estate, or collect or offer or attempt to collect rent or income for the use of real estate, or to sell or offer or attempt to sell any lot, plot, or site in any tract of land used or proposed to be used for burial purposes, or any interest or right therein either as an investment or for use thereof for burial purposes, for or in behalf of such real-estate broker.

" 'Business-chance salesman' means any person employed by a licensed business-chance broker to list for sale, sell, or offer for sale, to buy or offer to buy, to lease or offer to lease, or to negotiate the purchase or sale or exchange of a business, business opportunity, or goodwill of an existing business for or in behalf of such business-chance broker.

"Persons employed by a licensed broker in a clerical capacity or in subordinate positions who receive a fixed compensation and who receive no additional commission or compensation for specific acts of renting or leasing real estate and who do not sell or exchange, or offer or attempt to sell or exchange, real estate or a business, business opportunity, or the goodwill of a business shall not be required to obtain licenses.

"One act for a compensation or valuable consideration of buying or selling real estate for or of another, or offering for another to buy, sell, or exchange real estate, or leasing, renting, or offering to lease or rent real estate, or negotiating or offering to negotiate a loan secured by a mortgage, deed of trust, or other incumbrance upon or transfer of real estate, except as herein specifically excepted, shall constitute a person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation, performing, or offering, or attempting to perform any of the acts enumerated herein, a real-estate broker, unless such act shall be performed or offered or attempted to be performed by a person for and in behalf of a real-estate broker in which event such act shall constitute such person a real-estate salesman.

"One act for a compensation or valuable consideration of buying, selling or leasing or exchanging a business, business opportunity, or the goodwill of a business for or of another or offering for another to buy, sell, exchange, or lease a business, business opportunity, or the goodwill of a business, except as herein specifically excepted, shall constitute the person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation performing or offering or attempting to perform any of the acts enumerated herein, a business-chance broker, unless such act shall be performed or offered or attempted to be performed by a person for or on behalf of a business-chance broker, in which event such act shall constitute such person a business-chance salesman.

"The provisions of this act shall not apply to receivers, referees, administrators, executors, guardians, trustees, or other persons appointed or acting under the judgment or order of any court; or public officers while performing their official duty, or attorneys at law in the ordinary practice of their profession; nor to any person, copartnership, association, or corporation, who, as owner or lessor, shall perform any of the acts aforesaid with reference to property owned or leased by them, or to the regular officers and employees thereof, with respect to the property so owned or leased, where such acts are performed in the regular course of, or as an incident to, the management of such property and the investments therein, except as otherwise provided in this act.

"Every provision of this act applying specifically to an applicant or application for a license as a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman, and to a real-estate license, and to a licensee licensed as a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman, and to anyone acting in the capacity of a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman without a license, shall likewise apply in a similar manner, respectively, to every applicant and application for a license as a business-chance broker or a business-chance salesman, and to every business-chance license, and to every licensee licensed as a business-chance broker or a business-chance salesman, and to anyone acting in the capacity of a business-chance broker or a business-chance salesman without a license."

SEC. 4. The seventh paragraph of section 3 is amended to read as follows:

"The compensation of members of the Commission, except the ex officio member, shall be $10 each for personal attendance at each meeting, but shall not exceed for any member $1,500 per annum."

SEC. 5. Section 4 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. No license under the provisions of this act shall be issued to any person who has not attained the age of 21 years, nor to any person who cannot read, write, and understand the English language; nor until the Commission has received satisfactory proof that the applicant is trustworthy and competent to transact the business of a real-estate broker or real-estate salesman or business-chance broker or business-chance salesman in such a manner as to safeguard the interests of the public: Provided, however, That a salesman shall have 6 months from the date of the issuance of his original license to prove his competency, and failure to prove his competency to the satisfaction of the Commission within that period will automatically cancel his original license or any renewal thereof.

"In determining competency, the Commission shall require proof that every applicant for a license has a general and fair understanding of the obligations between principal and agent, as well as of the provisions of this act; and that an applicant for a license as a real-estate broker has a fair understanding of the general purposes and effect of deeds, mortgages, and contracts for the sale or leasing of real estate, and of elementary real-estate practices; and that an applicant for a license as a business-chance broker has a fair understanding of the general purposes and effect of bills of sale, chattel mortgages and trusts, and the provisions of the law governing sales in bulk.

"No license shall be issued to any person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation whose application has been rejected in the District of Columbia or any State within 3 months prior to date of application, or whose real-estate license has been revoked in the District of Columbia or any State within 1 year prior to date of application."

SEC. 6. (a) The eighth paragraph of section 5 of said act is amended by striking out the words, "executed by two good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Commission, or".

(b) Section 5 of said act is further amended by inserting at the end of the tenth paragraph thereof the following:

"In the event the surety becomes insolvent or a bankrupt, or ceases to do business or ceases to be authorized to do business in the District of Columbia, the principal shall, within 10 days after notice thereof, given by the Commission, duly file a new bond in like amount and conditioned as the original and if the prinicpal shall fail so to do the license of such principal shall terminate."

SEC. 7. (a) The third paragraph of section 7 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"The fee for an original broker's license and every renewal thereof shall be $30: Provided, however, That the fee for an original broker's license and every renewal thereof for individual members, partners, and officers of firms, partnerships, and corporations shall be $30 for the first member, partner, or officer to be designated by the firm, partnership, or corporation and $10 for each additional member, partner, or officer of such firm, partnership, or corporation."

(b) The fifth paragraph of said section 7 of said act is amended by striking out the words "real estate."

(c) Section 7 of said act is further amended by inserting a new paragraph between the fifth and sixth paragraphs of said section 7 to read as follows:

"The fees provided herein for any original license shall be reduced by one-half in all cases where the application for such original license is filed between January 1 and July 1 of any year."

(d) The seventh paragraph of section 7 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Commission shall cause to be issued a new license for each ensuing year, in the absence of any reason or condition which might warrant the refusal of the granting of a license, upon receipt of the written request of the applicant and the annual fee therefor, as herein required: Provided, however, That an applicant who, on or before July 1, fails to file said written request and pay the annual fee must comply with all the provisions of this act applicable to an original applicant except that the Commission may waive the requirement of furnishing proof of competency. The revocation of a broker's license shall automatically suspend every salesman's license granted to any person by virtue of his employment by the broker whose license has been revoked, pending a change of employer and the issuance of a new license. Such new license shall be issued without charge if granted during the same license year in which the original license is granted."

(e) The eighth paragraph of section 7 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"No person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman, or a business-chance broker or a business-chance salesman, within the District of Columbia shall bring or maintain any action in the courts of the District of Columbia for the collection of compensation for any services performed as a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman or a business-chance broker or business-chance salesman, or enforcement of any contract relating to real estate without alleging and proving that such person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation was a duly licensed real-estate broker or real-estate salesman, or business-chance broker or business-chance salesman, at the time the alleged cause of action arose."

(f) The ninth paragraph of said section 7 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"Every broker licensed hereunder shall maintain a place of business in the District of Columbia. If a broker maintains more than one place of business within the District of Columbia, a duplicate license shall be issued to such broker for each branch office maintained; and there shall be no fee charged for any such duplicate license."

(g) The tenth paragraph of said section 7 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"When a broker changes the location of his principal place of business he must immediately notify the Commission in writing and return to the Commission his license together with the licenses of all salesmen in his employ, and the Commission shall issue a new license to the broker and to each of the salesmen without charge. Failure to notify the Commission and to return his license when the location of his principal place of business is changed, will automatically cancel the broker's license and the licenses of all salesmen in his employ. However, new licenses for the unexpired term may be issued by the Commission without the payment of any additional fee, provided a written request therefor, accompanied by a new bond, is filed."

(h) The eleventh paragraph of said section 7 of said act is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "When a salesman shall be discharged or shall terminate his employment with the broker by whom he is employed, it shall be the duty of such salesman to immediately notify the Commission, and it shall be unlawful for him to perform any of the acts contemplated by this act either directly or indirectly from and after such termination of employment until such time as he has been employed by another licensed broker and a license has been reissued him by the Commission."

(i) Section 7 of said act is further amended by adding at the end thereof two new paragraphs to read as follows:

"A license issued to an individual cannot be transferred to another individual. However, an individual licensed as a broker may, upon written request to the Commission, change his status to that of an individual broker or to that of a partner of a partnership, or to that of an officer of a corporation, for any unexpired term of his license, without the payment of any additional fee, and such change shall not work a revocation or require a renewal of the bond of any such broker. This provision shall not be applicable to any real-estate broker in respect to a change of license to that of a business-chance broker or vice versa.

"No license shall be issued to any firm, partnership, association, or corporation unless every individual member, partner, or officer of such firm, partnership, association, or corporation who actively participates in the brokerage business thereof is licensed as a broker."

SEC. 8. Section 8 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The Commission may, upon its own motion, and shall, upon the verified complaint in writing of any person, provided such complaint or such complaint together with evidence, documentary or otherwise, presented in connection therewith, makes out a prima facie case, investigate the conduct of any real-estate broker or real-estate salesman, or business-chance broker or business-chance salesman, and shall have the power to suspend or to revoke any license issued under the provisions of this act, at any time where the licensee has by false or fraudulent representation obtained a license; or where the licensee, in performing or attempting to perform any of the acts mentioned herein, has—

"(a) Made any substantial misrepresentation;

"(b) Made any false promises of a character likely to influence, persuade, or induce;

"(c) Pursued a continued and flagrant course of misrepresentation, or making of false promises through agents or salesmen, or advertising or otherwise;

"(d) Acted for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge of all parties for whom he acts;

"(e) Accepted a commission or valuable consideration as a real-estate salesman or as a business-chance salesman for the performance of any of the acts specified in this act from any person, except the broker under whom he is licensed;

"(f) Represented or attempted to represent a real-estate broker or a business-chance broker other than the employer, without the express knowledge and consent of the employer;

"(g) Failed, within a reasonable time, to account for or to remit any money, valuable documents, or other property coming into his possession which belong to others;

"(h) Demonstrated such unworthiness or incompetency to act as a real-estate broker or real-estate salesman or a business-chance broker or a business-chance salesman as to endanger the interests of the public;

"(i) While acting or attempting to act as agent or broker, purchased or attempted to purchase any property or interest therein for himself, either in his own name or by use of a straw party, without disclosing such fact to the party he represents;

"(j) Been guilty of any other conduct, whether of the same or a different character from that hereinbefore specified which constitutes fraudulent or dishonest dealing;

"(k) Used any trade name or insignia of membership in any real-estate organization of which the licensee is not a member;

"(l) Disregarded or violated any provisions of this act;

"(m) Guaranteed or authorized or permitted any broker or salesman to guarantee future profits which may result from the resale of real property, or a business, business opportunity, or the goodwill of any existing business;

"(n) Placed a sign on any property offering it for sale or for rent or offering it for sale or rent without the written consent of the owner or his authorized agent;

"(o) Accepted a compensation from more than one party to a transaction without the knowledge of all the parties to the transaction; or

"(p) Failed to restore the bond to its original amount after a recovery on the bond as provided in section 5."

SEC. 9. Section 10 of said act is amended by striking out the period at the end of the first paragraph thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma, and by adding after such comma the following: "and with the further exception that a nonresident of the District of Columbia need not maintain a place of business within the District of Columbia if he is licensed in and maintains a place of business in the State in which he resides."

SEC. 10. Section 12 of said act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"The exemption contained in this section shall not apply to any bank, trust company, building and loan association, insurance company, or any land-mortgage or farm-loan association, which for another and for a compensation, performs any of the acts defined herein as the acts of a real-estate broker or business-chance broker in connection with any property, wherein such bank, trust company, building and loan association, insurance company, land-mortgage or farm-loan association has no fiduciary interest such as receiver, referee, administrator, executor, guardian, or trustee."

SEC. 11. Section 14 of said act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"It shall be unlawful within the District of Columbia for any person, firm, partnership, association, or corporation, foreign or domestic, either as owner or otherwise, to offer, give, award, or promise, or to use any method, scheme, or plan offering, giving, awarding, or promising free lots in connection with the sale or the offering for sale or an attempt to sell or negotiate the sale of any real estate or interest therein, wherever situated, for the purpose of attracting, inducing, persuading, or influencing a purchaser or a prospective purchaser; or to offer, promise, or give prizes of any name or nature for attendance at or participation in any sale of real estate, by auction or otherwise.

"It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership, association, or corporation knowingly to pay a fee, commission, or compensation to anyone for the performance within the District of Columbia of any service or act defined in this act as the act of a real-estate broker, real-estate salesman, business-chance broker, or business-chance salesman, who was not duly licensed as such at the time such service or act was performed, provided that this paragraph shall not apply to the division of commission by a broker licensed hereunder with a nonresident cooperating broker."

SEC. 12. No license heretofore issued under the authority of said act of Congress approved March 25, 1937, where the application therefor was accompanied by a bond which does not conform with the requirements of said act as amended hereby, shall be reissued or renewed unless the application for such reissuance or renewal shall be accompanied by a bond in accordance with said act as amended by this act.

With the following Committee amendments:

The Committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INSANITY PROCEEDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7086) to provide for insanity proceedings in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person with whom an alleged insane person may reside, or at whose house he may be, or the father or mother, husband or wife, brother or sister, or the child of lawful age of any such person, or the nearest relative or friend available, or the committee of such person, or an officer of any charitable institution, home, or hospital in which such person may be, or any duly accredited officer or agent of the Board of Public Welfare, or any officer authorized to make arrests in the District of Columbia who has arrested any alleged insane person under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 27, 1904 (33 Stat. 316), may apply for a writ de lunatico inquirendo and an order of commitment, or either thereof, for any alleged insane person in the District of Columbia, by filing in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia a verified petition therefor, containing a statement of the facts upon which the allegation of insanity is based.

Any person believing he has, or is about to, become mentally ill or deficient, may, upon his own application and petition enter Gallinger Municipal Hospital for observation and place himself subject to examination and commitment as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. Upon the filing with the court of a verified petition as hereinabove provided, accompanied by the affidavits of two or more responsible residents of the District of Columbia setting forth that they believe the person therein named to be insane or of unsound mind, the length of time they have known such person, that they believe such person to be incapable of managing his own affairs, and that such person is not fit to be at large or to go unrestrained, and that if such person be permitted to remain at liberty the rights of persons and property will be jeopardized or the preservation of public peace imperiled or the commission of crime rendered probable, and that such person is a fit subject for treatment by reason of his or her mental condition, the court, or any judge thereof in vacation, may, in its or his discretion, issue an attachment for the immediate apprehension and detention, for preliminary examination, of such person in Gallinger Municipal Hospital for a period not exceeding 48 hours, and thereafter, unless found by the staff of Gallinger Municipal Hospital within said period of time to be of sound mind, in St. Elizabeths Hospital for an additional period not exceeding 30 days. Any person so apprehended and detained shall be given an examination within 48 hours of his admission into Gallinger Municipal Hospital by the staff of Gallinger Municipal Hospital. If said staff shall fail, within 48 hours after the admission of such person into Gallinger Municipal Hospital, to find that such person is of sound mind, the superintendent of said hospital shall immediately transfer such person to St. Elizabeths Hospital and shall report the facts of such transfer to the Commission on Mental Health as established by the act of June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 627, ch. 326), and hereinafter referred to as the Commission. The superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital is hereby authorized to receive and detain persons so transferred, at the expense of the District of Columbia.

Persons arrested under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 27, 1904 (33 Stat. 316), shall be detained in Gallinger Municipal Hospital pending the filing of a petition as provided in section 1 of this act. Such petition shall be filed within 48 hours after such person shall have been admitted into Gallinger Municipal Hospital, or, if such 48-hour period shall expire on a Sunday or legal holiday, then not later than noon of the next succeeding day which is not a Sunday or legal holiday. The court, or any judge thereof in vacation, may, upon being satisfied of the sufficiency of the petition, sign an order authorizing the continued detention of said person in Gallinger Municipal Hospital for a further period not exceeding 48 hours, and thereafter, unless found by the staff of Gallinger Municipal Hospital within said period of time to be of sound mind, in St. Elizabeths Hospital for an additional period not exceeding 30 days. If such petition be not filed, and such order of court obtained within said first-mentioned period of 48 hours, the person shall be discharged forthwith. If said staff shall fail, within 48 hours after the filing of said petition, to find that such person is of sound mind, the superintendent of said hospital shall immediately transfer such person to St. Elizabeths Hospital, and shall report the fact of such transfer to the Commission. The superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital is hereby authorized to receive and detain persons so transferred, at the expense of the District of Columbia.

If as a result of examination, the staff of Gallinger Municipal Hospital shall find that any person detained in Gallinger Municipal Hospital pursuant to the provisions of this section is of sound mind, he shall be discharged forthwith by said Gallinger Municipal Hospital, and the petition, if any, shall be dismissed.

Any petition filed in the equity court for a writ de lunatico inquirendo or for an order of commitment of any alleged insane person, shall be referred by the court to the Commission for report and recommendation within such time as the court may designate, not exceeding 7 days, which time may be extended by the court for good cause shown, and in such event the period of temporary commitment in St. Elizabeths Hospital may be extended by the court for such additional time as the court shall deem necessary. The Commission shall examine the alleged insane person and any other person, including any suggested by the alleged insane person, his relatives, friends, or representatives, whose testimony may be relevant, competent, and material upon the issue of insanity; and the Commission shall afford opportunity for hearing to any alleged insane person, his relatives, friends, or representatives. At all hearings the alleged insane person shall have the right to be represented by counsel.

The Commission is hereby authorized to conduct its examination and hearings of cases elsewhere than at the offices of said Commission in its discretion, according to the circumstances of the case.

If in the determination of the Commission he be found not to be sane, then it shall be the duty of the Commission to apply to the court for a date for a hearing. In all cases before said hearing the said Commission shall cause to be served personally upon the patient a written notice of the time and place of final hearing at least 5 days before the date fixed. Five days' notice of the time and place of the hearing shall in all cases be mailed to or served upon the applicant, but in case the applicant is not the husband, wife, or nearest relative, the notice shall be mailed to or served upon the husband, wife, or nearest relative, if possible. The notice shall contain a statement that if the patient desires to oppose the application for a final order of commitment he may appear personally or by attorney at the time and place fixed for the hearing. Proof of service shall be made at the hearing. The court may in its discretion appoint an attorney or guardian ad litem to represent the alleged insane person at any hearing before the court, or before the court and jury, and shall allow the attorney or guardian ad litem so appointed a reasonable fee for his services. Such fees may be charged against the estate or property, if any, of the alleged insane person.

If a demand is made for a jury trial, the chief executive officer of St. Elizabeths Hospital shall see that the patient has been given opportunity to appear personally or by attorney at the hearing and assist him in communicating with his friends, relatives, or attorney. If the chief executive officer shall certify that in his opinion it would be prejudicial to the health of the patient or unsafe to produce the patient at the inquiry, then such patient shall not be required to be produced.

Proof of service of the required notices shall be made at the hearing.

SEC. 3. Upon the receipt of the report and recommendation of the Commission a copy shall be served personally upon the alleged insane person, his guardian ad litem, or his attorney, if he has one, together with notice that he has 5 days within which to demand a jury trial. A demand for hearing by the court, or a demand for jury trial for the purpose of determining the sanity or insanity of the alleged insane person may be made by the said alleged insane person or by anyone in his behalf, or a jury trial may be ordered by the court upon its own motion. If demand be made for a jury trial, or such trial be ordered by the court on its own motion, the case shall be calendared for trial not more than 10 days after demand for hearing by the court for a jury trial, unless the time is extended by the court. The Commission, or any of the members thereof, shall be competent and compellable witnesses at any trial or hearing of an alleged insane person. In any case in which a commitment at public expense, in whole or in part, is sought, the corporation counsel or one of his assistants shall represent the petitioner unless said petitioner shall be represented by counsel of his or her own choice.

SEC. 4. The jury to be used in lunacy inquisitions in those cases where a jury trial shall be demanded or ordered shall be empaneled, upon order of the court, from the jurors in attendance upon other branches of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, who shall perform such services in addition to and as part of their duties in said court.

SEC. 5. If no demand be made for a jury trial, the judge holding court shall determine the sanity or insanity of said alleged insane person, but such judge may, in his discretion, require other proofs, in addition to the petition and report of the Commission, or such judge may order the temporary commitment of said alleged insane person for observation or treatment for an additional period of not more than 30 days. The judge may, in his discretion, dismiss the petition, notwithstanding the recommendation of the Commission. If the judge be satisfied that the alleged insane person is of sound mind, he shall forthwith discharge such person and dismiss the petition.

SEC. 6. If the judge be satisfied that the alleged insane person is insane, or if a jury shall so find, the judge may commit the insane person as he in his discretion shall find to be for the best interests of the public and of the insane person. In case of a temporary commitment, the court may make additional temporary commitments upon further examination by, and recommendation of, the Commission.

SEC. 7. Recommendations of the Commission must be made by the unanimous recommendation of the three members acting upon the case. If the three members of the Commission be unable to agree upon the recommendation to be made in any case, they shall immediately file with the court a report setting forth the fact that they are unable to agree on the case, and in that event the court shall hear and determine the case, unless the alleged insane person, or someone in his behalf, shall demand a jury trial, in which event the case shall be heard and determined by the court and a jury.

If the Commission shall agree upon a recommendation, it shall file with the court a report setting forth its findings of fact and conclusions of law and its recommendation based thereon which recommendation shall be in one of the following forms:

(A) That the person is of sound mind and should be discharged forthwith and the petition dismissed.

(B) That the mental condition of the alleged insane person is such that a definite diagnosis cannot be made without further study, or that the mental incapacity of said person will probably be of short duration, and that said person should be further detained and committed in St. Elizabeths Hospital as hereinbefore provided for, or in any other hospital in the District of Columbia as provided in the act approved April 27, 1904, for further observation or treatment for such period of time as the court may determine, during which said time the Commission shall from time to time examine said person and make a recommendation to the court as to the final disposition of the case.

(C) That the person is of unsound mind and (1) should be committed to St. Elizabeths Hospital, or any other hospital provided by section 4 of the act approved April 27, 1904, (a) at public expense, or (b) at the expense of those persons who are required by law, or who will agree to pay for the maintenance and treatment of said insane person, or (c) that the relatives of said insane person, mentioned in section 11 of this act are able to pay a specified sum per month toward the support and maintenance of said insane person; (2) is harmless and may safely be committed to the care of his relatives or friends (naming them) who are willing to accept the custody, care, and maintenance of said insane person under conditions specified by the Commission; (3) should be committed to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for care and treatment in a Veterans' Administration facility: Provided, That there shall be filed with the court or Commission a certificate executed by said Administrator or his duly authorized representative, showing said person is entitled to such care and treatment and that facilities therefor are available.

SEC. 8. If an insane person be found by the Commission, subject to the review of the court, not to be a resident of the District of Columbia, he may be committed by the court to St. Elizabeths Hospital as a District of Columbia patient until such time as his residence shall have been ascertained. Upon the ascertainment of such insane person's residence in some other jurisdiction, he shall be transferred to the State of such residence. The expense of transferring such patient, including the traveling expenses of necessary attendants to insure his safe transfer, shall be borne by the District of Columbia only if the patient be indigent.

Any insane person found by the Commission to have been a resident of the District of Columbia for more than 1 year prior to the filing of the petition, and any person found within the District of Columbia whose residence cannot be ascertained, who is not in confinement on a criminal charge, may be committed by the court to, and confined in, said St. Elizabeths Hospital, or any other hospital in said District, which, in the judgment of the Commission of said District, is properly constructed and equipped for the reception and care of such persons, and the official in charge of which, for the time being, is willing to receive such persons.

"Resident of the District of Columbia," as used in this section means a person who has maintained his principal place of abode in the District of Columbia for more than 1 year prior to the filing of the petition provided for in section 1 of this act.

If it appears that a person found to be insane is harmless and his or her relatives or committee of his or her person are willing and able properly to care for such insane person at some place or institution other than St. Elizabeths Hospital, the judge may order that such insane person be placed in the care and custody of such relatives or such committee upon their entering into an undertaking to provide for such insane person as the court may direct.

SEC. 9. The father, mother, hubsand, wife, and adult children of an insane person, if of sufficient ability, and the committee or guardian of his or her person and estate, if his or her estate is sufficient for the purpose, shall pay the cost to the District of Columbia of his or her maintenance, including treatment in St. Elizabeths Hospital or in any other hospital to which the insane person may be committed. It shall be the further duty of said Commission to examine under oath the father, mother, husband, wife, adult children, and committee, if any, of any alleged insane person whenever such relatives live within the District of Columbia, and to ascertain the ability of such relatives or committee, if any, to maintain or contribute toward the maintenance of such alleged insane person: Provided, That in no case shall said relatives or committee be required to pay more than the actual cost to the District of Columbia of maintenance of such alleged insane person.

If any person hereinabove made liable for the maintenance of an insane person shall fail so to provide or pay for such maintenance, the court shall issue to such person a citation to show cause why he should not be adjudged to pay a portion or all of the expenses of maintenance of such patient. The citation shall be served at least 10 days before the hearing thereon. If, upon such hearing, it shall appear to the court that the insane person has not sufficient estate out of which his maintenance may properly be fully met and that he has relatives of the degrees hereinabove mentioned who are parties to the proceedings, and who are able to contribute thereto, the court may make an order requiring payment by such relatives of such sums as it may find they are reasonably able to pay and as may be necessary to provide for the maintenance of such insane person. Said order shall require the payment of such sums to the Board of Public Welfare annually, semiannually, or quarterly as the court may direct. It shall be the duty of the Board to collect the said sums due under this section, and to turn the same into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia. And such order may be enforced against any property of the insane person or of the person liable or undertaking to maintain him in the same way as if it were an order for temporary alimony in a divorce case.

SEC. 10. Any insane person who has been committed to St. Elizabeths Hospital or any other hospital, and who shall have been released from such hospital as improved, or who shall have been paroled from such hospital (but who shall not have been discharged as cured), and who shall have been absent from the hospital on release or parole for a period of 6 months or longer, shall have the right to appear before the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia for a hearing to determine the sanity and right to restoration to the status of a person of sound mind of said insane person by filing a petition therefor with the court upon a form to be provided by the Commission for that purpose. It shall be the duty of the Commission to make an examination of the records of St. Elizabeths Hospital of the insane person as may be necessary to determine such questions, and if necessary have the person examined by the members of the staff of St. Elizabeths Hospital and to make a report and recommendation to the court. In the event the Commission shall find from the records and examination that the said person is of sound mind and shall recommend to the court the restoration of said person to the status of a person of sound mind such recommendation shall be sufficient to authorize the court to enter an order declaring such person to be restored to his or her former legal status as a person of sound mind. In the event the Commission shall find such person to be of unsound mind, it shall report that finding to the court. Upon the filing by the Commission of a report finding such person to be of unsound mind, the insane person shall have the right to a hearing by the court or by the court and a jury. For the purpose of making the examination and observations required by this section, the Commission shall have the right to examine the records and to interrogate the physicians and attendants at St. Elizabeths Hospital or any other hospital in which such patient shall have been confined, who have had the insane person under their care, and the Commission may recommend to the court the temporary recommitment of such person for said purpose. At such trial by the court or by the court and jury, an adjudication shall be made as to whether the person is of sound mind or is still of unsound mind.

SEC. 11. The same fees and mileage as are paid in the courts of the United States shall be paid in the case of witnesses subpenaed under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. The court in its discretion may require the petitioner to file an undertaking with surety to be approved by the court in such amount as the court may deem proper, conditioned to save harmless the respondent by reason of costs incurred, including attorneys' fees, if any, and damages suffered by the respondent as a result of any such action.

SEC. 13. All applications and certificates for commitment and confinement of any patient to any hospital in the District of Columbia for the care and the treatment of the insane must be made on forms approved by the Commission and furnished by it.

SEC. 14. Any person who executes a verified petition or affidavit as provided in this act, by which he or she secures or attempts to secure the apprehension, detention, or restraint of any other person in the District of Columbia without probable cause for believing such person to be insane or of unsound mind, or any physician who knowingly makes any false certificate or affidavit as to the sanity or insanity of any other person, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both.

SEC. 15. Nothing contained in this act shall deprive the alleged insane person of the benefit of existing remedies to secure his release or to prove his sanity, or of any other legal remedies he may have.

SEC. 16. All acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 17. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, such invalidity shall not affect other provisions or applications of the act which can be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this act are declared to be severable.

"SEC. 16. Section 2 of the act approved June 8, 1938, is hereby amended by deleting the words 'for such service the alternate shall receive $10 for each day of actual service' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'For such service the alternate shall receive, for each day of actual service, the same compensation as fixed in accordance with the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for the lawyer member of the Commission.' "

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from West Virginia if the amendments reported provide for voluntary commitment? Are these the so-called Vreeland amendments that have been discussed?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is true; the bill provides for voluntary commitment.

Since the gentleman has asked this question, I believe the House ought to have just a brief explanation of this measure. We believe it is necessary to pass at this time legislation in connection with the lunacy situation in the District of Columbia. This bill will help to alleviate certain acute conditions that exist at Gallinger Hospital, an institution in which the gentleman has expressed considerable concern.

This bill will permit the superintendent of that hospital to transfer a patient who is found to be insane to St. Elizabeths Hospital for a temporary period, pending commitment or release. At the present time such patients must be held in Gallinger Hospital, and the psychopathic ward there is not equipped to handle these cases. I may say that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND] has spent considerable time preparing this legislation, and to him and others who aided him I believe thanks are due. This bill has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and of the health officer.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will yield further, may I just say the whole committee deserves a great deal of credit, because they are going to relieve a situation at Gallinger Hospital that has been causing untold suffering, a condition for which the hospital authorities are not responsible, a condition which has just grown up. I believe nothing has been done for the District of Columbia that should prove so beneficial as the adoption of this bill. I hope the committee at the next session will give further study to the situation and elaborate and improve it, which I know they have in mind.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman from Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL ACT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7314) to amend the act of Congress known as the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended, to permit the sale of beer to persons seated in automobiles parked upon the premises of the permittee in the District of Columbia, and request that the bill be given immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I object to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the House Calendar, and the gentleman from West Virginia has the right, under the rules, to call up the bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question, although I shall be pleased to explain the bill.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I demand to be heard on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia is in control of the time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make this explanation. I attempt always to cooperate with members of the Committee on the District of Columbia and I want to do so in this instance. Although personally I do not drink either beer or liquor, I can say to you that the committee gave most careful consideration to this bill. I personally would not be a party to any measure which I felt would increase drinking and lead to reckless driving. I honestly do not think this legislation would have any such effect.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDOLPH. Just a moment. I have the floor. I am trying to be very courteous to the gentlemen and assist him. I have no disposition, if the gentleman from Michigan feels very strongly in his objection to the bill, although the measure was properly considered on last Friday by the committee and I am sorry the gentleman was not present to insist on its consideration at this time.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from West Virginia to say that he was willing to withdraw the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not yet been read. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 11, paragraph (g), of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended, as reads as follows: "In the case of restaurants and passenger-carrying marine vessels and club cars or dining cars on a railroad, said spirits and wine, except light wines, shall be sold or served only to persons seated at public tables, and beer and light wines shall be sold and served only to persons seated at public tables or at bona fide lunch counters, except that spirits, wine, and beer may be sold or served to assemblages of more than six individuals in a private room when such room has been previously approved by the Board" be amended to read as follows: "In the case of restaurants and passenger-carrying marine vessels and club cars or dining cars on a railroad, said spirits and wine, except light wines, shall be sold or served only to persons seated at public tables, and beer and light wines shall be sold and served only to persons seated at public tables or at bona fide lunch counters, except that beer may be sold to persons seated in vehicles parked entirely upon the premises of the licensee, and except that spirits, wine, and beer may be sold or served to assemblages of more than six individuals in a private room when such room has been previously approved by the Board"; and that so much of section 11, paragraph (h), of such act, as amended, as reads as follows: "In the case of restaurants, taverns, and passenger-carrying marine vessels and club cars or dining cars on a railroad said beer and light wines shall be sold or served only to persons seated at public tables or at bona fide lunch counters, except that beer and light wines may be sold or served to assemblages of more than six individuals in a private room when such room has been previously approved by the Board" be amended to read as follows: "In the case of restaurants, taverns, and passenger-carrying marine vessels and club cars or dining cars on a railroad, said beer or light wines shall be sold or served only to persons seated at public tables or at bona fide lunch counters, except that beer may be sold to persons seated in vehicles parked entirely upon the premises of the licensees, and except that beer and light wines may be sold or served to assemblages of more than six individuals in a private room when such room has been previously approved by the Board."

SEC. 2. The amendments made by this act shall take effect immediately following its enactment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to take the floor in opposition to this legislation, but, in my opinion, it is highly dangerous and never should have been reported by the committee.

Briefly, this bill legalizes the drinking of intoxicating beverages by motorists in automobiles. I cannot think of a more ridiculous situation. While citizens of the District of Columbia are demanding a reduction in the heavy traffic-death toll in Washington, Congress is asked to place its stamp of approval on a practice that would, no doubt, greatly increase the traffic hazards. I, for one, have no desire to support such a proposition, and I would consider myself derelict in my duty if I failed actively to oppose such a measure.

This bill would permit the serving of alcoholic beverages, wine and beer, on service trays attached to automobiles parked in the immediate vicinity of licensed premises. It was not written until after the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board abolished such a practice in a ruling last June 1. This ruling was issued after the Corporation Counsel had given an opinion holding such service of wines and beer illegal.

I am in possession of a copy of a memorandum to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board by Elwood H. Seal, Corporation Counsel. This memorandum contains the reasons on which the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board predicated its ruling. I do not have the time to include this memorandum in my statement but will place it in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as an extension of remarks.

This memorandum points out that when young people park their automobiles on licensed premises and are served beer and wine while seated in their automobiles, they are served by young men and young women who are more interested in the tips they receive than in seeking to ascertain whether their customers are of legal age and other details. As a result, many minors are served and are permitted to drink beer and wines on properties of licensees. Abuses in the service of intoxicating beverages under such conditions caused, I am told, the Board's ruling.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Did the gentleman make the statement that the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board is against this proposed legislation?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. The ruling of the Board speaks for itself. However, I do possess the memorandum of the corporation counsel to the Board, which, in conclusion, states:

For the reasons stated herein we believe the practice of selling beverages as indicated above to be not only an exceedingly dangerous one but also clearly illegal.

It is true that such service has been permitted a number of licensees for several years under an opinion in 1933 by the then United States attorney, who held that trays attached to automobiles were tables. The present corporation counsel, however, has held that trays are not tables, and that persons desiring to be served alcoholic beverages must be seated at tables within the premises of licensees. This bill is legislation to benefit a certain few who have been giving such curb service, the most prominent being the so-called hot shoppes of the District.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Are there other places besides the hot shoppes where they can be served in this way?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. There are other places; yes. I could give you the names but do not have them at the moment. The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board has given these places the privilege of serving people in automobiles while the automobiles in which they were seated were parked on the private property of such restaurants.

Mr. RICH. And if we want to cut down the death rate from automobile accidents, we ought to observe the admonition, "When you drive don't drink. When you drink, don't drive."

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, the gentleman knows that if you drive up to one of these hot shoppes, as mentioned, and walk 3 or 4 feet from your automobile and sit down at a table, you can drink all you want of beer or hard liquor either.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I believe that is correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. This measure only provides that beer can be served to a person sitting in his automobile, and not hard liquor.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. While they are inside of those places, however, the proprietor is in a position to ascertain the age of his customer and when his customer has had a sufficient amount of intoxicating liquors. He is in a position also to tell, when the customer walks out of his place, whether the customer is too intoxicated to drive.

Mr. NICHOLS. There has not been a single prosecution for selling such liquor to a minor in the District of Columbia, I am told by the corporation counsel's office this morning.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I am sorry I have not the time to give you further information regarding this legislation. In closing, I repeat that it is, to my mind, extremely dangerous and should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I recall in 1933, when repeal became effective in the whole country, it was necessary to draft enabling legislation for the District of Columbia. I was one of those who fought for weeks drafting such legislation. I recall very vividly the discussions we had at that time about elbow bending or whether the bend should be in the knee or whether you should drink perpendicularly or whether you had to sit down and drink. All that was threshed out at that time and we drafted an enabling act.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman wait until I finish my statement?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield right there? If I recall correctly, the gentleman was the author of legislation introduced here in the last session of Congress which sought to permit the drinking of beer at bars in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman had examined that bill, he would have noticed that on the bill there were the words "by request." Of course, Mr. Speaker, there come times when we have to amend the original act, and one of these times is before us now. It is, in a sense, unlawful for anyone to drive into one of these roadside barbecues, sit in his automobile, and be served with beer while in the car. Of course, he can get out and walk probably 10 feet and sit at a table and receive not only beer but light wines and high wines and hard liquor. The bill before us simply amends the act in this respect. It seeks to make it lawful to serve beer to people who are sitting in automobiles. It does not authorize anything further than that—merely to serve beer to people sitting in automobiles that are on the premises of the licensee. There may be something to what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCHAFER] says, although I doubt it. I am constrained to go along with the bill, for this reason. It is being done thousands of times a day in the District of Columbia. You can go to many places where they are doing it right along, and I venture to say there are present now those who have driven up to one of these A. & W. shops or some other stands and been served with beer.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, because it does continue, because it is not a glaring violation in any sense, it seems to me the proper thing for us to do is to take the curse of legal violation away from them and to legalize and authorize this practice, because it goes on everywhere; and since the bill limits it to beer, I, for one, can see no particular harm being done.

This practice is legal in many other States, and, insofar as I am aware, no complaint has been made that it is harmful or inimical to public morality or that it has promoted increased drinking. At the time the sale of beverages in the District of Columbia was legalized, much was said of the necessity of encouraging the use of beer and discouraging the consumption of hard liquors. If such is the case, this measure would have precisely that effect.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me before he does that?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I just came on the floor. As I understand it, this bill would legalize the serving of beer to people sitting in automobiles.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It would legalize the serving of beer on a tray, outside.

Mr. MICHENER. The person driving the car would not have to get out of the car to get the beer?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Has the gentleman ever given any thought to this idea, that if a person is buying beer at a table, before he starts then to drive his car, he would have to demonstrate that he could walk from the table to the car, and if beer is served to one in a car, the proprietor or anyone else would not be able to tell whether he could walk or not before he drove away.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, nobody would ever accuse me of being a prohibitionist. I have always been against the eighteenth amendment and I favored its repeal. I was chairman of the subcommittee that heard the Cullen bill that authorized the sale of beer throughout the United States. This bit of legislation seems to be far-reaching when it permits the sale of beer in the District of Columbia to people sitting in automobiles, after which those people can go along on the highway with their destruction of life. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHULTE. Is it not true that if we had passed the 12-cent milk bill, there would be no necessity for this beer bill?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was rejected.

MOUNT OLIVET ROAD NE., WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5144) to authorize the board of directors of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf to dedicate a portion of Mount Olivet Road NE., and to exchange certain lands with the Secretary of the Interior, to dispose of other lands, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after "park" insert "and playground."
Page 2, line 21, after "estate" insert ", now owned by the Columbia Institution for the Deaf or acquired by exchange under section 2 of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendments?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I may say in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the amendments simply clarify the language of the bill and have the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the District Commissioners.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There are no material changes in the bill?

Mr. RANDOLPH. None at all; simply clarification.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this concludes the business on the District of Columbia Calendar for today.

INTERLOCKING BANK DIRECTORATES

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2150) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes"; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2150) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "1943"; and the House agree to the same.

EMANUEL CELLER,
ZEBULON WEAVER,
U. S. GUYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

ROBERT F. WAGNER,
CARTER GLASS,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2150) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill provided an exception to the provision of section 8 of the Clayton Act (relating to the elimination of interlocking bank directorates under certain conditions) that until February 1, 1944, a director, officer, or employee, of a member bank of the Federal Reserve System, or any branch thereof, who was lawfully serving on August 23, 1935, as a private banker or as a director, officer, or employee of any other banking institution or branch thereof, may continue such service. The House amendment provided that the exception should be extended until February 1, 1941. The conference agreement extends the exception to February 1, 1943.

EMANUEL CELLER,
ZEBULON WEAVER,
U. S. GUYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, this is a simple proposition. It concerns interlocking bank directors. Where a man is a director of a member bank of the Federal Reserve System he cannot at the same time be a member of any other banking institution, but this bill gives him an opportunity to remain on the two boards until 1943. It is the result of a compromise between the House and Senate conferees.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I think the legislation is good in extending the time, but I think also the legislation was injurious when it was first made, because it was too drastic. Many men in business who were interlocking directors, not to any great extent but with the idea of trying to do good, sound business on several institutions, were deprived from being granted loans. That was injurious not only to the individual but to the bank.

Mr. CELLER. Of course, that is water over the dam. We have decided that there must be an end to the duplication of directors, but this extends the time. That is all it does.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

DISABILITY ALLOWANCES FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I have just placed on the Speaker's desk petition No. 19. This petition calls for the discharge of the World War Veterans' Legislative Committee from further consideration of H. R. 5074, and will automatically, of course, bring this important bill up for a vote on the floor of the House.

H. R. 5074 is a bill entitled "To reenact the law providing for disability allowances for World War veterans and to restore former service-connected disability status." Under the provisions of this bill, all disabled World War veterans who have had 90 days' or more service during the World War will be entitled to pension benefits if they have 10 percent or greater disability.

I am sure my colleagues have experienced great difficulty at this time in obtaining service connection of compensation claims for their veteran constituents. It has now been some 20 years since the World War veterans were discharged from the service and it is most difficult for them to obtain evidence connecting their disabilities with the service. There are a large number in my district who are, in fact, service connected but are unable to produce adequate evidence to authorize service connection. This bill, of course, will take care of them and, in fact, will take care of all veterans who have 10 percent or greater disability, even though same is not service connected.

World War veterans are now, many of them, getting well on in years, and a large percentage of them who do not draw compensation are unable to follow any gainful occupation. Thousands of them are in destitute circumstances and are seeking relief employment. I have in mind a number of veterans in my district who are unable to provide for themselves and their families, and this inability is brought about by disability largely due to their service. Through the passage of this bill, these veterans and their families will be substantially benefited and thousands of them will be enabled to leave the relief rolls and live an independent life with at least partial security.

This bill will restore the Disability Allowance Act which was repealed through the Economy Act of 1933. By passing this bill the Congress will to a large extent cancel the grave wrong which was done to ex-service men through the Economy Act of 1933. In addition to pension benefits for non-service connected disabilities, the bill provides for a 10 percent increase in existing service-connected compensation. The financial requirement of practically every veteran and his family is now greater than when his compensation was allowed. This bill will give to him and his family a small increase which is in most cases sorely needed.

I strongly commend this bill to my colleagues and trust that every Member of the House will promptly sign the petition and bring the bill to a vote on the floor before adjournment. The disabled veterans of this Nation are looking to the Congress patiently and anxiously, with the hope that relief can be accorded them before adjournment.

Copy of the bill follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second and third paragraphs of section 200 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, sec. 471), is hereby reenacted to read as follows:

"On and after the date of the reenactment of this paragraph any honorably discharged ex-service man who entered the service prior to November 11, 1918, and served 90 days or more during the World War, and who is or may hereafter be suffering from 10 percent or more permanent disability, as defined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, not the result of his own willful misconduct, which was not acquired in the service during the World War, or for which compensation is not payable, shall be entitled to receive a disability allowance at the following rates: 10 percent permanent disability, $12 per month; 25 percent permanent disability, $20 per month; 50 percent permanent disability, $30 per month; 75 percent permanent disability, $40 per month; total permanent disability, $60 per month. No disability allowance payable under this paragraph shall commence prior to the date of the reenactment of this paragraph or the date of application therefor, and such application shall be in such form as the Administrator may prescribe: Provided, That no disability allowance under this paragraph shall be payable to any person not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the year preceding the filing of application for such disability allowance under this paragraph. In any case in which the amount of compensation hereafter payable to any person for permanent disability under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, is less than the maximum amount of the disability allowance payable for a corresponding degree of disability under the provisions of this paragraph, then such person may receive such disability allowance in lieu of compensation. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to allow the payment to any person of both a disability allowance and compensation during the same period; and all payments made to any person for a period covered by a new or increased award of disability allowance or compensation shall be deducted from the amount payable under such new or increased award. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, upon the request of the Administrator, to transmit to the Administrator a certificate stating whether a veteran who is applying for a disability allowance under this paragraph was entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the year preceding the filing of application for the disability allowance and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein: Provided further, That any World War veteran who has drawn service-connected disability compensation for any period of 12 months since his or her discharge and who is not now drawing compensation shall be automatically restored to his or her former maximum compensation status: and provided further, That existing service-connected disability compensation rates of World War veterans and their widows and orphans shall be automatically increased 10 percent."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the first day of the first calendar month following the month during which this act is enacted.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a copy of the bill, H. R. 5074.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INCREASE OF MILITARY AND NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 367) to authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American republics to increase their military and naval establishments, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no objection to this bill. The resolution helps sustain the Monroe Doctrine and develop friendship and good relations in South American countries. I hope there will be no objection on either side. It was reported by unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the resolution?

Mr. BLOOM. With pleasure. This resolution, Mr. Speaker, permits the American republics to purchase from the United States, warships, munitions of war, and materials of war without any cost or expense to this Government. This is specifically stated in the bill, and, as has already been stated, this bill was reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Cannot the South American Republics do that now?

Mr. BLOOM. No; they cannot do that without this special legislation. It is necessary to have this special legislation so as to permit the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to sell these goods to the South American countries. There is no credit extended in any way. That is specifically provided in the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In the past, when we have sold warships to South America, how has it been done?

Mr. BLOOM. It has been done through private individuals. This resolution is to permit the Government of the United States to do it, something the Government has never done before.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Answering the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I may say that the governments of Europe can do this now. This resolution is simply to give to our own Government the same right the governments of Europe exercise in South America today. This would permit the South American countries to acquire these things from our country rather than from Europe. The resolution specifically provides that there shall be no extension of credit. It simply gives them this right to buy these things here for cash. It is in my opinion something that means much to the South American countries and also international comity between them and us.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does this mean that the Government is to be embarked in the proposition of selling arms and ammunition to foreign countries?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. If the gentleman from New York will yield, it does not. I may say in answer to the gentleman's question that many of these countries would like to buy certain kinds of guns from us, but because of existing law they have to buy them in Europe. These guns are not made by private manufacturers, but they are manufactured in Government yards. We can furnish them from our Government yards. As I say, the South American countries have been buying them in Europe.

Furthermore, the Department of State wrote letters to these 20 countries asking about it. They were favorable to it. It will be a very fine gesture and a very friendly gesture to these countries of the Americas.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much will they pay for these things; what price will they pay?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. They will pay for it as the work progresses—the same price that our own Government pays.

Mr. FISH. The cost of them would be the same as the cost to us.

Mr. BLOOM. It will be on a cost basis.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Do I understand that under this resolution we could sell them ships that we have already built? The gentleman understands, of course, that we are handicapped because we have not seen the resolution; it has not been reported yet.

Mr. BLOOM. We shall be very glad to explain it. This resolution provides for building ships.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And, if the gentleman will yield, it was reported out unanimously by the committee.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts is correct; it was reported unanimously. It seemed a helpful thing to do for countries who are our fine friends and a measure that would prove very helpful to the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I appreciate that, but the membership should be informed just what the bill seeks to do.

Mr. BLOOM. We shall be very glad to answer every question.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I could not hear the conversation going on down there. Do I understand this resolution contemplates that the United States Government, through its navy yards and its arsenals, is to embark upon the venture of manufacturing munitions of war for sale to other countries?

Mr. BLOOM. No; not exactly that. Let me read that section to the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. It provides only for sale to the American republics.

Mr. BLOOM. It applies merely to the 20 American republics. This permits the United States Government to sell to them at cost for cash.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. The question of sale is one thing, but the question of manufacture for sale is something else. Does this resolution put the United States Government into the business of manufacturing munitions and implements of war for sale to these particular countries in competition with our private industry, these arms and ammunitions to be sold at cost, while private industry must have a profit?

Mr. BLOOM. No; not any more than what they are doing now. It is not in competition with anyone else; it is merely that we should allow the 20 American republics to get the benefit of what we are doing, what we are manufacturing and buying at the present time.

Mr. MICHENER. I understand that; but what I am getting at is this: We must not lose sight of the forest because we see the trees—this is a new departure; it is a new venture on the part of our Government to embark upon the policy of manufacturing for sale war munitions or anything else.

Mr. BLOOM. But it stands to reason, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, that if they could buy any of these things from private manufacturers at a less price, or the same material for the same price, they would buy it from the private manufacturer. This resolution, however, is designed merely to give to the South American republics the benefit of what we are doing in this country in the way of protection, so that we can build the ships for them at cost; and we are going to get the benefit of it, because all of this material comes from the United States.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I would like to answer further the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] by saying there will be no competition whatever with private industry. In fact, the reason for this legislation is that these countries want to buy some of the naval guns that we have upon our own ships and some of our ammunition that we want to let them have. This cannot be manufactured in this country because private industry is not prepared to manufacture it. Take the guns, for instance, upon our naval ships. There is no place in the United States where those guns can be manufactured in private industry. They are manufactured in our navy yards. As a result, these South American countries have had to go to European countries, where there is no law against the government selling these things, and they are being sold over there, while the South American countries want to buy them here.

Mr. MICHENER. My thought is this: As I understand the resolution, this Government will take orders from the South American republics for this material. We do not want to be partial. We want to sell to all comers from South America. We will expand our facilities to meet the demands. This will disarrange our economy.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. No. The gentleman's fears are not well founded.

Mr. MICHENER. The result will be that we must of necessity increase our navy-yard capacity. We must increase the number of Government employees used for the purpose of manufacturing these things and we will have large agencies. We will have large navy yards set up and nothing for them to do.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Let me answer the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. May I answer the gentleman by saying if we do not do this, the South American and Latin American countries will go abroad and buy from German, Italian, and English yards. Why discriminate against our own labor? This will provide jobs for American citizens. It will bring money into this country. There will be no credit. This will enable them to do exactly what they do with every foreign nation.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; but we will have to expand our navy yards and our arsenals.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. No; the testimony of the representatives of the War and Navy Departments was that no expansion of facilities would be required since orders would only be filled when we were prepared to do so. Admiral Leahy, Chief of the Bureau of Naval Operations, made a very fine statement as to the purpose and effect of this resolution, and under leave granted I submit herewith his statement before the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House when a hearing was had upon this resolution:

STATEMENT OF ADMIRAL LEAHY TO THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

It is the Navy Department's understanding that the purpose of Senate Joint Resolution 89, insofar as it concerns the Navy, is to provide legislative authority for the use of the Navy's industrial facilities to assist American republics in the improvement of their navies when requests from other American Governments for such assistance are received.

At the present time the Navy Department is advised that the use of Government industrial facilities to assist other American republics is contrary to law, and that the sale of equipment and munitions manufactured in Government industrial plants is also not permitted by existing law. It has therefore been impossible to assist in the development of the navies of American republics by meeting any request for the provision of naval equipment which commercial industry is not prepared to produce without the prior development of facilities with its attendant prohibitive cost, and which the Navy is prepared to furnish without any interference with or delay in its normal program of production for the United States Navy.

This has forced American republics to meet the essential needs of their navies by the purchase of ships, munitions, and equipment in Europe from nations that are not operating under legislative restrictions on the manufacture and sale of naval equipment to foreign governments.

The Navy is prepared to manufacture in its industrial plants such naval equipment beyond the capacity of commercial industry as is likely to be requested by American republics and which can be produced without detriment to the Navy of the United States.

It is my personal opinion that closer relations between the navies and the armies of the American republics will bring about a better understanding of our common defense problems and a closer relationship between the peoples.

Improvements in the naval material of any or all of the South and Central American republics will make more difficult and discourage aggression against this continent from overseas, and should it become necessary for America to support the Monroe Doctrine with its navies, the burden to be borne by the United States Navy will be reduced in exact proportion to the number of efficient ships available to the other Republics of America.

The Navy Department is in favor of the enactment of Senate Joint Resolution 89 in its present form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) the President may, in his discretion, authorize the Secretary of War to manufacture in factories and arsenals under his jurisdiction, or otherwise procure, coast-defense and antiaircraft matériel, including ammunition therefor, on behalf of the government of any American republic; to sell such matériel and ammunition to any such government; to test or prove such matériel and ammunition prior to sale or delivery to any such government; to repair such matériel on behalf of any such government; and to communicate to any such government plans, specifications, or other information relating to such matériel and ammunition as may be sold to any such government.

(b) The President may, in his discretion, authorize the Secretary of the Navy to construct vessels of war on behalf of the government of any American republic in shipyards under his jurisdiction; to manufacture armament and equipment for such vessels on behalf of any such government in arsenals under his jurisdiction; to sell armament and equipment for such vessels to any such government; to manufacture antiaircraft artillery and ammunition therefor, on behalf of any such government, in factories and arsenals under his jurisdiction; to sell antiaircraft artillery and ammunition therefor to any such government; to test or prove such vessels, armament, artillery, ammunition, or equipment prior to sale or delivery to any such government; to repair such vessels, armament, artillery, or equipment on behalf of any such government; and to communicate to any such government plans, specifications, and other information relating to such vessels of war and their armament and equipment or antiaircraft artillery and ammunition therefor, as may be sold to any such government or relating to any vessels of war which any such government may propose to construct or manufacture within its own jurisdiction: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed as authorizing the violation of any of the provisions of any treaty to which the United States is or may become a party or of any established principles or precedents of international law: And provided further, That no transaction authorized herein shall result in expense to the United States, nor involve the extension of credits by the United States.

SEC. 2. In carrying out transactions authorized by section 1, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized, in their discretion, and provided that it be not inconsistent with any defense requirements of the United States or of its possessions, to communicate or transmit to the government of any American republic or to any duly authorized person for the use of such government information pertaining to the arms, ammunition, or implements of war sold under the terms of that section or to any vessels of war constructed within the jurisdiction of any such government, and to export for the use of any such government coast defense and antiaircraft matériel and ammunition therefor, and vessels of war and their armament and equipment involving such information: Provided, That any information thus communicated or transmitted or involved in any such arms, ammunition, implements of war, or equipment when exported shall cease to be considered restricted after 1 year from the date that such communication or transmission has been authorized or such exportation made.

SEC. 3. All contracts or agreements made by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy for the sale to the government of any American republic of any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the sale of which is authorized by this joint resolution, shall contain a clause by which the purchaser undertakes not to dispose of such arms, ammunition, or implements of war, or any plans, specifications, or information pertaining thereto, by gift, sale, or any mode of transfer in such a manner that such arms, ammunition, implements of war, or plans, specifications, or information pertaining thereto may become a part of the armament of any state other than an American republic.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall, when any arms, ammunition, implements of war, or equipment are exported pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution, immediately inform the Secretary of State, Chairman of the National Munitions Control Board, of the quantities, character, value, terms of sale, and destination of the arms, ammunition, implements of war, or equipment so exported. Such information shall be included in the annual report of the Board.

SEC. 5. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this joint resolution.

(b) All moneys which may be received from the government of any American republic, in payment for any article delivered or service rendered in compliance with the provisions of this joint resolution, shall revert to the respective appropriation or appropriations out of which funds were expended in carrying out the transaction for which money is received, and such moneys shall be available for expenditure for the purpose for which such expended funds were appropriated by law, during the fiscal year in which such funds are received and the ensuing fiscal year.

SEC. 6. The Secretaries of War and of the Navy are hereby authorized to purchase arms, ammunition, and implements of war produced within the jurisdiction of any American republic if such arms, ammunition, or implements of war cannot be produced in the United States.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from New York another question? What effect will this have on what we call neutrality? What effect will our furnishing munitions of war, in order to keep our people in this country busy, have to South American countries? It is a fine thing, of course, to keep our people busy, but it is not such a good thing when we have to go to manufacturing munitions of war in order to do that. What effect is that going to have upon foreign countries?

Mr. BLOOM. It will have no effect at all, because these governments are obligated under the resolution not to sell, convey, or transfer any of these things to any other government. They must keep them for their own specific use and cannot dispose of them under any circumstances.

Mr. RICH. We are trying to be neutral in this country, and the only way to be neutral is to attend to our own business.

Mr. BLOOM. I can assure the gentleman if the Foreign Affairs Committee adopts this resolution by unanimous consent we will remain neutral.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] long ago obtained unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution and it has been read.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House Resolution 269, from the Committee on Rules providing for the consideration of the joint resolution just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] for that purpose, but the Chair will not recognize any other Member for that purpose until we have completed consideration of the unfinished business.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN]?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday in the course of debate on the Lea bill I stated that Mr. O'Neill of the Farm Bureau Federation had gone fishing to Florida on a private train with Pelley of the Railroad Association. I made that statement after a complete verification of the fact, I had supposed. I had a call today from Mr. Pelley, a very genial gentleman, and he assured me that he had not gone fishing with Mr. O'Neill. I desire to retract that statement, so far as it may be possible, and ask the House to disregard it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made on the bill just passed and include therein a statement from Admiral Leahy as to the necessity and wisdom of the legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from one of the churches in San Pedro, also a communication from the California committee to support the Wagner Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter I have written to the Assistant Secretary of War and include therein the names of the Confederate officers buried in the Confederate Cemetery at Johnson's Island, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I regret to announce that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], who took such an active part in the general debate, is ill and will probably not be able to attend the sessions of the House during the remainder of the consideration of S. 2009. Anyone familiar with the gentleman from Maryland knows the value of the service he has rendered on this matter, and anyone who will read his speech in the RECORD of Saturday will realize the industry and ability he has devoted to this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 2009, with Mr. JONES of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the House adjourned last Saturday the first section of the bill had been read.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 199, line 8, after the period and before the quotation marks, insert "All of the provisions of this act shall be administered and enforced with a view to carrying out the above declaration of policy."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, we have under consideration section 1, which provides for the title of the bill and contains the declaration of policy. The declaration of the policy to provide for a unified system of national transportation and to preserve the natural advantages of the various types of transportation has been emphasized not only by members of the committee in the general debate but by the committee in its report. The courts have decided that in construing declarations of policy, as I understand, if specific provisions of the act are contradictory or different and do not provide for the execution of that policy, the specific provisions of the body of the act will control. I have in mind the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which declared invalid the Agricultural Adjustment Act first passed by the administration now in power. There was an admirable declaration of policy in that act, but the court did not follow the declaration of policy, instead basing its decision upon the specific substantive language contained in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have no special fault to find with the declaration of policy in this bill. I quote from the section:

It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each.

Reading further in the declaration, I quote:

And preserving a national transportation system by water, highway, and rail, as well as other means.

That "other means" may mean air transport. There were those who advocated the inclusion in this bill the regulation of air commerce, but the bill does not provide for that.

Mr. Chairman, I have offered the amendment that has been reported by the Clerk, which adds at the conclusion of this section the following language:

All of the provisions of this act shall be administered and enforced with a view to carrying out the above declaration of policy.

If that declaration means anything, if that declaration is commendable, it can amount to nothing unless it is enforced and administered so that the declaration may be carried out.

I have submitted this amendment to the committee and have had it printed in the Appendix of the RECORD of Saturday, July 22. It may be said that the language of the bill provides for such enforcement. I reply that if such language can be pointed out in any part of this bill, containing more than 100 pages, I will gladly withdraw the amendment. I say that it reenforces and emphasizes and, if possible, gives greater force and validity to the declaration of policy about which we have heard so much.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I say, first, that when bills from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are under consideration I always feel that I have a special interest in them.

Of course, a declaration of policy within itself, I believe the gentleman will admit, is sometimes dangerous legislation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It certainly is not controlling; that is what I undertook to say.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have had so much to do with questions relating to declarations of policy in railroad legislation that I would rather not go far enough than go too far, not only in the matter of the administration of the act but in connection with matters that may come into the courts.

I have read the amendment a time or two and I am very frank to say to the gentleman from Mississippi, whose judgment on most things I am willing to follow, that I believe, frankly, his amendment, instead of being a clarifying amendment, might cause more trouble in the administration of the law than would be the case if it were left out of the bill. I am frank to say that to the gentleman because I am fearful his words mean little or too much, and that is always my fear about matters of this kind.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may reciprocate by saying that, while I yielded for a question, I am glad to have the statement of the distinguished majority leader, and would gladly yield further if he can give us any proof or, as we lawyers say, any evidence.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask uanimous consent, in view of the fact that I yielded, to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As I stated, I gladly yielded to the distinguished majority leader, and he is entitled to his views. He gave us his views, but with due respect, he did not give us any citation or any sort of proof to support the fact that there might be a contradiction between the declaration and the language I have stated, and while I have a high regard for his views, I respectfully submit that unless the declaration of policy is administered and unless the declaration of policy is enforced, the meaning of the declaration is absolutely lost and there is no effect to be given to the declaration of policy.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. It is our contention that in not one line or sentence of the bill is the declaration of policy carried out. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, certainly, gives force and effect to the declaration, whatever it is, because it is not given force and effect in any other sentence in the whole bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And with due regard to the statement of the distinguished majority leader, all those who advocate the passage of the bill with whom I have talked have said to me that the language I here propose is substantially embraced in the bill and there is no occasion for repetition. No one has undertaken so far, except the distinguished majority leader, to tell me it might lead to some conflict. I emphasize the point made by the gentleman from North Carolina that if the declaration is to mean anything, it must be administered and must be enforced, and there is not any language in the bill, except the language I here propose, that in so many words directly states it shall be enforced and that it shall be administered so as to preserve and carry out the declaration of policy.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. In further emphasis of what the gentleman from North Carolina said, would the gentleman agree that the purpose of his amendment is to tie down and give effect to the declaration in the bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I not only so agree, but I have so stated that several times.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman feel that if his amendment were adopted it would also help the courts, in interpreting the law, to interpret it so as to follow the policies as declared in the bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I so stated. My whole purpose is to perfect section 1 by supplementing and reenforcing the declaration of policy.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. Is it not a fact that today we are having in some legislation a great deal of difficulty because of the failure of certain boards to follow direct legislative expressions in legislation?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Undoubtedly; and I agree with that part of the statement of the distinguished majority leader when he said it is often dangerous to embody a declaration of policy without provisions for its execution in the specific and substantive law. If the declaration is dangerous, it is unfair and should be stricken from the bill. It is dangerous, I say, to Mr. RAYBURN, the majority leader, to make a declaration unless you mean to carry it out, and for that reason I advocate the adoption of my amendment, which provides for carrying out the declaration. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. As we proceed with the consideration of this bill, various amendments could be offered everywhere, more or less plausible in sound or terms, but which may have results far from what the House would desire. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is unnecessary, to begin with. The bill very plainly, about as plainly as language can be written, provides for the protection of the inherent advantages of water transportation as contrasted with other means of transportation. In fixing rates the water carrier is assured the advantages of the cheaper rate at which he can transport property.

If we will refer, for instance, to section 317 (f), page 260, there is a rule of rate making similar to the rule provided with respect to railroads and other motor carriers, with this provision, that in the exercise of its powers to prescribe reasonable rates, and so forth, the Commission shall give consideration, among other factors, "to the effect of rates upon the movement of traffic; to the need in the public interest, of adequate and efficient water transportation service at the lowest cost, consistent with the furnishing of such service"; and, again, "to the need of revenues sufficient to enable water carriers, under honest, economical, and efficient management to provide such service." That specifically provides for the protection of the advantages that water may have from the standpoint of carrying at cheaper rates.

In section 305 (d), page 259, there is a provision in the case of a through rate, where one of the carriers is a common carrier by water, in which case the Commission may prescribe such reasonable differentials, if any, as it may find to be justified between all-rail rates, and the joint rates in connection with such common carrier by water.

In section 305 (c), page 253, lines 1 to 3, there is a provision to the effect that in the application to water carriers of a prohibition against granting undue, unreasonable preferences or advantages, such provision shall not be construed to apply to discriminations, prejudices, or disadvantage to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever description.

In other words, the water carriers are given the privilege of making rates less than other carriers without being susceptible to a charge of discrimination in their doing so.

It is true that the general principle of interpretation with which all attorneys are familiar is that general declarations do not overcome specific provisions of the bill, but if you have read this bill carefully you will have found that in a number of cases we have specifically tied in the declaration of policy with the specific provisions of the bill. In this rate section, we have specifically provided for the very thing the water people want, the protection of the inherent right of the water carriers to the lower cost at which they can transport property.

I believe this amendment should be defeated because it is unnecessary. As suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], its presence in this act may lead to consequences not anticipated. It can serve no useful purpose because the bill already takes care of what is the object of the amendment.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I do not want to commit myself to the inconsistencies or be a party to freezing certain things that are in this declaration of policy. This declaration of policy is a contradiction in terms and carries a loophole for its own avoidance. It goes on here and says that it is—> the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each—

If it had stopped there, it would be all right, but then it proceeds a little further and later emasculates that, digs holes in it that you could drive a boxcar through—let me proceed to read—> to promote safe, economical, and efficient service and to foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers, to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services.

So far so good in this policy matter, and if they had stopped there, you would have had a good policy, but what is immediately added after the last words, "charges for transportation services"? I read, "charges for transportation services without unjust discriminations."

Unjust discriminations. Mr. Chairman, there can be no such thing as unjust discriminations. A discrimination itself is unjust. Are you going to have the Interstate Commerce Commission decide between a discrimination which is wrong within itself and an unjust discrimination? Webster's international dictionary says that the word "discrimination" itself, without the word "unjust" means anything that is unfair or brings about any injurious distinction," and in law as applied to common carriers, it is "the imposition of unequal tariffs for substantially the same service." That is what discrimination is, and further, "it is a difference in treatment made between persons or localities or classes of traffic in substantially the same service." That is what discrimination is according to Webster and the law books, and yet the bill uses the word "unjust" before the word "discrimination." What does Webster further say? He says a discrimination, without the word unjust, is "a difference in rates not based upon any corresponding difference in cost."

That is the legal definition of simple discrimination; yet in this bill and policy declaration we have the word "unjust" before the word "discrimination."

A little further on in the declaration of policy are used the words "undue preference." There cannot be any such thing as "undue preference" and at the same time a rightful preference. What is "preference"? In law the one word "preference" itself is a special advantage given to a particular person, a particular locality, or a particular form of shipment, whether by the granting of a lower tariff or extraordinary facilities for shipment, more commonly called "discrimination" in the United States.

Now, in this declaration of policy the United States Congress is referring to rate charges and using the terms "unjust discrimination" and "undue preference," and expects the Interstate Commerce Commission to distinguish between what is "discrimination" and what is "unjust discrimination," expecting the Interstate Commerce Commission to decide between what is "preference" and what is "undue preference." I submit that the word "unjust" before "discrimination" should be removed from this declaration of policy and the word "undue" should be removed. Therefore I am going to submit such an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I wish to call the attention of the Committee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi. If you vote for that amendment you will, of necessity, have to assume that the Interstate Commerce Commission in the first place will not construe this policy. You will have to further assume that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not enforce it. You will have to assume that if a case goes to the courts, the courts will neither construe nor enforce the provisions of this policy.

As to what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] said about this declaration of policy, I regret very much that he has not read the declaration of policy which the Congress of the United States enacted in the Motor Carrier Act in 1935. It is practically similar, except, of course, the provision as to water and railroads is inserted in this bill. The gentleman said he did not want "undue preference"; he wanted the word "undue" stricken out. If you would think of the far-reaching effect that might have, I do not believe you would want it removed. For instance, on commodity rates from their own State there is a preference given as to certain rates, but it is not an undue preference. Preferences are given in a variety of the class and commodity rates, and probably there is some discrimination, but there is no unjust discrimination intended, and you must consider that.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. I want the gentleman to understand that if Arkansas has any preference over anybody else in the United States on any kind of a rate, we want to get rid of it. We want the same rate that every other State in the Union has, every other locality in the United States has.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I think if the gentleman would investigate the matter he would find that probably that is not quite a correct statement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I regret to find myself compelled to use this method of bringing to your attention one of the provisions of this bill that has not been mentioned in this declaration of policy, and that would not come to your attention whether we get the amendment on this declaration which makes the declaration really effective or not. Certainly if we are to have a declaration of policy, let us make the declaration effective. If it does not mean anything, let us strike it out. If it does mean anything, let us go down the line and tell the courts that we mean just what we said by that declaration of policy.

But I want particularly to call your attention to a provision further on in this bill that is covered up very much like this declaration of policy covers up a great many other things. On both Friday and Saturday I tried to secure time to address the members of this committee.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. No; I cannot yield. I only have 10 minutes. I could not get any time from the committee on Friday or Saturday.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I would just like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. POAGE. I yield for a question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The committee is entitled to know what is covered up by this declaration.

Mr. POAGE. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. All right.

Mr. POAGE. I will tell the gentleman, because I explained on Friday and Saturday that I wanted to discuss those provisions of this bill relating to the waiving of the advantage that the United States Government now has, and which it paid for, with the land grants previously made.

On both days the committee felt that it could not allow me any time, but on each day additional time was yielded to speakers who had been granted recognition for limited periods to discuss other parts of the bill. None of these speakers, however, ever saw fit to discuss the provisions of part 11 of title 3 of this bill. I want to believe and do believe that this lack of attention to this part grows out of a lack of information on the part of the committee in regard to these sections of this bill. I have a high regard for the membership of this committee. I know that this committee would not knowingly be a party to a transaction which would take from the United States Government hundreds of millions of dollars and drop them into the hands of a small group of bondholders with no return to the Government. Yet that is exactly what part 11 of title 3 of this bill does.

Nearly 150 years ago a Georgia Legislature conveyed to private interests several hundreds of thousands of acres of State land. The matter involved only the property of the State of Georgia, but aroused public sentiment swept the entire country and brought about a national protest to such action.

During the period of the Civil War in this Nation, and to some extent just before and just after that great conflict, there was a great era of national expansion—westward expansion—an irresistible demand for improved means of communication. Many of our greatest statesmen of the period felt, and possibly correctly, that our military security, and in fact our very national existence, depended on the construction of new railroads connecting the various parts of our far-flung Nation. It is little wonder then that they should have offered generous inducements to those who would construct and operate such rail lines. Large bounties of public land were offered. But they were not offered as simple gifts as so many of our people have so often incorrectly supposed. In almost all cases the lands were offered on condition that the recipients would not only construct certain railroads but on the further condition that when constructed the road would forever transport Government property and troops without any cost. The clause which appeared in nearly all of the original acts is as follows:

> The said railroad and branches shall be, and remain, a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge, for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.

Construing these grants, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the Government did not make a gift to the road, but on the contrary, that the Government paid in advance for services to be rendered by the road. In L. & N. Railroad Company v. The United States (267 U. S. 395) the Court said:

> But the land grant made many years ago in aid of the railroad enterprise was not a mere gift or gratuity. The carrier's obligation to haul property of the United States at reduced rates was a part of the consideration for which the land grant was made. Part of the appellant's compensation for hauling the coal was in land, and the balance was in money.

This was the trade made by and in behalf of the United States during the "tragic era" of American history. Not an entirely one-sided trade, it must be admitted, and yet the fact that one-tenth of the entire area of the Nation was thus conveyed to the railroads invoked a storm of protest which all but overthrew the Republican Party. A storm of protest that has left its scars and its suspicions until this very day. Yes; we can all remember how we have blushed to hear a recital of that chapter in our Nation's history. We all know how near the railroad land scandals came to ruining the fame of that great Federal leader, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant. I have never felt that he was guilty of any wrongdoing, but how much better it would have been had we been able to avoid these railroad land transactions. With all this, the worst that could be charged as to the policy of that day was that the Government had perchance allowed the railroads to out-trade it. There was no gift of public property without compensation as there is in title 3 of this bill. There was only an offer to buy transportation at what for many years following proved to be a tremendous price. Particularly was it a high price in view of the fact that in 1879 the courts agreed that while under the acts the Government had secured for itself the free use of the railroads and appurtenances constructed on the granted land, the railroad companies were entitled to 50 percent of the commercial rates and fares as compensation for the use of their equipment, employees' time, fuel, and so forth, employed in transporting property and troops of the United States.

Are we, the Members of the Seventy-sixth Congress, to repeat and outdo the generosity of our predecessors with other people's property for the benefit of the railroads? I hope not, and yet, title 3 of this bill absolutely gives away, without any compensation whatsoever, all the benefits that were retained to the Government as compensation for 132,000,000 acres of the cream of the public domain. Why should we make this princely gift to the bondholders of some 30 railroads? Why should the American taxpayer pay for transportation with the very soil of his homeland, and then be compelled by a callous Congress to pay for it again? Why should this bill conceal this gratuity in such language that the average citizen could read it through and very probably fail to catch the implications of this unprecedented raid on the Public Treasury? Why have the committee members who have explained this bill failed to discuss this vital section? Why should we point with scorn to the Georgia land frauds of the beginning of the last century and then embark on this program which overshadows them as the Empire State Building overshadows the pioneer's hut? Why should we condemn the fast and loose financing of the late sixties and early seventies and then even consider this proposal?

My colleagues, arouse yourselves, look into this grotesque proposal. If we pass part 2 title 3, of this bill we should add thereto a provision extending to Albert B. Fall a legislative pardon. We should include therein authority for the placing of the statues of Edward H. Doheny and Harry Sinclair in the Hall of Fame, and we should remove the tarnish from the Teapot Dome—for if we pass this, that page in our Nation's history will by comparison stand out pure and bright.

At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to strike out part 2, title 3 from the bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, the debate on this amendment has gone rather far afield and before we vote on it I would like, if I can, to get all of us back on the right track.

In the first place, we have in this bill a declaration of policy. No matter what words you may add to this declaration of policy in the way of a further mandate to the Commission or the courts, it cannot supersede the specific proposals contained in the body of the bill. Strangely enough, the gentleman from Mississippi says that it is a good declaration of policy and he would like to see it applied in the specific provisions. The gentleman from Arkansas says that the declaration of policy is no good, and so I suspect that he would not care to have it weighed in any manner in addition to the specific provisions of the bill; but here is the only issue: In the construction of the specific statutory proposals written in the body of this bill the Commission and the courts will on occasion be required to find what was the legislative intent and consider that legislative intent in the construction of that particular provision of the statute. It is not fair to suggest, in my opinion, that the Commission and the courts will not look to this declaration of policy whenever they are called upon to make such construction of the statute and application of it.

Necessarily, they will look to the declaration in the act itself for determination as to legislative intent. I do not know whether it makes a lot of difference whether the words of this amendment are written into the bill or not. But I have not been able to find a substantially similar precedent in any other act of this sort.

Whenever you write words into a bill of this nature for which the courts and the Commission cannot find a substantial reason, they begin to hunt for a reason. They begin to investigate to determine just what the Congress had in mind by adding those words. So, whenever you put into any act words that do not really belong there, there may be a mischievous result.

Mr. Chairman, I say that these words do not belong in this declaration of policy. Insofar as they may be effective in determining the administrative application of this act, they are as effective as they possibly can be made.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is the gentleman opposed to the enforcement of the declaration of policy of this act?

Mr. HALLECK. I favor the enforcement of the declaration of policies in this act as carried out and provided for in the body of the act, and they are provided for in the body of the act. Every line of this act has been written in furtherance of the policies declared in the act.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is the policy different from the body of the act?

Mr. HALLECK. I say it is not.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Then there should not be any objection to the amendment.

Mr. HALLECK. The specific provisions of the bill carry out the declaration of policy. The courts and commissions will recognize that, and in determining the legislative intent of the Congress in enacting these specific provisions they will have regard for the declaration of policy. The words of this amendment, I submit, as a matter of intelligent legislative action, should be voted down and the declaration of policy kept as it is.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, when Congress speaks to a bureaucracy it should speak in plain, unvarnished terms. This bill fails to do that. Those who have analyzed it in that particular technical field say that the bill is full of weasel words. The declaration of policy, if you please, is fair to look upon, but then repeatedly in the text of the bill it turns this whole problem over to a bureaucracy. The Congress abdicates. This bill reiterates times without number that the Commission "may" and then there is another series of weasel words. So that the Congress instead of writing into law a policy that should control this question makes a complete abdication.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] will not cure the many diseases from which this bill suffers; however, it is a start in the right direction. If you wish to reserve or if you wish to put into effect fair words of the preamble, I urge that you support the amendment which the gentleman from Mississippi has offered. It at least will be sensible and an advance in the right direction, where the Congress speaks and does not turn the people of the country over again to a battered, outworn, outmoded bureaucracy.

I urge the Committee to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, as I came in awhile ago the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] was speaking on the subject of land grants to the railways. When the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was considering the bill for turning the railroads back to their owners after the World War, this matter was thoroughly discussed and, by the way, that is the same committee that sent out this bill. I refer to the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. They drew a map of the amount of land equivalent to these railway grants, and this appears in the committee hearings. It was equal to the combined areas of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and the District of Columbia.

During the World War the railroads that had these land grants were paid in full the same as any other railroad for the transportation of Government troops, supplies, and everything of that kind. They were all under the Railroad Administration, first presided over by Senator McAdoo and afterward by Walker D. Hines. In the 26 months of Government operation, the amount of money allocated to the railroads for maintenance and upkeep was approximately $2,000,000,000 more for the 26 months than the railroads themselves had spent for a like period previous to the war.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, as Webster said, after we have been tossed about for many days by the storm—

> It is well to take our bearings to determine by the compass just what is the location.

The question now before the Committee is involved in the proposal of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], which is as follows:

> So that the provisions of this act shall be administered and enforced with a view to carrying out the above declaration of policy.

If that, considered in connection with the language in the policy section now in the bill, is not redundancy carried to an extreme I would like to know what it is. The bill now says plainly:

> It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each.

The pending amendment is mere repetition which would make the policy section perfectly ridiculous. We have drafted this language in the policy section as clearly and unequivocally as it is possible to draft it. The drafting service and the committee weighed this language so as to make it perfectly sure that it would constitute an accurate statement of the purpose of the bill. To add a number of words saying, in effect, that we shall not forget what is said in the beginning of the paragraph as to the purpose of the bill would be worse than useless.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Does the gentleman favor enforcing the declaration?

Mr. CROSSER. Certainly.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Would the gentleman think it necessary to add somewhere in each bill we pass, whether it contains a declaration of policy or not, a paragraph or section saying, "This law as written shall be the law"?

Mr. CROSSER. That is exactly the significance of this amendment; that is exactly what this means: "We hereby repeat that we want this law enforced." That is all it means and nothing more.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman point out to me anything in this declaration of policy which is a protection to the consuming public?

Mr. CROSSER. This declaration states:

To encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices.

That is all for the advantage of the consuming public.

Mr. HOOK. That language is put in there for the advantage of the consuming public?

Mr. CROSSER. Exactly; that is its purpose.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Page 199, line 8, after the period and before the quotation marks, insert the following: "All of the provisions of this act shall be administered and enforced with a view to carrying out the above declaration of policy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITTINGTON) there were—ayes 79, noes 71.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. LEA and Mr. WHITTINGTON.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 100, noes 82.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word merely for the purpose of asking the Chairman of the Committee a question in order to expedite the consideration of this measure. I believe we may be able to save at least 3 or 4 hours in the consideration of it.

The word "water" is noted in the declaration of policy which has just been read. If we attempt to offer amendments in title I wherever the word "water" appears, we will be here an interminable time, certainly many, many hours. I make the suggestion to the gentleman from California and to the Committee that we will not offer any amendments along that line but, of course, finally the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH], a member of the committee, will offer an amendment to strike all of title II, part III. If the gentleman's amendment should prevail, and I hope it will, I think that the gentleman from California at this time ought to ask unanimous consent, if we can make this agreement, to return then and reform title I in accordance with that amendment, if it should prevail. I make this suggestion merely in the interest of orderly procedure and to save many hours of time.

Mr. LEA. I may state to the Members of the Committee that the gentleman from North Carolina mentioned this matter to me some time ago. It seemed to be worthy of serious consideration. As chairman, however, I was not in a position to consent to it until after consultation with the members of the committee. Just at the present time I am still unable to state what we can do about the matter. I do hope, however, that we can make some arrangement to facilitate the consideration of the bill and avoid unnecessary repetition of effort.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, in view of that statement, it will not be our purpose to offer amendments along that particular line to title I. There are several amendments that will be offered to title I. If our motion should later prevail, then, of, course, the gentleman from California will have to ask unanimous consent to return to title I and reform the bill accordingly. I am sure there will be no objection to that.

Mr. LEA. I believe we will have no difficulty in making an arrangement to facilitate the action of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KITCHENS: Page 198, lines 20 and 21, after the word "without" in line 20, strike out the word "unjust" and, after the word "discriminations", strike out the word "undue."

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike "unjust" and "undue" from the declaration of policy. I called your attention to this matter a few minutes ago. The declaration of policy, it seems to me, would be all right if these two words were stricken from it—the word "unjust" before the word "discrimination" in line 20, page 198, and the word "undue" before "preference" in line 21, page 198.

As you will notice, the declaration of policy states that it is declared to be the transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulations of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each.

If that were all of the declaration of policy, I think it would be sufficient, because it would protect the inherent advantages of all, but it goes on and states further:

To promote safe, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers.

To encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services.

With that part of the declaration of policy there can be found no fault.

If the declaration of policy had ended there, with the word "services", it would be sufficient, but it continues and states:

To encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discrimination.

I am not prepared as a Member of Congress to vote a policy justifying discriminatory freight charges against anybody in the United States. An unjust discrimination. A discrimination is an evil, an injustice, and bad enough within itself, but the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to fix a discriminatory rate or determine a rate existing between discrimination and unjust discrimination. There cannot be a just discrimination. A discrimination being bad within itself, certainly there is no room in any legislation for a discrimination against anybody.

I submit the two words "unjust" and "undue" should be eliminated by adoption of my amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has ended on this section.

Mr. LEA. I understand no one has spoken in opposition to the gentleman's amendment, and my request was that debate be closed on the pending amendment and not the section.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair put the request, it was to close debate on the section.

Without objection, the gentleman from Alabama will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I understand from the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill [Mr. LEA], and those opposing the bill, the unanimous-consent request only referred to the amendment which was then pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put it with respect to the section, but, without objection, the request will be modified to make it applicable only to the amendment then pending. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, in the Motor Carriers' Act of 1935, this exact language was used, "unjust discrimination and undue preference." Surely anybody that studies the moving finger in this kind of legislation must concede that if you lay down a proposition whereby no discrimination or preference that might be decided to be such by a court of law should be permitted, you are going into a field where complications must arise from technical discriminations which could not be yielded to at all. For that reason unjust discriminations and unfair discriminations are the only kind of discriminations that can be considered. Unjust discrimination and undue preferences are to be considered, so why attempt to go further? Often some kind of preference is necessary, or sometimes a condition presents itself that must be acceded to. This very often happens in transportation, as well as in other matters of that nature. You are going to find, upon an analysis of the matter, that many times this has to be recognized. If you stand to consider such a thing as a just discrimination or a just preference, there would be nobody in the world to come forward with a bill to correct something that is already correct. It seems to me that mere logic defeats the idea of striking out this sort of expression in term.

It has not been done in the other carrier acts, and it seems that it would render futile what we are trying to accomplish in this legislation.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not true that for more than a half century the Interstate Commerce Commission has fixed our freight and passenger rates, and have they not in so fixing those rates acted properly, yet what they did might be called a discrimination?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. In other words, the I. C. C. for years, in fixing rates, has discriminated but such was legal, reasonable, and not unjust. All that this provides is that there shall be no unjust discrimination, and under this we will continue as in the past?

Mr. PATRICK. Certainly.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear all the gentleman from Arizona stated, but I call attention to the fact that for several decades this is language that has been a part of the transportation law of the country.

Mr. PATRICK. I just mentioned that fact.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I rise to elaborate just a little bit on what I said to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] We have had now for more than a half century a great quasi-legislative, quasi-judicial corporation or body established and empowered by Congress to fix passenger rates by rail, namely, the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is true that they have shown preferences for certain commodities, and apparently for certain sections, but that is a part of the general scheme of rate making and no doubt was so intended. There was no preference shown as between one locality and another or as between one commodity and another in any unfair or unjust manner. We propose in this act to continue the same policy. I have a high regard for the wisdom, fairness, and justice of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] is a bit academic when he refers to Webster's Dictionary, or some such source, and attempts to show that it is not proper or logical to speak of "unjust discrimination." Surely he would not contend that all cases of "unequal" treatment are accordingly "unjust." It is impossible for Congress by law to lay down specific rates for innumerable cases in all this complicated matter. We must depend upon and authorize—not a bureaucracy, as one has a half century, having in mind the welfare of the whole country. That is what we want to continue in this declaration of policy. If the I. C. C. does not charge the same rate on two common commodities for equal distances, it may be true in a dictionary sense that such is discrimination, but it is not an unjust discrimination. In insurance, in various phases of business, there are rates which might be called discriminatory, but they are necessary and just.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. What I had in mind is what the gentleman just stated, and I refer to wheat in my country. If this word were taken out, it would leave us in a bad way.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I understand the farmers of the West have a certain preferential rate on their farm commodities. It would be too bad for the farming sections of this country if that word "unjust" should be taken out and any and all discrimination thus forbidden, because those farmers from the West and Middle West very likely would be made to pay on farm commodities the same amount per mile as on other freight and that would be an equality which would be unjust. What is fair and reasonable ought to be continued.

Mr. PATRICK. Is not the same thing true in respect to preference? Is it not often necessary to take care of an economic condition that a preference must be established?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I feel sure that is correct.

Mr. PATRICK. If you pass a law taking out all preferences, then you would not be permitted to exercise "due preference."

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Take a carload of coal and a carload of silk and carry them 100 miles. Apparently they ought to be charged exactly the same. It would not be, in my judgment, an unfair preference if the rate is made different for one than for the other.

Mr. KITCHENS. But in the other part of this declaration of policy it says it shall be at reasonable cost.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I have no objection to the word "reasonable," if it applies to discriminations and preferences.

Mr. KITCHENS. All right, that would take care of your rates and every other item.

Mr. TERRY. If there is good reason underlying the difference in rates, then it is justified and it is not a discrimination at all.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am not so sure about that, but I would say in that case it would not be an "unjust discrimination."

Mr. TERRY. Then it would not be a preference if there is a reason for making the difference.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. What we must consider is not our own definition of those terms, but how a court or commission should construe them.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Here, for instance, is a passenger rate between the city of Washington and my home. It is a certain amount one way. The round-trip ticket is a certain amount less. If I go on a straight fare, I would have to pay the full rate, but if I take a round-trip ticket I get a preference, and it is not an undue preference.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That is reasonable.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is all there is to it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. During the period when feed was getting very scarce, the Northwestern and the Milwaukee granted special rates to the farmers, and enabled those people to ship in grain and feed for their livestock. If they were not able to discriminate, those things could not have been done by the railroads. Is that not correct?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I believe the gentleman is right in that. There are some kinds of discriminations and preferences which I favor.

I certainly am not in favor of building up a bureaucracy nor of increasing one now existing, but we must delegate some power to someone. It is said ours is a government of laws rather than of men. All of which is true and proper in a sense, but in another sense we have a government by men under law. I favor a government by men operating under law, if they are the right kind of men under the right kind of laws. The I. C. C. has done well over a long period, and I would not hesitate to delegate power and discretion to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

REGULATION OF FORWARDING CARRIERS

SEC. 2. Paragraph (3) of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by inserting, after "sleeping-car companies;", the following: "forwarding carriers;", and by inserting at the end of such paragraph a new sentence, as follows: "As used in this paragraph, the term 'forwarding carrier' means any person which, in the performance or discharge of an undertaking to transport property in interstate or foreign commerce to which this act applies, for compensation, utilizes or employs the instrumentalities or services of any transportation agency; but no person shall be subject to regulation as a forwarding carrier under this part with respect to operations of such person which are otherwise subject to regulation under this act."

THROUGH ROUTES

SEC. 3. Paragraph (4) of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(4) It shall be the duty of every common carrier subject to this part to provide and furnish transportation upon reasonable request therefor, and to establish through routes with other such carriers, and just and reasonable rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto; and it shall be the duty of common carriers by railroad subject to this part to establish through routes with common carriers by water subject to part III, and just and reasonable rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto. It shall be the duty of every such common carrier establishing through routes to provide reasonable facilities for operating such routes and to make reasonable rules and regulations with respect to their operation, and providing for reasonable compensation to those entitled thereto; and in case of joint rates, fares, or charges, to establish just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof, which shall not unduly prefer or prejudice any of such participating carriers."

TRANSPORTATION FREE OR AT REDUCED RATES

SEC. 4. (a) Paragraph (7) of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by inserting, after "attorneys at law;", the following: "to the executive officers, general chairmen, and counsel of employees' organizations when such organizations are authorized and designated to represent employees in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Labor Act;".

(b) The first sentence of paragraph (1) of section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended—

(1) by inserting, after "the necessary agents employed in such transportation,", the following: "or the transportation of persons for the United States Government free or at reduced rates,"; and

(2) by inserting, after "free carriage to their own officers and employees,", the following: "or to prevent the free carriage, storage, or handling by a carrier of the household goods and other personal effects of its own officers, agents, or employees when such goods and effects must necessarily be moved from one place to another as a result of a change in the place of employment of such officers, agents, or employees while in the service of the carrier,".

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEA: Page 200, strike out lines 19 to 21, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. (a) Paragraph (7) of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by striking out 'and their families, its officers, agents, surgeons, physcians, and attorneys-at-law' and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: 'its officers, agents, surgeons, physicians, and attorneys-at-law, and the families of any of the foregoing to the executive.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAR SERVICE

SEC. 5. Paragraph (14) of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the words "not owned by the carrier using it" the following: "(and whether or not owned by another carrier)."

UNDUE PREFERENCE OR ADVANTAGE; INVESTIGATION BY COMMISSION; LIABILITY OF BENEFICIAL OWNER AND SHIPPER; FACILITIES FOR INTERCHANGE OF TRAFFIC

SEC. 6. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(1) It shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this part to make, give, or cause any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, association, locality, port, port district, gateway, transit point, region, district, territory, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, association, locality, port, port district, gateway, transit point, region, district, territory, or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatever."

(b) The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized and directed to institute an investigation into the rates on manufactured products between points in one classification territory and points in another such territory, and into like rates within any of such territories, maintained by common carriers by rail or water subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, for the purpose of determining whether said rates are unjust and unreasonable or unlawful in any other respect in and of themselves or in their relation to each other, and to enter such orders as may be appropriate for the removal of any unlawfulness which may be found to exist: Provided, That the Commission in its discretion may confine its investigation to such manufactured products and the rates thereon as shippers thereof may specifically request be included in such investigation.

(c) Section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding after paragraph (2) thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) If a shipper or consignor of a shipment of property (other than a prepaid shipment) is also the consignee named in the bill of lading and, prior to the time of delivery, notifies, in writing, a delivering carrier by railroad or a delivering express company subject to the provisions of this part, (a) to deliver such property at destination to another party, (b) that such party is the beneficial owner of such property, and (c) that delivery is to be made to such party only upon payment of all transportation charges in respect of the transportation of such property, and delivery is made by the carrier to such party without such payment, such shipper or consignor shall not be liable (as shipper, consignor, consignee, or otherwise) for such transportation charges but the party to whom delivery is so made (if such party is the beneficial owner) shall be liable therefor and also for any additional charges which may be found to be due after delivery of the property. If the shipper or consignor has given to the delivering carrier erroneous information as to who the beneficial owner is, such shipper or consignor shall himself be liable for such transportation charges, notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph and irrespective of any provisions to the contrary in the bill of lading or in the contract of transportation under which the shipment was made. An action for the enforcement of such liability either against the party to whom delivery is made or the shipper or consignor may be begun within the period provided in paragraph (3) of section 16, or before the expiration of 6 months after final judgment against the carrier in an action against either of such parties begun within the limitation period provided in paragraph (3) of section 16. The term delivering carrier means the line-haul carrier making ultimate delivery."

(d) Paragraph (3) of section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by striking out "(3)" and substituting in lieu thereof "(4)", and is further amended to read as follows:

"(4) All carriers subject to the provisions of this part shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines and connecting lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers or property to and from connecting lines; and shall not discriminate in their rates, fares, and charges between connecting lines, or unduly prejudice any connecting line in the distribution of traffic that is not specifically routed by the shipper. As used in this paragraph the term 'connecting line' means the connecting line of any carrier subject to the provisions of this part or any common carrier by water subject to part III."

(e) Paragraph (4) of section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by striking out "(4)" and substituting in lieu thereof "(5)."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: On page 202, line 12, after the word "ever", strike out the quotation marks; and, after line 12, add the following:

"(1a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that shippers of wheat, cotton, and other farm commodities for export should have substantially the same advantage of reduced rates as compared to shippers of such commodities not for export that are in effect in the case of shipment of industrial products for export as compared with shipments of industrial products not for export, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to institute such investigations, to conduct such hearings, and to issue orders making such revision of rates as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out such policy."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is not germane to the section or the paragraph on page 202, (1) and (b). Paragraph (b) is a subsection of (1). (1) provides that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this part to make, give, or cause any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, association, locality, port, port district, gateway, transit point, region, district, territory, or any particular description of traffic, and the other is to provide for an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the reasonableness or discrimination in rates, and provided that the Commission may, in its discretion, confine its investigation to such manufactured products as it would receive complaints on. I cannot see how at this particular place the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is germane.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard if the Chair has any doubt.

Contrary to what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] has said, section 1 is an amendment to a section already in the Interstate Commerce Act, and the Chair will note is in quotation marks; (b) is an addition to the present Interstate Commerce Act. The next section is entirely new. So it is not a continuing thing.

(1) deals with all kinds of discrimination in freignt rates; discriminations as to persons, companies, corporations, associations, port districts, gateways, districts, territories, regions, or any other particular description of traffic.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. THOMASON). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks the amendment is germane and overrules the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this is the only amendment I expect to offer, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think this is an amendment of great importance. Many of the older Members of the House in point of service will remember that some 7 or 8 years ago we had under consideration this question of discriminations, and it was discussed to a considerable extent.

Whenever any industrial product is shipped from a point in the interior to a port location, destined for shipment abroad, the rate is reduced from 25 to 33⅓ percent. Whenever a farm product is shipped, as a rule there is no reduction. The purpose of my amendment is to direct, as a policy, that the same average reduction be given to farm commodities going into export, that now prevails with reference to industrial commodities going into export.

I assume that the reason for the reduction in industrial commodity rates is to enable factories to run, as nearly as possible, full time, and thus perhaps give a better price for the products in this country, and to encourage world trade. But if that rule is fair with reference to industrial commodities, why should it not apply to agricultural commodities? Is there any particular charm hovering around industrial commodities that does not apply also to the raw and basic product?

To show you that there is a real distinction, I want to read to you from a comment by one of the Commissioners in Grain Rates case, 1930. Mr. Commissioner Lewis makes this statement:

> Our carriers have extended—and we have not interfered—with manufacturers of iron and steel articles, automobiles, and farm machinery rates 25 percent lower on exports than on domestic shipment.

I am quoting from a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the effect that the carriers have extended rates 25 percent lower on exports of iron and steel articles and farm machinery than on domestic shipments. He states:

> If the same principle were applied to wheat and its products it would have a vast beneficial result. I have favored and still favor export rates on wheat and its products 10 or 15 percent lower than domestic rates, but it requires that part of the tariff on such rates be made subject to minimum weight 10 percent higher in the case of grain and 50 percent higher in the case of flour than apply on domestic movements.

Quoting further from Mr. Lewis:

> Taking all the above transportation facts into consideration and entirely leaving out economic considerations, it seems to me that export rates 15 percent lower than domestic rates are justified and conservative. They are less than the carriers have extended to certain manufacturers.
> The advantage of export rates is acknowledged by carriers and manufacturing industries which have built up large outlets for our products in foreign lands.

Commissioner Lewis in concluding his concurrence in the opinion says:

> I am authorized to say that Commissioner Tate concurs in that part of the foregoing which expresses the opinion that there should be a lower export rate because of different transportation conditions.

Now I want to cite you some examples of reductions in rates on manufactured articles. When two farm implements are shipped from Indianapolis, Ind., to New Orleans, La., one of them to go abroad, loaded on the same platform, unloaded on the same dock, the one going into foreign trade takes a rate of 48½ cents per 100 pounds whereas the one to be used by a farmer in Louisiana takes 82 cents per 100 pounds. If it is shipped from Chicago to Galveston, Tex., it is $1.06 if it is to be used by the Texas farmer, but only 49½ cents if it is to go abroad.

If wheat is shipped from Amarillo, Tex., to Galveston, Tex., the export rate is 35 cents a hundred, the domestic rate is also 35 cents a hundred—no reduction.

On iron and steel shipped from Gary, Ind., to New York the domestic rate is 52 cents, the export rate is 36 cents. The rate on shipments of iron and steel from Pittsburgh, Pa., to New York for export is 23 cents, whereas the domestic rate is 36 cents.

I am not prepared to say that these privileges are wrong, but I do say that if they are extended to industrial products going into foreign fields the same privilege should be extended to agricultural products. [Applause.] If the manufacturer of an American plow, when he ships it abroad, gets a reduction in rates in order to enable him to handle his production better, why, in the name of common sense, should not the American farmer have the same privilege?

Under this amendment it is the declared policy of Congress to give the same privilege of reduced rates on agricultural commodities going into export that we extend to industrial commodities. The reason these discriminations exist in the case of manufactured products, I think, is because the producers of these products are organized, are able to come down here and claim their privileges, whereas the farmers, great individualists that they are, living in many instances thousands of miles from each other, do not have the chance to come down to Washington to present their case and claim their rights and privileges. It seems to me it is but just and fair that these discriminations be corrected insofar as it is possible to do so.

Just to show you how the big industrialists sometimes get advantage in freight rates, let me cite the instance of the importation of coconut oil. Here is an amazing discrimination. Coconut oil competes with lard and with cottonseed oil. When shipped from the Orient and landed at Galveston, Tex., for shipment from Galveston to Cincinnati, Ohio, where the great soap factories are located, the rate on coconut oil is 33½ cents per hundred pounds. The rate on cottonseed oil loaded on the same dock at Galveston, in the same type of car, and shipped to the same point of destination, Cincinnati, is 65 cents per 100 pounnds, twice as much—a competing product.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has been overloaded, and these great interests come and present their claims, present and outline the facts, but it seems to me that no man can justify such discrimination in the case of manufactured products as against agricultural products. It should be corrected one way or the other. I have many more illustrative examples that I could cite if I had time. On practically no farm product is there a preferential export rate. There are a few such instances where the shipment originates from a water point such as Kansas City, but in the great mass of cases from interior points the farm commodities are charged the full rate, although they go into the export trade. I may say in passing that the figures I have cited were furnished me by the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so there can be no question as to their accuracy. They may have some later figures, but these are substantially correct and are furnished over the signature of the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission on December 17, 1938.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am thoroughly in accord with the gentleman's amendment, but it does occur to me that it ought to be sufficiently broad to include all agricultural products and livestock intended for export.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It does; it includes all agricultural commodities, wheat, cotton, livestock, and other agricultural products.

I hope the gentleman from California will agree to this amendment, its declaration of policy, and provisions. I think it has caught the sentiment of this body favorably. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall take no further time of the Committee.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas reflects the view that Congress should interfere with rate making. Many efforts have been made in the past to have Congress enter this field. So far, Congress has not seen proper to instruct the Interstate Commerce Commission as to just how it shall handle particular rate situations. Most of the well-informed shippers of the country would prefer that Congress keep out of this field.

Aside from this obvious fact, this particular amendment proceeds upon an entirely erroneous theory. The idea seems to be that if the carriers put in special export rates for the movement of industrial products, they must, at the same time, put in special export rates for the movement of farm products and the export farm rate must have the same relation to the domestic rate as the export industrial rate has to the domestic industrial rate. The two things, however, have no relationship. It cannot be logically said that if the export rate on iron articles is 80 percent of the domestic rate, then the export rate on farm products must be 80 percent of the domestic rate.

These low export rates, whether they be on industrial products or on farm products, are put in for one of two reasons. In the first place, many of the special export rates are adopted in order to equalize the ports. We have a case of a railroad operating from Chicago to New Orleans but not from Chicago to New York. If goods originating at Chicago are exported through New Orleans, the water distance from New Orleans to Liverpool being so much greater than the water distance from New York to Liverpool, necessarily the water portion of the rate will be higher if the product moves through New Orleans than if it moves through New York. Not only will the rate be higher, but the time is longer and the traffic will be subjected to other disadvantages.

A railroad which operates from Chicago to New Orleans has the right to insist on a lower export rate than the rate from Chicago to New York in order to equalize the disadvantage that comes from the longer ocean haul. This is a crude illustration, but it reflects one of the important reasons why export rates are often lower than domestic rates.

There is no real reason, based on inland transportation, why there should be a difference, but the commercial considerations are such that in order to equalize the ports to a certain degree and to give railroads serving the more distant ports a haul, these export rates must be put in. In fixing export rates for the purpose of equalizing the ports, no consideration is given to whether the commodities are industrial products or agricultural products. There are numerous export rates on agricultural products to some ports lower than to others. The whole matter is one of competition among the railroads and competition of markets.

The second important reason why export rates are put in is to encourage and stimulate the sale of surplus products abroad which cannot be absorbed by the domestic markets. The principle is a very familiar one. If often happens that the foreign purchaser of products will not buy in the United States when he can buy from South America or from some other foreign country at a lower cost, due to difference in labor. In those cases the American railroads must make some exceptions to their standard basis of rates in order to meet the world competition in foreign markets. This condition sometimes leads to the establishment of relatively low export rates.

It is perfectly obvious that the Interstate Commerce Commission must not be bound up by a rigid rule which would require arbitrarily the putting in of export rates on one commodity merely because those export rates have been put on another unrelated commodity. If no cotton, for instance, moved through the port of New York from the cotton-producing territory, there would be no occasion to have export rates to New York, although it might be of the first importance to have export rates on certain industrial products from that same territory to New York. These rates must be governed by practical considerations, by conditions of competition, with all of which the Interstate Commerce Commission is perfectly familiar.

To say that you must lower the export rates on agricultural products because the export rates on industrial products have been lowered is as illogical as to say that you must lower the prices of cotton piece goods because the price of mules has been decreased. Each of these situations presents its own specific problem and the rate structure of the country, the free movement of traffic, and the merchandising of America's products will be hopelessly confused, if not destroyed, by an artificial rule such as is proposed in the Jones amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN to the amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Add to the amendment, after the word "cotton," the words "citrus fruits and vegetables."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, it was not plain to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] would include horticultural and grove products. I would like to ask the author of the amendment if it will?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The language of the amendment says, "wheat, cotton, and other farm commodities." Rather than name the other commodities, I would prefer if the gentleman would insert before the word "other," the word "all."

Mr. GREEN. How about the words "farm and grove"?

Mr. JONES of Texas. All other farm commodities.

Mr. GREEN. Does the gentleman think that would cover it?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will accept the amendment, if he will change it in that way.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change the amendment that I have offered to the language just stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN to the amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Before the word "other" in the second line, insert the word "all."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I ask the gentleman from Texas if he would permit to be included in the amendment the words "livestock products"?

Mr. GREEN. The gentleman may take up that a little later. I favor inclusion of livestock.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the Jones amendment, as amended. Congress has, particularly during the last 6 years—not so much before then—done all it could to help the farm and general agricultural interests of our Nation. This is a case in which we can help the farmers of the Nation by giving them the same export freight rates as are given to industry.

In according this to the farmers of our Nation you are lending them an indirect farm aid which is far better than any artificial aid which the Congress can give. I have in mind the fact that some 3 or 4 years ago the Florida citrus growers appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission to try to obtain a lower rate on citrus fruits.

We asked for an even 15-cent per bushel reduction on our grapefruit. At that time we had a large surplus. The people of the country desired to eat grapefruit, but the shipping rate was so high on grapefruit that about one-third of that year's crop rotted under the trees because we failed to obtain a reduced rate to ship it to market. A large portion of this citrus was for the Canadian market, which is a foreign market, and which would come well under the provisions of the pending amendment.

I am confident that the apple shippers of our Nation have experienced the same handicap in shipping their produce to Canada and to other foreign countries, so I am particularly interested in the amendment insofar as it would apply to production from the orchards and from the groves. I would judge that every year about one-quarter to one-third of the peach crop in Georgia, particularly because Georgia has an early peach season, rots under the trees because they do not have an adequate marketing system to disseminate these products to all parts of the United States; and because the marketing is largely controlled by the transportation, the cost being so high. The farmers, fruit growers, vegetable growers, and livestock producers need relief worse than any producers in America.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I understand that the gentleman's amendment covers not only all farm products but livestock products as well.

Mr. GREEN. I will have to let Mr. JONES, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, answer that question.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I believe that the amendment will cover farm and livestock products.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. JONES, the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, who offered the amendment, advises me that it, as amended by my amendment, includes livestock and all farm and horticultural products; yes; citrus fruits and vegetables also.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I should like to call attention, in reply to what the gentleman from North Carolina said, to the fact that on manufactured articles coming from interior points there is a general export rate reduction. This amendment simply authorizes the Commission to apply substantially the same average rate. It is not a rate-making proposition; it is simply a declaration of policy with instructions to do this generally.

Mr. GREEN. Yes; parity for industry and agriculture. I urge that my amendment to the Jones amendment be adopted and then that you adopt the Jones amendment.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the law permits railroads to reduce freight rates on export products. The object is to facilitate the sale of our products to the foreign market. The amendment proposed would prevent such shipments unless the same rates were granted to our domestic shipments. This amendment, if adopted, would be a destructive amendment. It would greatly tend to curtail foreign markets for our goods in all cases where such shipments now receive reduced rates. The object of giving reduced rates to exported products is to encourage the foreign market as purchasers of our products. It is no injury to agriculture if a reduced rate is given to industrial products and increased sales result. The more products America can sell abroad, whether manufactured or agricultural, the better it is for both industry and for agriculture. The more of our agricultural products that reach the foreign market the better off America is and the farm and factory sections of the country are alike benefited.

In effect, this amendment denies the retention of that foreign market for industrial products unless the domestic rate on agricultural products is based on a parity with export industrial products. The logic of that would be to compel all agricultural products to be shipped on the reduced rate that is given to products destined for foreign markets or else deny giving any export rate to products destined for the foreign market. The ultimate result would be that we would simply keep the rates at a high level and deprive ourselves of the advantage of the foreign market that may be reached only by this lower rate. That would be no benefit whatever to agriculture.

This would be very damaging to agriculture. It would be damaging to the wheat producers, and it would be damaging to all agricultural producers who are depending on the foreign market and whose price is helped by the foreign market.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the difference between the domestic rates and the export rates on certain southern products. On cottonseed cake and meal from Dothan, Ala., to Jacksonville, Fla., the domestic rate is 19.8 and the export rate 18.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman object to that preference there?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; I do not.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Why not extend it to all farm commodities?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am showing the gentleman that it has been begun.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is about a 3-percent reduction—from 19.8 to 18.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. This statement which I had prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission on certain southern products shows the difference in the domestic and the export rate, and the gentleman may use the statement if he so desires.

Mr. LEA. We will ask to insert this statement in the RECORD. I have not had an opportunity to examine or analyze it.

I should like to say further that one feature involved in this problem is the relative rates to different ports. When a subject like this was brought before the subcommittee, immediately the news of it spread abroad; there was great complaint and concern over the effect it would have on the different ports in dealing with the commerce of the United States. It must be remembered that this does not propose the same rates on products that are of the same kind, but products unrelated and of a different character are proposed to be put on the same basis.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. This amendment would not discriminate against ports. As I understand, all ports will be treated alike.

Mr. LEA. No; they are not treated alike.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. We want them to be treated alike.

Mr. LEA. The present plan is to try to put them on an equality, but if you put them on an arbitrary basis, regardless of the circumstances involved, then you create discrimination between ports.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Circumstances, for some reason, have been discriminating against our Texas ports, I would say.

Let me ask the gentleman this question, How does the gentleman substantiate the claim that giving lower rates on the exportation of wheat or other agricultural products is going to hurt the farmer? I cannot follow his logic. I shall vote for the Jones amendment, and think it should be adopted.

Mr. LEA. Because you deny yourselves those rights under this amendment. To require all domestic products to move on an export-rate basis would make it impossible for such a rate to be granted agriculture. When you prevent the railroad from granting export reduction unless domestic shipments move at the same price, you simply make it impossible for the railroads to grant the reduced rate in either case. You would leave the farmer holding the bag.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Why is it so much more important to take care of the ports than it is to take care of the farmers? [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. What we are trying to do here is to draft a bill that gives proper consideration to each section, and we are not trying to favor one class or group at the expense of another. If we have any means of straightening out our transportation system, it should be to give justice to all and give the entire country the benefit of reasonable and just rates with proper regard to the rights of each industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEA) there were—ayes 69, noes 27.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] as amended by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALLECK. Do I understand that the vote just had was upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HALLECK. And the pending vote is upon the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEA) there were—ayes 72, noes 32.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 202, line 15, and on page 203, line 1, after the word "products", insert "agricultural commodities and raw materials."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as was stated by the chairman of the committee in presenting the bill to the Committee of the Whole for its consideration, contained an important provision not heretofore incorporated in transportation legislation that would enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to make investigations of rates and to recommend an elimination of discrimination, or, to use his language, it embraced, as he stated, the so-called Ramspeck resolution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with the attention of the Committee for just a moment, let me say that section (b), on page 202, authorizes and directs, and I read from this section:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized and directed to institute an investigation into the rates on manufactured products between points in one classification territory and points in another such territory, and into like rates within any of such territories, * * * for the purpose of determining whether said rates are unjust and unreasonable or unlawful in any other respect in and of themselves or in their relation to each other.

This subsection (b) concludes—and I quote further from said section:

Provided, That the Commission in its discretion may confine its investigation to such manufactured products and the rates thereon as shippers thereof may specifically request be included in such investigations.

The purpose of my amendment is to authorize the Commission to make investigations not only with respect to manufactured products but agricultural commodities and raw materials, and only those investigations will be made that are requested by the shippers. In other words, the amendment that I propose inserts after the words "manufactured products" the words "agricultural commodities and raw materials."

If it be answered, Mr. Chairman, that at present agricultural commodities do receive lower rates, permit me to call your attention to the illustration given us a moment ago by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. JONES of Texas], where there is a rate on coconut oil from Galveston, Tex., to Cincinnati, Ohio, of about 33 cents per hundred, whereas the rate between the identical points on cottonseed oil is more than twice as much.

I respectfully submit that even though in some cases there may be in some areas lower rates on agricultural commodities, it can do no one an injustice to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the power and the authority to treat agriculture and industry alike, and that is all on earth agriculture asks. [Applause.] We want no advantages; and if it be fair to grant an investigation for manufactured products, I respectfully submit that there can be no justification in refusing that investigation to agricultural commodities and to raw materials.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. The proviso in subsection (b) vitiates everything that is attempted prior to that, as it now stands, does it not?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would say, with all deference, as I understand subsection (b)—and I want to be constructive, if I may—subsection (b) authorizes an investigation into the rates in areas and in territories for manufactured products, and the paragraph to which the gentleman refers would confine those investigations to requests by shippers. I am undertaking to amend that so they would be authorized to investigate both as to manufactured products and agricultural commodities and raw materials, and in each case be confined to the requests that were submitted by the shippers.

Mr. WARREN. I think subsection (b) is a mere jargon of words. The whole subsection is absolutely meaningless. It does not amount to a row of pins because the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the general law today, has authority to do every single thing that it is intended to give them by this language put in the bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I agree with the gentleman. For 50 years they have had the power and authority, but we have now in the pending section given them substantial direction and authorization to undertake to remove a discrimination, and I believe the amendment is fair and should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. During the early part of this session of Congress every State in the South was represented at a meeting held to endeavor to obtain, as they stated, fair freight rates from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] was authorized to introduce a resolution, which he did, and which resolution is the one under discussion by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]. This protest against southern freight differentials was also heard before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman is confining this to a southern protest. The committee to which the gentleman refers was not composed wholly of people from the South, but there were people from the Middle West, the Southeast, the Southwest, the Northwest, and the mountain country. It represented the whole country.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I know that what the gentleman says must be true else he would not say it; all that I heard was largely, I think, by some of our friends from the South. In any event we had hearings on this day after day for a full week. We gave hearings to southern Representatives, southern shippers, to anyone from the South who would come before the committee and tell what they wanted. They said all they wanted was a pointed stick to prod the Interstate Commerce Commission with, and so in drafting this bill we took this "sop" if you please, we took this thing that "amounts to nothing," as we are informed by the opponents of the bill which Mr. RAMSPECK introduced, and put it in the bill in its entirety. There was no question of southern agricultural rates. The great question that was before the committee was that in the Southern States they said the manufacturing plants could not get the same rates, as compared with the northern plants, and everyone knows, or should know, that the commodity rates on southern agricultural products are fair. It took me, I think, 2 or 3 days with this subcommittee of ours to induce them to put this in, and I ask members of this Committee to vote down this amendment, because it is unnecessary. It does not add one thing to the bill.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Do I understand the gentleman to say that agricultural rates are fair?

Mr. BULWINKLE. In the commodity rates.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The gentleman never paid them, I dare say.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The commodity rates that agriculture gets are very much lower than the many other rates and if the gentleman will examine them he will see that they are.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I must say that if the gentleman were a farmer he would not make such a statement as that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Very well, how about being a manufacturer? Compare the rates on manufactured goods with the rates on agricultural products.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's statement; but I inquire as to whether or not there is any purpose or meaning in this entire paragraph. The Interstate Commerce Commission now, under existing law, has all of that power; and is it not their duty to do so under the law?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Upon complaint; yes.

Mr. KEEFE. To make an investigation?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; upon complaint.

Mr. KEEFE. Then what does this paragraph mean?

Mr. BULWINKLE. It simply means that it is the Ramspeck resolution, put in at the request of the southern Members, and that is all that it does mean—to advise the Commission that Congress wanted an investigation.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. The only point about this paragraph that is of interest are the words in line 14 "and directed." The Commission is already authorized to make an investigation, but this paragraph directs the Commission to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. As I said on the floor of the House 2 or 3 days ago, the Ramspeck resolution, so-called, is nothing more than a sop, so far as our rate problem is concerned. I have a very high regard for my colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]. He has worked diligently on this rate proposition, and I presume this is the best he could get; but I say to him and to my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] that the Members who met with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] from time to time to protest against unjust discriminations and rate differentials did not agree to the Ramspeck proposal, and most of us do not agree to it now.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. I consulted with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] with reference to making this addition to the provisions in the bill, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] told me that he had no objection at all to the addition that we are now trying to put into the bill.

Mr. SOUTH. Did the gentleman ever tell anyone on this committee or anyone else that the provision in the bill was ample and satisfactory?

Mr. TERRY. No; but I speak only for myself.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is not subsection (b), if it be adopted, applicable to the entire country?

Mr. SOUTH. That is right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The word "southern" does not occur any more than the word "northern." Neither has any business in the law; it ought to be for the benefit of the entire country.

Mr. SOUTH. I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi.

I want to call the attention of those of you who live anywhere in the United States except in the official zone to the fact that your section is being discriminated against. Do not get the idea that this is a fight for the benefit of a particular section. Every section of the country, except a few square miles in the favored "official zone," is paying more than its share. Somebody here has said that manufactured products alone are paying excessive rates. Let us see about that. I call the attention of my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] to the following:

From Dallas, Tex., to Indianapolis, Ind., a distance of 861 miles, the freight on butter, eggs, and dressed poultry, minimum weight 20,000 pounds, amounts to $1.48 per 100 pounds.

From Indianapolis, Ind., to Bridgeport, Conn., 871 miles, or 10 miles farther, the carrying charges are 94 cents per 100 pounds, or 54 cents less.

From Dallas, Tex., to Chicago, Ill., a distance of 905 miles, the rate is $1.48.

From Chicago, Ill., to New York City, a distance of 909 miles, the rate is 99 cents.

From Fort Worth, Tex., to Cincinnati, Ohio, a distance of 962 miles, the rate is $1.48.

From Cincinnati, Ohio, to Portland, Maine, a distance of 964 miles, the rate is $1.

From Fort Worth, Tex., to Dayton, Ohio, a distance of 1,001 miles, the rate is $1.55.

From East St. Louis, Ill., to New York City, a distance of 1,025, the rate is $1.09.

Now, these are not manufactured products. They are farm products. I want to tell you Mr. Chairman, that while the railroad boys who have been sponsoring this legislation may not have written this provision, they saw it before we from the areas discriminated against saw it, and I guarantee you that it meets with their approval. It does not provide for a thing more than the Interstate Commerce Commission now has authority to do. It says, "You gentlemen investigate the rate structure in certain sections of the country as it relates to manufactured products, and then if any relief is needed, grant that relief to such products."

Now, when they tell you that manufactured products are the only products that need adjustment, I ask them to tell you why it would not be all right to go ahead and investigate rates on all products, whether manufactured or not, and then apply the remedy to only such products as need to be remedied.

As I said to the gentleman from Arkansas this morning, suppose lawlessness breaks out in the town of Little Rock and somebody thinks the Negroes are responsible for it. Can you imagine a committee of citizens coming in and saying to the district attorney's office and the sheriff and the police department, "Go down into that section of the city and investigate lawlessness as it relates to the Negroes?" No. They will say, "Go down there and investigate lawlessness. We have been told that the Negroes may be responsible for it, but wherever you find lawlessness existing, it shall be your duty, and you shall have full authority to put it down, regardless of who the guilty parties may be."

And so it should be as to the rate differential problem. The Interstate Commerce Commission should be given authority to make a full, fair, and complete study and investigation as to rate differentials and discriminations in all sections of the country, and on every kind and character of goods, where it is alleged such unfair and discriminatory rates exist, "and to enter such orders as may be appropriate for the removal of any such unlawfulness which may be found to exist." [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to enter into this discussion on the particular amendment until the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] made the statement he did with reference to this section of the bill. Of course, he is entitled to his opinion. So are other gentlemen who say it is not of any value. I simply want to state the facts for the benefit of the committee.

Some 4 years ago I introduced a bill attempting to have the Interstate Commerce Commission apply the destination level theory to interterritorial freight rates. We got a hearing before the committee this year on that bill. We did have an organization of western and southern Members who helped to get that hearing. They did not endorse the provision in this bill. It never was submitted to them, but when we got the hearing before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, both in the House and in the Senate, the rate experts from both the South and West appeared before those committees and argued against the bill which we had pending. One of the main arguments they offered was that we had preferential rates on agricultural commodities and raw materials from the South into the North and from the West into the North, and they feared that such rates might be disturbed under my bill. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am sorry. I cannot yield.

Mr. SOUTH. Can the gentleman name those experts?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That testimony was given. I have no objection, insofar as I am concerned, to the Whittington amendment. I have so stated to people who have talked to me about it, but there is this to be pointed out about it: Certain rate experts from our own section and from the West were apprehensive about going into those rates. It is also true that if the Interstate Commerce Commission must investigate all rates under the bill, it will take much longer, and the real problem, as I see it, is the rate on manufactured products.

I want to make it plain to those who are interested in this matter that I am not here opposing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. With or without the amendment, only such investigation will be made as is asked for.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And nobody is going to ask for an investigation covering an agricultural rate if they are getting a square deal on that already?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true, and the reason is obvious. It simplifies the investigation. May I point out to the gentleman from North Carolina, I know of one case coming from Danville, Va., where the people in Danville spent $60,000 in order to get a rate reduced. Under this provision the Interstate Commerce Commission is directed to investigate those rates, and certainly it will save a lot of money and a lot of trouble to the people who are interested in them, because all they have to do is write the Commission a letter and say "I want this rate investigated," and the Congress has directed them to do it. They ought to be investigated, because if there ever was a cockeyed thing in this world, it is the freight-rate system under which our railroads operate. There are more freight rates in existence than any man can write out in figures. Some five quintillion freight rates in this country. They are just full of discriminations, I mean discriminations between sections of the country, discriminations between cities, towns, ports, and in character of commerce, and everything else. They ought to be investigated.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. And those discriminations do not apply entirely to manufactured goods.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not say that they do. I say to the gentleman that I am not opposed to the amendment, but I am opposed to any gentleman getting up here and stating that it does not mean anything. It does mean a lot to the people interested in getting a real freight-rate system in this country; and that applies not only to the South, but to the West and all other sections of the country.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I understood my colleague on the committee from North Carolina to refer to the inclusion of this provision as a sop, to refer to it in a sarcastic manner. I think that was not his idea.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I mean the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], who interrupted the gentleman from Mississippi and said it did not mean a thing. I think he is mistaken; but he is, of course, entitled to his opinion.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was one of the members of the freight-differential group that requested the consideration and hearing by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the matter of freight-rate differentials. It is not a matter of theory as to whether or not we have freight-rate discriminations in this country. It is admitted that we have, and it is one of the livest questions we have before us today. I think one of the hopes we have now is that on the Interstate Commerce Commission in recent months there have been appointed men who have a broad vision and who will go into these questions of discrimination, and I think we shall get a fairer deal in the future than we have had in the past.

In House Document No. 264, that was printed in reference to the interterritorial freight-rate question, it is said, on page 8:

> The effect of this regionalization of the freight-rate structure is to localize commerce by hampering a national flow of goods across territorial boundary lines. It is natural, however, for commerce to expand as civilization progresses, and as long as these barriers against a national flow of commerce remain economic progress of the Nation will be retarded.

That is the reason, Mr. Chairman, why we direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to make an investigation of these discriminations. In the bill (S. 2009) that was passed by the Senate in May there was an amendment offered by Senator Hill, a former Member of this body, which includes rates on raw materials, in addition to manufactured products, as subjects for investigation. It has been said, Mr. Chairman, that we in the South do not want to go into the question of raw materials. It has been stated here that we have preferential rates on raw materials, and therefore that we ought to be quiet. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, as a Representative of a part of the South, that I am perfectly willing that all rates, whether favorable or unfavorable to the South, shall be investigated; and if it is found that we have rates we should not have, I say they should be taken away from us and that we should be put on an equality with the rest of the country. What I want is a full and fair investigation into the whole rate structure in all parts of the country. But I do not believe that an investigation will show that our raw materials are unduly favored.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman from Arkansas knows that the rate on butter, eggs, and poultry from Little Rock, Ark., to Chicago, Ill., a distance of 625 miles, is $1.11 a hundred, where the rate on the same products from Chicago to Auburn, N. Y., a distance of 626 miles, or 1 mile farther, is 81 cents.

And I would like to ask the gentleman further if he thinks the provision, particularly with reference to domestic freight rates in the bill, will help that situation?

Mr. TERRY. Personally, I think the provision in the bill will not help that situation, for there are discriminations with respect to raw, manufactured, and agricultural products. I say that if there are discriminations and preferences, whether they be for or against us, they should be investigated.

I ask the Committee, Mr. Chairman, to sustain the Whittington amendment.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Whittington amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we in the South, of course, are not opposed to anything that can reduce the rate discriminations that exist or aid the movement toward correction that has been started; but here is the danger we are running into: If we do not watch out we are going to bite off more than we can chew, that is exactly what is likely to happen. Do you realize what a tremendous thing this is we are getting into, what will be necessary to be done under this legislation if we include agricultural commodities and raw materials? Why, the whole Nation's face is our field, and a tremendously difficult and expensive thing to handle if we should get it going as is here begun.

BOB RAMSPECK is not going to offer anything as a sop. I am surprised that those who know him would make the statement that this brilliant gentleman from Georgia would come forth after all these years and stick something in here which is meaningless and is merely a sop. It is like hunting with a splatter-bored shotgun as against a choke-bored gun. If you go out and hunt with a choke-bored gun you can sight something and perhaps hit it; but if you go out with a splatter-bored gun you may shoot all day long and hit nothing.

That is what is in our minds here today. We have something to do and we can do it if we proceed wisely, but must undertake legislation in such form as to be practical and which can be carried forth, or else the whole thing will go by the board. That is the problem before us.

Mr. Chairman, I cut my teeth on this freight-rate proposition. One of the reasons I am in Congress today is because I was able to holler so loud and so long about the freight-rate proposition. This Ramspeck resolution was introduced on March 22 of this year. As a matter of fact, it has been introduced every year for 4 years. An investigation was had and hearings were held. The committee sat and heard a great volume of testimony on it and all that the hearings revealed that could be intelligently proceeded against were these manufactured products that are contained in this bill. It does not show good faith for those who only now come forth at this late date and offer matter of this sort that would if properly presented necessitate long and painstaking hearings, with experts and others, not somebody who will just cut loose and say something in the wind, hoping to ride in on the tail of a section of the bill.

Experts must be heard in testimony as to many things to bring this phase of the bill properly before us today. It shows lack of good faith to come in here and amend in this superficial manner after all the painstaking, expensive hearings that were necessary to get this considered. This should not be put in as a sort of rump measure. That is not the way to secure constructive, successful legislation. Many other difficulties will appear. Of course, this is politics, but we are not Republicans or Democrats on this bill. Democrats and Republicans are on each side. This truly renews our faith in the sincerity and devotion to cause of this body. We find the strong gladiator from North Carolina, Mr. WARREN, unsheathing his sword in defense of the other side. But we shall be able to mow him down, no doubt. Of course, his presence in the other camp distressed us a little.

Mr. Chairman, we have to undertake a program that is possible to be carried through, and we have to hold to this if legislation ever does what it has as its purpose, and that is the reason I oppose the Whittington amendment. We have a chance to open the door to something we have been fighting for for years. But if we go and open up the floodgates under the Whittington amendment and get the whole thing in, the likelihood is that the legislation will not pass and the bill will be defeated. In the second place, if it does go through and pass into law, the whole field spread before us, we cannot concentrate our efforts and get the results we want. This will dissolve the law into an ineffective wide gesture only.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and this subsection close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]. If there is anything in this Government, in any way, shape, manner, or form, that really needs investigation and a careful study by all the intelligent people of the country, it is railroad rates. You can take the list and go through the freight schedule, and you will find no consistency, no rule of reason, nothing that seems to guide them, except "get all the traffic will bear."

For almost half a century I have been paying freight rates on cattle, sheep, hogs, and wheat. We are located about 300 miles from tidewater. I have seen those rates climb year after year, especially since the management of the railroads has been moved to New York. When the management of our western roads was local, we could go to Portland, Oreg., and talk to the general manager. We could there make a showing as to our case. I remember a distinct case in which I made a presentation to the management of a railroad in the West that 4 cents was too much of a differential for the haul over a mountain. The management changed it and made the rate 2 cents. When the power to regulate the railroads moved back to Wall Street, that is one of the changes they made in our community. That rate was put back to 4 cents extra to haul over the mountain, and we have never been able to get even a hearing since that was done 12 or 14 years ago. Under the I. C. C. it would take years to get a decision on such a matter.

We have received some relief from these excessively high rates since the coming of the truck, and with the limited water transportation that has been available. Railroad rate making ought to be investigated and we ought to know if some rule of reason cannot be adopted so far as these freight rates are concerned. The reason this bill is here is to get more money for the railroads, at any cost to all others. There is no other reason for bringing it in here for consideration. It will not afford more employment, it will not result in better shipping conditions, it will not increase industry, nor help the farmer. It may not get more money, legitimately, though its privileges will cost the Government a pretty penny. Who will pay the bill? The farmer and the laborer, the man who cannot pass it on. That is the man who ultimately pays. He must pay this extra money demanded for carrying freight. They have put the rates up as high as they possibly can now where there is little competition from the trucks. The trucks now are under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We passed that law, although I voted against it. Now, it is sought to get water under the same group, which means shoving those rates up just as close to the railroad rates as they can get them, which means more money from a few, not more traffic from the many.

The group of men that are most fooled in this thing is the railroad workingmen. Why, if it were not for the railroad labor lobby here in Washington now this bill would not stand a single chance of being passed. It would not get 100 votes.

Mr. Chairman, I can remember when, in my far-away Oregon home, I used to think of the Congress, the House of Representatives, deliberating on this floor and in committee over bills that were being considered for enactment into law. I had enjoyed some years of legislative experience as State senator and as Governor, but in my humble way and from my western training I really believed that the laws which governed us nationally were carefully considered in detail in committees, debated with care, and then finally enacted after intelligent procedure and deliberation. They were to my innocent mind assumed to be the product of mature judgment. I am now serving my fourth term in this body. I have been somewhat disillusioned by what I have experienced and witnessed here in regard to the consideration and final passage of many important and far-reaching laws which have been added to the statute books since I took office on March 3, 1933. Never have I been more disillusioned, and never has my faith in democratic processes received a severer blow, than in the legislative history of this measure now under consideration.

We had heard that a railroad bill was coming. There had been placed on our desks the report of the Committee of Six. Everyone had been propagandized into full knowledge of the "plight of the railroads." Some of us thought we knew something about it and were eagerly awaiting opportunity to study proposed remedies and hear them discussed on this floor. We knew the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House was considering such an act and that it had before it a measure passed by the Senate and studied by our membership. Suddenly, on Wednesday, July 18, there came from the printer and was given to the House a bill 304 pages in length, with two volumes of House committee hearings and a brief report giving little clue to the real significance of the proposed changes in our whole transportation system. As we thumbed through the bulky pamphlet we found that 196 pages had been crossed out. They were the Senate bill, for which 108 new pages had been substituted, retaining only the title and enacting clause of the original bill already given such careful study in the Senate.

APPEAL TO RULES COMMITTEE

A few of us appeared before the House Rules Committee to protest giving a rule for the consideration of this stupendous, sweeping, revolutionary legislation in these closing days of the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, knowing full well that the rule would mean pressure for quick enactment of a measure little understood, very much under suspicion, and menacing in its possiblities. It is midsummer. We are all tired and worn from a long session. Most of us are disappointed over the results of the session; some are resentful; and many Members of the House have one or more bills they are anxious to see enacted in these closing days. In our appeal to the Rules Committee we asked that the rule be denied at this time, and that upon adjournment of Congress we be allowed to take this bill home for the study it merits and demands. If such legislation is necessary or called for, in part or in its entirety, then next January we could commence discussion and consideration of the measure which will effect, directly or indirectly, more people and interests than any other bill that has been considered since I have been in the Congress.

The Rules Committee saw fit to grant the rule. We are now to be allowed 6 hours of general debate, and then reading of the bill before it is put up for final passage, all within 3 or 4 days.

DEMOCRACY STANDS INDICTED

I never have seen, in my time, nor have I read in our history of as severe an indictment against democracy as the forcing of this bill for consideration, or rather, without consideration, in these midsummer days. For its careful consideration there is no reasonable opportunity nor would any such effort now be fruitful. It is simply impossible to cover the ground in so short a time, and no instructive leadership has been offered for the clarification. The methods used, the long delay and sudden rush, rightly or wrongly, engender suspicion and distrust. Perhaps out of 435 Members, perhaps I say, 10 percent will read the bill carefully. Perhaps 1 percent will have a fairly clear understanding of what it really means. No one can predict its ultimate effect.

The Senate bill, with its 196 pages, covers the problem from one angle. The House bill in its 108 pages, considers it from another angle. Should this bill pass, then it has to go to a conference committee between the two Houses as the Senate bill and House bill clearly disagree. The rules of this House already establish a precedent whereby bills of the same title passing each House but differing fundamentally may be "harmonized" by giving the conferees the right and power to write their own bill. Does anybody in this broad land believe that the 6 or 10 conferees who will be appointed from the Senate and the House will in the closing days of this session be able to coordinate and write a satisfactory conference bill? I do not think anybody is so foolish as to believe that. The conference agreement would, of necessity, be "guided" by the well paid railroad lawyers and lobbyists who are here in the National Capital with their stenographers and statisticians and have already been too powerful a factor in this matter. Do the producers and shippers of this Nation desire to be subjected to the conditions of a law hastily drawn by a few men in a closed conference chamber? Is that the best we can do under a representative government? Do honest men wish to accept the full responsibility of decisions of such vital importance? Would it not be more creditable to our Government and to this administration to remodel our transportation laws in the full light of day and with all the discussion and information obtainable? We all know the bill will be handed to the conferees and their version will probaby be adopted by each House, and that will be the law. Not a Member of this House can predict what that law will be nor will he have the privilege of modifying or amending it.

WHY THE HASTE?

Why the haste? Do it now while we have the country geared up to the idea, they say. Next winter there will be more time to consider and there might even be a change in public sentiment. At any rate, we shall have time to learn what is actually in the bill and whether shippers and other forms of transportation are afforded any protection.

The very fact that its sponsors are willing to have the bill carefully scrutinized by the Congress and the country would do something toward restoring the confidence in legislative bodies now badly shattered even among members of those bodies. Among other things, I should like time to investigate part II of title III briefly set forth on page 10 of the committee's report as "relating to the payment by the Government of full rate in the case of land-grant carriers." This royal gift to the railroads was not included in the Senate bill. Why should the richly endowed land-grant railroads now be relieved of the obligation entered into as part, a very small part, repayment for public lands looted from the people under misapprehension as to the ultimate status of the railroads in relation to the public? How can we without information or reasonable argument so betray our people? Further in that section, which appears to me to be amazing, I read that a certain section of the statutes "shall not hereafter be construed as requiring advertising for bids in connection with the procurement of transportation services when the services required can be procured from any common carrier lawfully operating in the territory where such services are to be performed." Just how far reaching is that clause and what sharpster from our financial overlords slipped it into the bill when vigilance was suspended?

I do not know what all is in this bill. You know little more than I know. Can I decently be asked to vote for a hundred pages of concessions wrung from a congressional committee through a few weeks of pressure from railroad owners who have themselves ruined a great industry and have been a corrupting influence in legislatures and Congresses ever since their earning powers came to the attention of the greedy rascals who ruined them? Any Member who votes "yes" must be voting his entire confidence in the too-hurried committee action, or his indifference to a subject of vital importance to the well-being of the people he represents. I cannot yield my judgment on such a matter. I have followed this railroad problem studiously for over half a century. The proposed action seems to me to indicate only the depths to which our legislative routine may be lowered when resort is made to threats and fears. Just a seasoning of patience and reason will help us to weather this crisis more successfully than will hasty action. I do not minimize the importance of the railroads. I am willing to support any reasonable, fair, and clearly understood legislation to help carry them through the reorganization necessary to throwing off their shackles. I will not vote to bestow privileges on one group while imperiling the others involved. Since there is no public demand for this legislation, we are, in effect, legislating in response to private demands. It piles more favors on a group suffering from its own bad conduct.

WHO WANTS THIS BILL MADE A LAW?

There is no dire need for such a comprehensive act at this time nor for such hasty action. There is no demand for it except from the group in Wall Street which owns or rather controls the securities of the railroads. We have not heard that it is demanded by our governmental agencies which have given us as a Nation such a heavy stake in our railroad system. The farmers surely do not want it, and they seem to understand that it heavily penalizes our basic industry—agriculture—to pay the heavy debts accumulated over long years of wicked manipulation of our transportation system upon which producers are so entirely dependent. The shippers do not need it. The Interstate Commerce Commission has not asked for it and it now has more laws than it has been able to digest and enforce without unconscionable delays.

This bill will be no aid to industry, but rather a handicap. What is the object? Why was it thrown at us in this manner at this late date? The reason offered for popular consumption is that it will increase the income of the transportation lines. We are not told what incomes will be curtailed or wiped out for the benefit of this one industry. Have the railways not been receiving enough to pay the costs of operation with a reasonable profit? The reply depends somewhat upon the viewpoint as to essential costs, especially in relation to interest and dividends on overcapitalization.

The history of railroad operations in the United States may be truthfully written some day; and if it ever is so recorded, it will show more fraud, juggling, and manipulation than any other line of business the world has ever known. The private electric utilities have done quite a job, but they are smaller. The men who have dominated the financial affairs of the transportation lines have sought always to keep the capitalization high and have dissipated the income to suit the whims of those controlling overlords who know little of railroad management and operation and take no pride in achievement in the transportation field. It ever has been the policy of the companies to charge all the traffic would bear, even when a different policy would have brought in more revenue, as has been amply demonstrated in recent practice. Controlling most of the press, either directly or indirectly, the manipulators have been able to put over the propaganda, and they have skillfully laid the groundwork for this present effort to put into their hands means to enable them to continue to carry on their anti-social business of squeezing every dollar possible from the public and blocking progress by destroying competition from other types of carriers.

RELATION TO RAILROAD LABOR

Let no one be deceived into thinking this bill is a measure conceived for the purpose of aiding or designed to aid and extend railroad employment or to increase or maintain wage rates. Let no one imagine it will provide work for those tragically situated groups of railroad men who have been "off the boards" for so many months. Will the railroads employ any more men if this bill passes? It is the idea that they will do so which influences some Members and may make this legislation possible. It is a false idea. The railroad companies said the same thing to the employees 20 years ago, when Congress was considering what is known as the Transportation Act of 1920, and still today there are less than half as many railroad employees as there were in the happy days of the 1920's. Railroad men in my home town, a railroad center, must have a continuous service of nearly 20 years before they are afforded continuous employment on the railroad. Longer trains and bigger engines have laid off men by the scores. Efficiency experts come through every little while, stand around in the shops and offices, and spot some poor employee who can be retired and his work shouldered on someone else. Engines are now in the making that will haul not only 100 cars but up to 175 cars, thus lengthening the distance between the engine and the caboose, which the workers want shortened in the interests of safety and employment. If it were not for the assistance of rail labor, this bill would stand no chance of being enacted into law at this time.

There are not 25 percent of the Members of this Congress who would vote for the bill if it were not for the pressure of the brotherhoods and the railroad employees. Yet the very companies which demand this legislation have mercilessly opposed the reasonable gains through legislation for the benefit of these groups. Where would the employees be now if Congress had listened to the men in whose interests this bill is presented? True, the trainmen are opposing it, and that they have able and fearless leadership is amply demonstrated by their statement in reply to the proposed wage reduction in 1938 "Main Street—Not Wall Street." It certainly puzzles me to have any of the intended victims of that wage-reduction movement pleading now for Wall Street.

LOBBYISTS AND PROPAGANDA

I just wonder how many lobbyists there are in this town now for this bill. I think if the truth could be known we would find that there are hundreds, well paid, expenses taken care of, meals and refreshments provided, managed by a slick, smooth group from Wall Street that knows how to lobby. I remember once in the State of Oregon when I opposed a bill that was put up to a referendum of the people. A tremendous campaign was made by the packing interests which opposed legislation desired by the dairymen. Expert managers in lobbying were brought into the State. After the election was over, in talking with one of the lobbyists, I said, "Tell me how you did it. How could you fool the people and make them vote against their own interests in a matter of this kind?" I will never forget his reply. "Governor Pierce, it is easy enough if you have plenty of time and money and put on the propaganda and have most of the papers with you." It is easy enough to make the people vote their rights away. Yes, you can herd them like bands of sheep. Put on the propaganda. Certainly that is what has been done in this case. The question has been asked who planned the legislation and who can explain it. I just wonder!

THE BILL DESIGNED TO KILL WATER TRANSPORTATION

The Government has invested over $2,000,000,000 in improving our waterways and harbors. The real object behind this bill is to prevent the use, as far as possible, of the rivers, the canals, and the waterways for the transportation of freight. The Interstate Commerce Commission having water, truck, and railroads all under its jurisdiction, and a mandate from this Congress, in this bill, so to fix the rates that there shall be sufficient money earned to pay the costs of operation and dividends on stocks and bonds for a huge overcapitalization of railroads (double the actual value) would throttle truck and water competition. No one not a producer or shipper can fully realize what the coming of the motortruck has meant for short hauls. No one remote from waterways can understand the hopeful expectancy with which shippers have looked forward to relief through that ancient, efficient, and cheap method of transportation—by waterways. The plan is to raise the cost of transportation by water and then the shipper would move his products by rail, as it is quicker. Where the time element is of little importance he should be allowed to benefit from the cheaper method of hauling. There is room for all carriers. Let them share the business. The greatest harm I can see in this bill is that it is designed to kill water transportation by putting it under the Interstate Commerce Commission. Does it need regulating at public expense?

Our learned colleague from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has admirably set forth the effect of this proposed legislation on certain classes of water carriers. I urge all who did not hear his talk to read it in the RECORD and to read the minority views which he signed in the House report on the bill. I cannot too strongly urge a review of that brief minority report which gives the story in compact form, told by those who have had the benefit of committee hearings. They say part III on waterways should be stricken out—I quote significant sections 6 and 8:

(6) It is a matter of common knowledge that the producers and the consumers of the Nation must pay the entire cost of transportation, whether that cost be much or little. There is no denying the fact that the primary purpose of regulating water transportation is in order that the cost of such transportation may be raised, for the purpose of eliminating, as termed by the sponsors of such regulation, "cutthroat competition." With the farmer on the verge of bankruptcy, it is going to be difficult for him to pay the increased cost, resulting from this regulation. It is significant that the farmer has not asked for this legislation. The same is true as to industry generally.

(8) The adoption of this provision will not and cannot materially help railroad labor. As stated above, the total amount of freight handled by the water carriers involved amounts to less than 4 percent. If this traffic were taken over by the railroads, the handling of it would be easily accomplished by slightly lengthening trains, without increasing the number of employees. In other words, both management and labor in the railway field, we believe, are chasing a rainbow in their hope that this bill will bring them prosperity.

The Representative clearly showed that this bill is aimed at the contract carriers on the waterways and the tramp steamers carrying about half of our inland water-borne commerce. The other half of the inland water commerce is owned and controlled by big shippers—steel, coal, and big industries. They are not affected by the bill, of course.

THE FARMER CANNOT BEAR THIS LOAD

The object of this legislation is to put value into the fourteen billions of so-called securities that have no value today, and should not have any. Somebody must be made to pay. Who will finally pay? The farmer and the laboring man. Those who cannot pass the load along. The farmer and the laboring man have ever been the "goat." I assure the proponents of this bill that the agricultural community is in no condition, financially or otherwise, to take on this increased burden of making good $14,000,000,000 of worthless securities owned and controlled by Wall Street.

I want to warn the selfish few. I want to warn the greedy group who seek by this legislation to put another mortgage upon the farmer and to foreclose on the laboring man's home. I want to warn them that these people are just at the breaking point and this may be the last straw. The farmers have already been aroused and are frantically appealing to Congress for assistance and the right to security and a fair return for labor and sacrifice. Aid has been granted under this administration, and the farmers see a half-bright day, especially those who grow commodities like corn, wheat, cotton, and tobacco. Oh, I do not say they are prosperous but they are far better off than they would have been had they not been protected by the legislation enacted during the last 6 years and the appropriations made for their benefit. This legislation would simply make their position more desperate. Pass it, and they must be back here again next winter and the following winter for further subsidy. You and I know that the breaking point of our Treasury is not far away. The hour is too critical for such profligate flinging of favors to the banker group of the Atlantic border. We of the West and South resent insistence upon consideration of legislation of this character at this time to be enacted under whip and spur in the closing hours of this Congress. We fear for our agricultural interests.

Prices at ports are determined and fixed by world's prices. If costs of transporting products to these ports are increased, the farmers must bear the burden. They will bear the heavy costs of restrictive transportation legislation. They will not surrender without a bitter fight the right to enjoy the benefits of all methods of transportation. The beneficiaries of this bill would be a very small group, powerful, and insolently grasping. This is not proposed in the interests of railway labor, which would not gain in security. It would mulct the shippers and producers for the great financial interests which practically own this country, run its machinery, and work their way with its legislative bodies through creating panic for fear they may break further. The political party which sponsors such legislation should and will pay the penalty by forfeiting public confidence. The story will get out because the bills will be presented for payment and the real oppressors will be apparent.

RAILROAD FINANCIAL JUGGLING

It is simply nonsense for the proponents of this measure to claim it is for the purpose of railroad stabilization, coordination, or some equally comprehensive or meaningless phrase. That is not the object at all. The object is to get more money for the railroads, giving them license to loot the Government and the shippers. This is to be done, not by creating more traffic, but by killing off competition and giving the shipper no choice between rail, water, or motortruck. The companies have no trouble, with their brilliant array of counsel, in increasing freight rates, whether justified or not, and all so-called regulatory legislation has not been for the interest of the shipper, the industrial plants, or the laboring man. It has been largely in the interest of the manipulators who have handled and juggled the securities.

Just think of the figures. When the Transportation Act of 1920 was passed all the railroads in the United States could have been purchased for $12,000,000,000, their market value. If they sold today at the prices for which stocks can be purchased in the markets they would bring $12,000,000,000, where they stood 19 years ago. Railroad companies have never worked on the principle of amortizing or paying off their debts. If a worn-out piece of equipment is cast aside, the cost of that equipment is still continued in the capitalization and the shipper is expected to continue to contribute above the cost of operation so that dividends can be paid upon the equipment gone to the wrecking pile in years long past.

The transportation act froze into the capital structure over $12,000,000,000 of water, the capitalization becoming about $24,000,000,000. Then from the deft hand of the inventor came the perfected internal-combustion engine, which was speedily installed in cars—the truck, the tractor, and the private automobile. The overcapitalized railroads suddenly found themselves confronted with their barrier of accumulated debt which kept them from meeting the new competition. This overcapitalization had accomplished no good purpose. It was an evil outgrowth of evil practices.

LABOR AND SHIPPERS PENALIZED

Before the World War, the railroads had almost ruined the waterways by unfair, unjust competition. About that time there was a revival of interest in water transportation and Congress was asked to appropriate money to help restore abandoned and unused water lines, especially on the Great Lakes and the Mississippi. The operating managers of these railroad lines did their best to meet competition. They discharged railroad employees by the thousands, cut their pay rolls, increasing the use of their engines, lengthening their trains, and demanding more service everywhere; but the insatiable demands for interest and dividends prevented recovery. The overcapitalization was continued with the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission which many have been unkind enough to say became the ally of the railroad companies, forgetting its sworn duty of protecting the public. Freight rates have been increased to the point of confiscation. In many of the intermountain, western, and southern sections it costs more to transport agricultural commodities from interior shipping points than the producer gets for his labor and investment. He receives no profit but feeds the people at a loss. I have seen wheat in my home town sell for 23 cents a bushel with a transportation rate of 20 cents to tidewater, 300 miles distant. They have squeezed the lemon dry and if they raise the rates any more, well, they will find they have passed the line of diminishing returns.

LONG-AND-SHORT-HAUL BILL

Four years ago in this Congress the railroads sought to pass through Congress the Pettengill bill repealing the fourth section of the Transportation Act. The object was to allow them to charge more for a short haul than they did for a long haul in the same direction over the same line. That act passed this House over protests from farm interests. Its final enactment into law was blocked in the Senate. It has been stated that the Senate bill does not repeal the fourth section of the Transportation Act, but other students of this legislation say that it does repeal that section. Who knows what we may find the House bill actually does in that respect? No transportation legislation could be more injurious to farmers than repeal of that clause.

WILL DEMOCRACY PREVAIL IN AMERICA?

For years I taught my students what I myself firmly believed—that our country was giving to the world the finest example of representative government. I believed and taught that our democracy had been finally tested by the great upheaval of civil war and had proven that it would endure. I believed and taught that in our land all men had equal privilege and enjoyed opportunity to mold their lives by their highest ideals. I believed and taught that our Government guaranteed us against oppression and in our rights of property and free trade intercourse. Now, in my last years, I find instrumentalities for our destruction in those very institutions of government which I had thought to be bulwarks for our defense. I now realize that special privilege knows no party lines and is seldom prevented from reaching its goal. I now see clearly that a dangerous bureaucracy has become fastened upon government, a horrible parasite. This bill is one more step toward that bureaucracy which I have learned to fear. The tendency to gag rule and to pressure methods in our Congress, and the enactment of legislation which gives privileges to some while curtailing the rights of others make me fear for the future. If people wholly lose confidence in legislative bodies and become bitter and cynical about government we can no longer afford the world a beautiful and hopeful example of democracy. Some of our performances this session have left me saddened and discouraged. This handling of the railroad bill is one of them. I deplore such conduct of public business. I resent the assault on legislative decency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] for 4 minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that there are some things in connection with this amendment that should be said. In the course of our hearings the committee was asked to hear certain people—I do not say they were all from the southern sections, but I would say they were predominantly from those sections—who for years have been complaining about alleged freight-rate discriminations against them. The committee took time in the course of the hearings to hear them. When we started the hearings there had been proposals in the Congress which would in effect have put the Congress of the United States into the business of making rates. When the rate experts representing those sections appeared before our committee, every one of them admitted without exception, when questioned, that they did not expect the Congress of the United States to make the rates; that that was a power properly vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission and that it should remain there. The last thing in the world they wanted was that the Congress undertake to make the rates. Why, that is one of the most complicated matters of which you can conceive.

To go back a little further, there has been controversy between the different States of the country over alleged freight discriminations. We have had the Southern Governors' case before the Interstate Commerce Commission, opposed by an association of northern Governors, including my State. Without regard to who is right or wrong, the Commission is the place where the controversy should be settled; not in the Congress of the United States.

Our hearings disclosed that there are really no discriminations in regard to freight moving from north to south and from south to north. You can find differences in the freight rates within some sections of the country and official territory, but people will fairly explain to you that those differences result from differences in the density of traffic and a lot of other situations that do not really involve unjust discriminations.

Where are we in this matter? I refer to the Southern Governors' case, which is the case where these people are asking for relief. They did not in that request include one single item of raw products. Every item they referred to is a manufactured product. That is their attitude. If that is what they want, why not put it in that way? I seriously doubt whether this provision has any place in this bill at all, but in the interest of fairness and in the interest of seeing that justice is done I am going along with the provision. But if you people who live in sections against which you think there are discriminations really hope to accomplish something by this provision, you had better keep it as it is written.

As far as farm freight rates are concerned, in the 1938 Farm Act we authorized and directed the Secretary of Agriculture to intervene before the Interstate Commerce Commission to the end that the interests of the farmers might be protected. I do not know how fully he has exercised that authority, but it is there and it can be exercised.

So I say to the members of the committee, let us not go too far in the direction of setting up the Congress as the body to make rates. I believe there are something like half a million different freight rates in this country. Does any of you think you could sit down as a Member of this Congress and fairly and efficiently pass upon those different rates? The so-called Ramspeck resolution seemed to finally represent the wishes of the interested parties. So we put that in the bill. I still believe that it fairly represents what they want. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, much has been said in the debate on this amendment regarding the group which organized last winter to see what could be done to eliminate discriminations in freight rates between various sections of the country. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], who has spoken on this amendment, was selected as chairman of that group for the reason that he had been active in that work for several years. It fell to my lot to be a member of the executive committee of the group and to act as secretary of the organization. As a representative of the West, I can say that the group was not composed entirely of southerners, but consisted of a representative group of Members of Congress from all parts of the country which are adversely affected by the discriminatory practices which exist under the present system of rate making in this country.

The distinguished gentleman from Indiana, for whom I have a high regard, indicated in the speech on the amendment which he has just concluded that the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, which would have the effect of authorizing and directing an investigation of rates on agricultural products and raw materials, is not needed and that no one has asked for it.

I refer, Mr. Chairman, to House Document No. 264 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, which, on page 41, sets forth a list of rates on butter, eggs, and dressed poultry from various points to various points in this country. In that list is contained the following:

The rate from Lincoln, Nebr., in the State in which I live, and in which State, of course, is located the district which I have the honor to represent, to the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, a distance of 746 miles, is $1.14 per hundredweight. From Kingston, N. Y., to Cincinnati, Ohio, the same destination, the distance is identically the same, 746 miles, but the rate is 88 cents as contrasted with the rate of $1.14 from Lincoln, Nebr., to Cincinnati. Lincoln, Nebr., is located in western trunk line territory and the other points mentioned—Cincinnati, Ohio, and Kingston, N. Y.—are located in official, or eastern territory.

So I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] he is not entirely accurate in his statement. There is necessity for an investigation of the discrimination which exists on agricultural products and raw materials, but I suggest to this Committee that we are making a great deal out of something about which we need not make much, because while this amendment would authorize and direct the Interstate Commerce Commission, in making its investigation on manufactured products, to include an investigation on agricultural products and raw materials; investigation of rates of any sort would be made only if a shipper asked it. If the shipper did not complain, of course, he would not ask for an investigation of rates and none would be made. I submit that this amendment should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, you have all heard the joke about the farmer who shipped his hogs down to South St. Paul and then got a bill from the railroad for freight because the check received for the hogs was not enough to pay the freight bill. Well, that is no joke to the farmers of the great Middle West whose prices have been on the toboggan ever since the slump started in 1922. It may be a joke to the farmers of the other sections of this Nation, I cannot speak for them, but I can speak to a certain degree for the farmers of the Middle West, and I know you are discussing today one of the most fundamental and serious problems which confronts their welfare and through them the future, in fact, of this Nation, and still you refuse to allow this amendment to go through which would make it possible to examine this problem—not to correct it, but at least fully to examine it.

You know, in the final analysis, this bill which we are discussing now would not only give control over all freight rates and all transportation to the Interstate Commerce Commission and through them to the railroads thus doubtless raising rates still higher; but it will serve to increase Government control, Government manipulation of business, and Government regimentation and operation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I cannot yield now.

You know, at least a majority of you do, as I know, that what we need in this Nation is to examine these high freight rates, especially on farm products, and I believe that we would find that it is the underlying cause for the farmers' plight and inability to sell his produce, as well as the plight of many other lines of commercial activity in this Nation. You know the basis of the farmers' trouble is that he has not any of the artificial protection which we have placed around the railroads. The railroads have connived with and through the Interstate Commerce Commission to force up their rates artificially, and the farmer has been forced to pay those rates because he could not protect himself, and still certain members of this committee refuse to insert this amendment which would make possible an examination of this disease of our national economic body.

I would venture to say that if the majority of the 117 new Members in the House of Representatives this year were truthful with themselves, they would admit they were sent to Washington on the basis of a promise to work for less Government control and manipulation in the administration of business. I will venture to say that you probably took to your constituents and to the voters of your district who sent you here a plea, at least by insinuation, that if elected to Congress you would end this Government manipulation and control of business; that you would lend your voice and vote to putting a stop to this continual infiltration into business by Government agencies, and I would like to suggest, at least to my Republican colleagues on the left and especially to those who seem to be so intent on supporting this measure, that if I am not mistaken, next year, when some of you go back to your constituents and ask for reelection, you are going to be brought to task if you continue in your evident intent to bring to the Nation, as you are doing through this bill, still more Government operation, control, and regimentation of our daily lives and our business structure. I hope for your sakes, as well as for the sake of my good colleagues on the right who are for this bill, that you will see that it is not in the interest of the public, it is not in the interest of the great masses of the people, the farmers, the small-business men, or the laboring people. It is only in the interest of a very small percentage of the whole citizenry to further regiment and control business as this bill provides, and to force freight rates still higher. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, this provision, so far as it provides for an investigation, directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to make the investigation and then enter such orders as may be appropriate for the removal of any unlawfulness which may be found to exist. Under the law an unreasonable rate is an unlawful rate. When we heard this matter the committee reached the conclusion that the facts justified this investigation. I have no doubt that if a complete investigation were made of our rate structure there would be many cases of differentials in both agricultural and industrial products that need correction; in fact, it is my belief that the greatest opportunity we have to establish a sound improvement of transportation is in adjusting these differentials. In my judgment, that is the primary thing that can be accomplished by the legislation that we propose. [Applause.] If there is anything that justifies that it is the present system with respect to our rate structure. In that connection, and somewhat aside from the immediate purpose, I would like to quote Mr. Eastman, who made a statement to our committee in reference to this legislation:

> The way in which rates have been made in the past enables the railroads to reduce many rates to meet new competition without going below full cost of service. On the other hand, they have multitudes of rates which yield only a margin over out-of-pocket costs, if they yield that. The existence of these low rates makes the reduction of higher rates more serious than it otherwise would be.

In fact, this method of reduction has given undue emphasis to competition in fixing rates, and that has necessitated neglect of economics in adjusting rates from the standpoint of the economic welfare; so, whatever is the result of this investigation, it is dealing with what I regard the most important phase of this problem as we seek to adjust it.

As far as the committee is concerned, I take it that it is of no consequence to the committee as to what is done with this particular amendment. When it was presented to the committee we had called to our attention, among other things, the attitude of the southern Governors. Six Governors of the Southern States joined in trying to find a remedy such as they desired, and I have in my hand a list of the products which they wanted investigated. They included 20 different classifications of articles, all of which are industrial, of a manufactured type, and none of a strictly agricultural type. The argument made to our committee was that the rates on industrial products worked to the disadvantage of the South and prevented the development of manufacturing in different localities. So in a word it is up to those who want this investigation to settle the matter as to how broad they want the investigation to be. The only objection I see to making it broad is that by making it too broad you may dissipate your effort. By scattering the effort you may increase the job, cause delay, and weaken the result. That does not necessarily follow however. It is up to those who want it to decide that question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It will be only as broad as the shippers themselves make it by their application.

Mr. LEA. That is true.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. An investigation is not made unless requested.

Mr. LEA. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, some time has elapsed since the amendment was offered, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the Whittington amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

POOLING; CONSOLIDATIONS, MERGERS, AND ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL IN CASE OF CARRIERS BY RAILROAD, MOTOR VEHICLE, AND WATER

SEC. 8. Section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. (1) Except upon specific approval by order of the Commission as in this section provided, and except as provided in paragraph (16) of section 1 of this part, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to this part, part II, or part III to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other such common carrier or carriers for the pooling or division of traffic, or of service, or of gross or net earnings, or of any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling or division of traffic, service, or earnings as aforesaid each day of its continuance shall be a separate offense: Provided, That whenever the Commission is of opinion, after hearing upon application of any such carrier or carriers or upon its own initiative, that the pooling or division, to the extent indicated by the Commission, of their traffic, service, or gross or net earnings, or of any portion thereof, will be in the interest of better service to the public or of economy in operation, and will not unduly restrain competition, the Commission shall by order approve and authorize, if assented to by all the carriers involved, such pooling or division, under such rules and regulations, and for such consideration as between such carriers and upon such terms and conditions, as shall be found by the Commission to be just and reasonable in the premises: Provided further, That any contract, agreement, or combination to which any common carrier by water subject to part III is a party, relating to the pooling or division of traffic, service, or earnings, or any portion thereof, lawfully existing on the date this paragraph as amended takes effect, if filed with the Commission within 6 months after such date, shall continue to be lawful except to the extent that the Commission, after hearing upon application or upon its own initiative, may find and by order declare that such contract, agreement, or combination is not in the interest of better service to the public or of economy in operation, or that it will unduly restrain competition.

"(2) (a) It shall be lawful, with the approval and authorization of the Commission, as provided in subdivision (b), for two or more carriers to consolidate or merge their properties, or any part thereof, into one corporation for the ownership, management, and operation of the properties theretofore in separate ownership; or for any carrier, or two or more carriers jointly, to puchase, lease, or contract to operate the properties, or any part thereof, of another; or for any carrier, or two or more carriers jointly, to acquire control of another through purchase of its stock; or for a person which is not a carrier to acquire control of two or more carriers through ownership of their stock; or for a person which is not a carrier and which has contol of one or more carriers to acquire control of another carrier through ownership of its stock.

"(b) Whenever a consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control is proposed under subdivision (a), the carrier or carriers or person seeking authority therefor shall present an application to the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall notify the Governor of each State in which any part of the properties of the carriers involved in the proposed transaction is situated, and also such carriers and the applicant or applicants (and, in case carriers by motor vehicle are involved, the persons specified in section 205 (e)), and shall afford reasonable opportunity for interested parties to be heard. If the Commission shall consider it necessary in order to determine whether the findings specified below may properly be made, it may set said application for public hearing, but such a public hearing shall be held in all cases where carriers by railroad are involved. If the Commission finds that, subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control will be consistent with the public interest, it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control, upon the terms and conditions and with the modifications so found to be just and reasonable: Provided, That if a carrier by railroad subject to this part, or any person which is controlled by such a carrier within the meaning of paragraph (7), or affiliated therewith within the meaning of paragraph (6), is an applicant in the case of a proposed consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control involving a motor carrier, the Commission shall not enter such an order unless it finds that the transaction proposed will be consistent with the public interest and will enable such carrier to use service by motor vehicle to public advantage in its operations and will not unduly restrain competition.

"(c) In passing upon any proposed transaction under the provisions of this section, the Commission shall give weight to the following considerations, among others: (1) The effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; (2) where appropriate, the effect upon the public interest of the inclusion, or failure to include, other railroads in the territory involved in the proposed transaction; (3) where appropriate, the total fixed charges resulting from the proposed transaction; and (4) where appropriate, the interest of the carrier employees affected.

"(d) The Commission shall have authority in the case of a proposed transaction involving a railroad or railroads, as a prerequisite to its approval of the proposed transaction, to require, upon equitable terms, the inclusion of other railroads, upon a finding that such inclusion is consistent with the public interest.

"(e) No consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control, which contemplates a guaranty of dividends, shall be approved by the Commission except upon a specific finding by the Commission that such guaranty is not inconsistent with the public interest. No consolidation or merger shall be approved which will result in an increase of total fixed charges on funded debt, except upon a specific finding by the Commission that such an increase in a particular case would not be contrary to public interest. The Commission shall require, as a prerequisite to its approval of any proposed transaction under the provisions of this section, a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the employees affected.

"(3) Whenever a person which is not a carrier is authorized, by an order entered under paragraph (2), to acquire control of any carrier or of two or more carriers, such person thereafter shall, to the extent provided by the Commission, taking into account the types of carriers involved in the acquisition, be considered as a carrier subject to the following provisions (which relate to reports, accounts, etc., of carriers): Section 20 (1) to (10), inclusive, of this part, sections 204 (a) (1) and 220 (a) and (b) of part II, and section 313 of part III, and the following provisions (which relate to issues of securities and assumptions of liabilities of carriers): Section 20a (2) to (11), inclusive, of part I, and section 214 of part II, including in each case the penalties applicable in the case of violations of such provisions. In the application of such provisions of section 20a of this part, and of section 214 of part II in the case of any such person the Commission shall authorize the issue or assumption applied for only if it finds that such issue or assumption is consistent with the proper performance of its service to the public by each carrier which is under the control of such person, that it will not impair the ability of any such carrier to perform such service, and that it is otherwise consistent with the public interest.

"(4) It shall be unlawful for any person, except as provided in paragraph (2), to accomplish or effectuate, or to participate in accomplishing or effectuating, the control or management in a common interest in any two or more carriers, however such result is attained, whether directly or indirectly, by use of common directors, officers, or stockholders, a holding or investment company or companies, a voting trust or trusts, or in any other manner whatsoever. It shall be unlawful to continue to maintain control or management accomplished or effectuated after the enactment of this amendatory paragraph and in violation of its provisions. As used in this paragraph and paragraph (5), the words 'control or management' shall be construed to include the power to exercise control or management.

"(5) For the purposes of this section, but not in anywise limiting the application of the provisions thereof, any transaction shall be deemed to accomplish or effectuate the control or management in a common interest of two carriers—

"(a) if such transaction is by a carrier, and if the effect of such transaction is to place such carrier and persons affiliated with it, taken together, in control of another carrier;

"(b) if such transaction is by a person affiliated with a carrier, and if the effect of such transaction is to place such carrier and persons affiliated with it, taken together, in control of another carrier;

"(c) if such transaction is by two or more persons acting together, one of whom is a carrier or is affiliated with a carrier, and if the effect of such transaction is to place such persons and carriers and persons affiliated with any one of them and persons affiliated with any such affiliated carrier, taken together, in control of another carrier.

"(6) For the purposes of this section a person shall be held to be affiliated with a carrier if, by reason of the relationship of such person to such carrier (whether by reason of the method of, or circumstances surrounding organization or operation, or whether established through common directors, officers, or stockholders, a voting trust or trusts, a holding or investment company or companies, or any other direct or indirect means), it is reasonable to believe that the affairs of any carrier of which control may be acquired by such person will be managed in the interest of such other carrier.

"(7) For the purposes of this section, wherever reference is made to control, it is immaterial whether such control is direct or indirect. As used in this section, the term 'control' shall be construed to include the power to exercise control.

"(8) The Commission is hereby authorized, upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, but after notice and hearing, to investigate and determine whether any person is violating the provisions of paragraph (4). If the Commission finds after such investigation that such person is violating the provisions of such paragraph, it shall by order require such person to take such action as may be necessary, in the opinion of the Commission, to prevent continuance of such violation. The provisions of this paragraph shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other enforcement provisions contained in this part; and with respect to any violation of paragraphs (2) to (13), inclusive, of this section, any penalty provision applying to such a violation by a common carrier subject to this part shall apply to such a violation by any other person.

"(9) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction upon the complaint of the Commission, alleging a violation of any of the provisions of this section or disobedience of any order issued by the Commission thereunder by any person, to issue such writs of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, as may be necessary to restrain such person from violation of such provision or to compel obedience to such order.

"(10) The Commission may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such orders, supplemental to any order made under paragraph (1), (2), or (8), as it may deem necessary or appropriate.

"(11) Nothing in this section shall be construed to require the approval or authorization of the Commission in the case of a consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control where the only parties to the transaction are motor carriers subject to part II (but not including a motor carrier controlling, controlled by, or affiliated with, a carrier as defined in section 1 (3)), and where the aggregate number of motor vehicles owned, leased, controlled or operated by such parties, for purposes of transportation subject to part II, does not exceed 20.

"(12) The authority conferred by this section shall be exclusive and plenary, and any carrier or corporation participating in or resulting from any transaction approved by the Commission thereunder shall have full power (with the assent, in the case of a purchase and sale, a lease, a corporate consolidation, or a corporate merger, of a majority, unless a different vote is required under applicable State law, in which case the number so required shall assent, of the votes of the holders of the shares entitled to vote of the capital stock of such corporation at a regular meeting of such stockholders, the notice of such meeting to include such purpose, or at a special meeting thereof called for such purpose) to carry such transaction into effect and to own and operate any properties and exercise any control or franchises acquired through said transaction without invoking any approval under State authority; and any carriers or other corporations, and their officers and employees and any other persons, participating in a transaction approved or authorized under the provisions of this section shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws and of all other restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to carry into effect the transaction so approved or provided for in accordance with the terms and conditions, if any, imposed by the Commission, and to hold, maintain, and operate any properties and excise any control or franchises acquired through such transaction.

"(13) If any provision of the foregoing paragraphs of this section, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the other provisions of such paragraphs, and the application of such provision to any other person or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"(14) As used in paragraphs (2) to (13), inclusive, the term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, association, joint-stock company, or corporation, and the term 'carrier' means a carrier by railroad, an express company, or a forwarding carrier, subject to this part, a motor carrier subject to part II, and a water carrier subject to part III.

"(15) From and after the 1st day of July 1914, it shall be unlawful for any carrier, as defined in section 1 (3), or (after the date of the enactment of this amendatory section) any person controlled by such a carrier, or affiliated therewith, to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal or elsewhere with which such carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic or any vessel carrying freight or passengers upon said water route or elsewhere with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

"(16) Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Commission to determine questions of fact, arising under paragraph (15), as to the competition or possibility of competition, after full hearing, on the application of any railroad company or other carrier. Such application may be filed for the purpose of determining whether any existing service is in violation of such paragraph and may pray for an order permitting the continuance of any vessel or vessels already in operation, or for the purpose of asking an order to install new service not in conflict with the provisions of such paragraph. The Commission may on its own motion or the application of any shipper institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the Commission and had the question of competition or the possibility of competition determined as herein provided. In all such cases the order of said Commission shall be final.

"(17) If the Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July 1, 1914. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Commission and shall be subject to this act in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, That any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Commission prior to July 1, 1914, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date, may be considered and granted thereafter."

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRINGTON: On page 210, line 9, after the word "affected", substitute a comma for the period and add the following: "Provided, however, That no such transaction shall be approved by the Commission if such transaction will result in unemployment or displacement of employees of the carrier or carriers, or in the impairment of existing employment rights of said employees."

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to safeguard railway labor. We have contended all along, and I again repeat, this bill is essentially in the interest of railroad carriers, the stronger railroad carriers, I should say, and contrary to the interest of the weaker roads, the water carriers, the shippers, the public, and, I emphasize right here, contrary to the interest of the railroad employees. I realize full well the splendid work of the able gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] in behalf of the railroad employees, and I can assure him and the Members that this is no attempt to usurp his position of leader for railroad employees' legislation, but I do think he has failed to recognize the dangers inherent in this bill. If you want to pave the way for ghost railroads and ghost railroad towns, if you want the blue envelope or the pink slip going out to 200,000 railroad employees, do not vote for my amendment.

Some of you may be confused by the fact that several of the railroad brotherhoods have endorsed this bill under the mistaken impression that it protects the interests of the employees and prevents disemployment when consolidations are authorized. My analysis convinces me that the bill simplifies the method of consolidation and does not protect the employee.

In the original version of this measure the following language referring to consolidations appeared:

Provided, That approval of any transaction—

That is, any consolidation—

subject to the provisions of this section may be given without hearing if in the judgment of the Commission a hearing is not necessary to enable it to make appropriate findings. Such approval may be upon such terms and conditions as the Commission shall find to be just and reasonable in the premises.

In other words, the door was left wide open for consolidation of lines without a hearing and without any protection whatever for the interest of employees.

I call your attention now to the fact that through being misled some of the same railroad unions also endorsed the original bill containing this language. But this wide-open invitation to consolidate was too raw a deal for the committee to swallow, and the provision was later eliminated and new language substituted. The language now provides for—

A fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the employees affected—

High-sounding and rosy-tinted words which guarantee absolutely no safeguard to employees and, in short, mean practically nothing.

Listen to this, you friends of railroad employees: In an analysis of the pending bill published this month by the Association of American Railroads, if you please, I find this paragraph on the subject of "Consolidations":

The House bill, as well as the Senate bill, vastly improves the present law with respect to railroad consolidations. It repeals that provision of the existing law which requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to set up a complete plan of consolidation, assigning all railroads to a limited number of systems. This artificial method of handling has proved ineffective, and the Commission itself has recommended that it be relieved of this duty. The House bill provides for the consolidation of railroads in accordance with plans to be worked out in each case by the railroads and submitted for approval to the Interstate Commerce Commission. There are other useful provisions in the bill of a technical nature, which will facilitate consolidation.

There you have it direct from the railroad owners. The bill as now written permits the roads to work out their own consolidations; in fact, "facilitates" these consolidations, and if you can consolidate railroads without disemploying workers, I would like to know how.

My amendment protects the railroad worker against any unemployment or any impairment of employment rights as a result of consolidations. Naturally, the railroads are not going to like this amendment. But if they want to show good faith with the brotherhoods they will accept it.

Fellow Members, in addition to all its other iniquities against the public, this legislative monstrosity will throw thousands of railroad employees out of work. Let us sidetrack the bill now until the next session. In the meantime I feel safe in assuring you that the railroad brotherhoods will wake up to the fact that they are the victims of a "sellout." An educational plan is under way to undeceive them as to the so-called merits of this bill. The "Paul Reveres" are beginning to ride. The country is just getting wise.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON].

On last Friday, in making the first speech in opposition to this bill, directing the attention of railroad employees to the subject, I said as follows:

Mark my words, when I say to them as a friend who has stood by them when they needed friends in this body, that not one railroad job will this bill create, although it will throw thousands and thousands of others who toil out of employment. Certainly they must realize these coordinations and consolidations and shakedowns will ultimately mean the loss of thousands and thousands of their own jobs.

Let any member of the committee or any Member of the House point to one single, solitary provision in this bill in behalf of the railroad employees of this country. Forever there is hanging over them the specter of unemployment. Men in my own district with at least 20 years of seniority—and I am told that men in other sections with more seniority than that—are today walking the streets without work, having to mortgage their homes, seeing no possible chance of returning to their former jobs.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON] would protect them and would write into this law the protection that every railroad man in the country, regardless of what brotherhood he belongs to, desires.

It was just a short while ago that Mr. Daniel Willard said:

Eighty percent of the savings effected by consolidations would be taken out of the pockets of the railroad workers.

Who are going to make these consolidations? The management, who might be more friendly, are not going to make them; but every Member of this House knows that the consolidations are going to be made by the railroad bankers in New York City. If the Members of this House here today want to safeguard the jobs of railroad men throughout the country, they ought to earnestly and vigorously support the amendment just offered by the able gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON]. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I have just received a letter from Mr. Steve C. Lush, vice chairman of the Minnesota State legislative board of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. I have known him personally for many years. He is a very able man and very sincere as well as a prominent and popular citizen of the State of Minnesota. I want to read you some of his letter, because it is very relevant to this amendment which is now before us.

Mr. Lush says:

At our recent international convention held in Cleveland, Ohio, a resolution was unanimously adopted condemning this legislation which you are now considering. We are satisfied that the enactment of this bill will bring about wholesale consolidations of railroads, which as we all agree, would be disastrous not only to the employees of the railroads but to the country itself.

We have from the outset contended that the principal reason for the railroads desiring this legislation was because they felt that it would be easier to bring about monopolistic consolidations and thereby lessen employment. I again call your attention to the fact that approximately 57 percent of the people formerly employed upon railroads are no longer so employed, yet the railroads' tonnage has only decreased 29 percent. Therefore it is quite evident and apparent that the employees of the American railroads have already paid more than a fair share toward the present business slump and other factors which have taken the traffic from the rails, and we further feel that any benefits derived from the passage of this act will be of little moment to the employees, and we are doubtful if it will be of much benefit to the stock and bond holders.

If the railroads will give adequate freight service, they will have returned to the rails the freight now being hauled by other means of transportation, the same as they recovered the passenger business when they lowered rates and speeded up their trains. Therefore I cannot too earnestly urge you to vote against this legislation.

In other words, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen are not for this legislation.

Now I want to tell you who belongs to the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen in case you do not already know. It will be well to consider who they are. They are one of the big four, the other three being the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and the Brotherhood of Enginemen and Firemen.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen includes in its membership conductors, assistant conductors, dining-car conductors or stewards, ticket collectors, train baggagemen, yardmasters, assistant yardmasters, yard conductors or foremen, flagmen, brakemen, switchmen, switch tenders, and car-retarder operators, a membership totaling altogether more than all three of the other brotherhoods combined. Shall they not have some voice in railroad and transportation legislation? They must know something about their own business, and I believe we should listen to their pleas to vote down this legislation. At least, this amendment under consideration is in line with the argument contained in Mr. Lush's letter. Therefore, I believe we should support the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. [Applause.]

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is an appropriate time and place to say what I have to say with regard to this bill.

The committee substitute for S. 2009 is supposed to establish a national transportation policy for fair and impartial regulation of the modes of transportation, by rail, highway, and water so administered to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each, and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions. When I read section 8, permitting consolidations and mergers, especially in subsection (c) where the Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall give weight to "where appropriate, the interest of the carrier employees affected," it makes me stop and wonder just what benefit can come to carrier employees in fair wages and equitable working conditions who have been displaced from their jobs through consolidations and mergers where the Commission did not deem it to be appropriate to give weight to their employment. What in heaven's name can any railroad employee or any officer of an employees union find in this bill to support it and at the same time be fair to themselves and to the employees they represent?

Consolidations and mergers of railroads is of benefit only to the already over-rich big bankers and security holders, and certainly can never be of benefit to railroad employees. Consolidations and mergers will mean abandonment of terminals, shops, and tracks; not only will the employees lose their jobs, but businessmen will lose their patronage, communities will be deprived of railroad service—can you imagine the conditions bound to prevail in hundreds of communities denied rail service because the big-banker owners and controllers of railroads throught their profits could be greater with the consolidations and mergers permitted and even encouraged in the committee's substitute bill.

The railroads have evidently lured some of the employees' representatives into supporting such legislation under the guise of regulating all modes of transportation—get even with their competitors—and the hope thereby to create more railroad jobs. What great additional handicap does part 2 impose upon highway carriers which would be of benefit to rail employees; would abandonment of rail service where highway carriers can serve, be of great benefit to rail employees? I think not, and the rail employees would think as I do if they knew the real import of this drastic legislation. What can the rail employees hope to gain in part 3, the regulation of water carriers? Will not such regulation lead to increased water rates with damaging effect upon such mode of transportation? Suppose that some traffic now on water would be forced to use rails under the provisions of this legislation purported to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of present modes of transportation, will the rail employees be benefited therefrom? No, the answer is "no," because the long freight train will be made longer and no additional rail employees will be needed.

Our friends supporting the committee tell us the legislation is not to injure or cripple water carriers. If that be true, then why, why is part 3 included? Our friends tell us that this legislation is not to deprive rail employees of their jobs; then why has the committee all but forgot rail employees with the sop, yes, very slim sop, "where appropriate the carrier employees affected." Why did they fail to include a provision prohibiting consolidations and mergers where loss of rail employment would be involved?

This legislation is unfair to the communities available to water-carrier service, the proponents hope to give railroads undue advantage over water carriers. This legislation is unfair to rail employees, it will be the vehicle to eliminate many rail jobs through consolidations and mergers. This legislation is unfair to the people generally, those who now have water-carrier service, and those who will be left without rail service through the easy-made consolidations and mergers with resultant abandonments.

I did not represent railroads in civil life as an attorney or otherwise. I am not representing railroads or any other industry here. I am doing my best to represent the people, which includes the railroads, their employees, and their patrons; the highway carriers, their employees, and their patrons; the water carriers, their employees, and their patrons. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the committee substitute for S. 2009.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, and I would like to reserve 5 minutes of that time for myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES].

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

In the State of Wisconsin are three great railroad organizations: The Milwaukee & St. Paul, the Northwestern, and the Sioux. The next step in consolidation in the Middle West will be these three railroads, and at least 2,500 men will be put out of work, as estimated by those who have gone over the records carefully. I am opposed to the Lea bill if it does not include this amendment for the protection of the men working on the railroads. [Applause.]

I believe there is an obligation on the Interstate Commerce Commission, much as I dislike the Commission, to support the railroad men as well as the railroads themselves in their financial structure. I believe it is just as much the obligation of the Interstate Commerce Commission at this time under any measure passed by Congress to see that pay envelopes and pay are provided for the railroad men as it is to reduce interest and change bonds.

I am for the Harrington amendment because our first obligation is to the people of the United States, not to the financiers.

I am opposed to this bill because it allows finance corporations to buy the bonds of a railroad outright and take it into public ownership. When this is done there will be few people employed compared to the number employed today. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, economists tell us that the railroads of the country are suffering from a number of mortal diseases. Were I a diagnostician of their condition I would say that the most fatal phase of their situation is banker operation and control. These nimble gentry have taken and are taking now hundreds of millions of dollars out of the railroads annually.

Senator WHEELER stated, I think before the special committee on the wage question, that $365,000,000 a year was being wasted largely because of that and similar phases of the question.

I am for the Harrington amendment. This morning I had a call from the Honorable John Fitzgibbons, formerly a Member of this House and now the New York State representative of the trainmen. I asked him to dictate his views on the bill. He dictated the following:

In Oswego, N. Y., the consolidation of the D., L. & W. with the New York Central combined their freight facilities and resulted in the abandonment of a freight house. Two stations and two ticket offices were reduced to one, with the business handled through the N. Y. C. office. Consolidation nationally would bring about the unemployment of many thousands.

Consolidation, as provided in the Lea bill, would affect many villages and communities. The civic interest, which has brought about the establishment of schools, fire and police departments, would be destroyed by abandoning roads.

Railroad consolidations such as the Pennsylvania and the B. & O., the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific to the coast, parts of the D., L. & W. parallel to the Erie, will put the railroad employees on the dole.

Accompanying Mr. Fitzgibbons was J. A. Farquharson, national legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. He says in part:

Hearings have been held before the Interstate Commerce Commission on the consolidation of the Chicago & North Western and the Chicago, St. Paul & Pacific Railroads. Probably the greatest damage which would be done by this consolidation would be between Chicago and Minneapolis, but in the whole consolidation plan it is contemplated that 1,108 miles of track would be abandoned; that terminal facilities, as well as freight houses, stations, and shops would be consolidated and as a result many men would lose their positions.

In this statement Mr. Farquharson quotes the words of one of the leading railroad managers in the United States of America, a real railroad manager, not a banker manager, Daniel Willard, who says that 80 percent of these consolidations would come out of the pockets of the men.

Mr. Farquharson goes on to state:

If a similar consolidation were effected between the Southern Pacific and the Western Pacific, the same possibility of unemployment would follow. The same is true of many portions of the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific, if those two lines were consolidated. Especially in the West, the abandonment of railroad mileage leaves communities without reasonable railroad transportation. One thing should be borne in mind, that the settlement of the western country was encouraged by the building of railroads, and the railroad terminals of the West are largely dependent on railroad pay rolls, and if these pay rolls are reduced or wiped out, as is possible under this legislation, then these communities will suffer.

I say, let the railroads cure these evils in management, these grave leaks, this wasting of more than $1,000,000 a day, before Congress attempts to take it out of the pockets of the men.

I am for this amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to speak exactly upon the amendment that is before the Committee at this time. I want to apprise the House of two amendments I intend to offer. One is on page 208 following the language:

If the Commission finds that, subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control will be consistent with the public interest, it shall enter an order.

Instead of the word "shall" insert the word "may." As the bill came to the House from the Senate it contained in this sentence the word "may"; and the word "may", as I understand it, is in the present statute law on the subject. I want to restore the language of the Senate bill with reference to the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and take away from the Commission the mandatory feature of this provision.

On page 209, in line 11, where the word "other" is used, I shall offer an amendment to strike out the word "other" and substitute for it the word "weak." Personally I do not believe in the consolidation of railroads unless there is some weak road that cannot stand on its own feet and which should be consolidated with some solvent and strong and financially sound railroad.

Railroads are indispensable to this country; we must have them. Apparently they need assistance. The railroads are today answering for the sins of their fathers. I think this bill will be of some assistance to the railroads and likewise to the public, also to the country as a whole. I want to ask the chairman of the committee just what obstacles there are in existing law that stand in the way of bringing about consolidations, which obstacles have been eliminated in this bill? I would like to be enlightened upon this point because I am sure the chairman knows I am looking for information.

Mr. LEA. The main difficulty that has been eliminated by this bill as to consolidations is the requirement that the Commission itself shall submit plans providing for the consolidation. They contemplated consolidations in probably 15 different sections of the country. It has been impractical; it has not worked. That was eliminated in this bill. The pending bill provides for voluntary consolidations, the plans to be submitted by the railroad companies subject to approval, or disapproval, or modification by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, you are broadening the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to effect consolidations by this bill?

Mr. LEA. No. They have no power to compel consolidations. All they can do is approve. They have unlimited power to reject.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They have the power if this bill is passed?

Mr. LEA. If the bill is passed, yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this moment to say that I am in full accord with the amendment and intend to support it.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a table showing the trend of employment on the railways of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The table referred to follows:

NOTE.—Years 1924 to 1930 approximated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the pending amendment will be adopted. I think the House would be derelict in its duty to the million men who operate the railroads if adequate provision were not made for their welfare.

The bill now provides that in any plan of consolidation the carrier shall make "a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the employees affected," but you can readily see how uncertain, indefinite, and unsatisfactory that provision is. I find that quite often the different Government administrative agencies interpret acts of Congress in a manner quite different from the intention of the Members of Congress, and no one can predict what construction the carriers and the Commission would give to the very broad language "a fair and equitable arrangement"; their idea of fairness and equity might be quite different from the treatment the Congress would want them to receive. That is why this amendment is necessary to give definite expression to the treatment or "arrangement" the Congress wants the employees to receive.

One of the largest groups of railroad employees, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, has urged us to vote against this bill and one of their principal grounds of objection arises from their fear that these consolidations will result in the discharge of thousands of railroad employees. This amendment will remove the possibility of such action by the carriers.

I am somewhat disturbed about the plan or policy indicated by this bill. No one even claims that this bill would result in cheaper cost of transportation, and I find in it little promise for increased employment among railroad employees. In the ranks of the 10,000,000 unemployed there are thousands of former railroad employees, all in need of work. One of the causes of the distressing financial condition of the farmers of the Nation is the high cost they must pay to get their products to the great consuming centers. Yet here we have a bill to reorganize the entire transportation system of the Nation and with apparently no thought given to our two most urgent problems, unemployment in the cities and bankruptcy on the farms.

Of course, our great railroad systems must be preserved, and I want to see them preserved other than by Government ownership. They are essential to the development of our Nation; they are necessary for our national defense; they are the safest means of transportation in the world. And knowing that my knowledge of transportation problems is quite limited I hesitate to offer any criticism of our experienced railroad executives, but it seems to me that this bill is contrary to practically all of the policies of the present administration and contrary to the modern method of doing business.

This bill seeks to place full control of all of our transportation systems in one agency and to practically abolish the time-honored American system of competition, while the present administration has been active to break down monopoly and to broaden the free competitive system. This bill leans toward reduction in employment, while the present administration is spending billions to provide employment. This bill gives every indication of increasing the cost of transportation, while this administration is fighting day and night to provide means whereby the producer may receive more for his farm commodities.

Every great industry today, except the railroads, have adopted the system of mass production with a low-unit cost. The practice started with the 5- and 10-cent store and those operators have made millions. It is followed today in the automobile industry; they produce millions of cars, with a small profit per car, and pay handsome dividends. It is the modern method of doing business; millions of customers, with a very small profit on each.

There are millions of people ready and anxious to travel by rail. They know it is the safest method of travel. They know they are taking their lives in their hands every time they drive a car on the public highways. And they do not travel by rail simply because the fare is too high and they cannot get the schedules. I firmly believe that if a substantial cut was made in rates, passenger and freight, say cut in half, and additional trains were put in service, say about double the present number, that millions of automobiles would become idle except for pleasure rides, the wide margin between the producer and consumer price would be reduced, and the revenue of the railroads would be increased many times. It would not only be the greatest possible contribution toward business recovery, but would provide employment for every railroad employee waiting for work and thousands of others.

I may be wrong, but it seems to me that in following the course set forth in this bill we are missing one of the greatest opportunities we will ever have to help solve the problem of unemployment and restore prosperity among all classes of our people.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, we must recognize that we are dealing with a serious, difficult problem. It is not a case for passion and it is not a case where voting for the impossible will do anybody any good. No one will be benefited by voting for the impossible in this case. A few years ago there were 1,600,000 employed by the railroads of the United States, while today there are only about 1,000,000. Labor cannot receive compensation on a job unless the employer is able to earn the money with which to pay labor. About 150,000 of the 240,000 miles of railroad in the United States have been on the verge of bankruptcy or in the possession of the courts. There are surplus facilities and there is a surplus operation of railroads. It is inevitable that unless there is a great increase in the volume of traffic a part of those facilities and operations must disappear.

The question then is, What is going to be done for labor? The Members who have spoken before propose that no consolidation shall occur; they refuse to reduce these surplus facilities if men are going to lose jobs. They insist on a course that will further decrease jobs. It is impracticable. We must face the facts.

This bill provides for voluntary consolidation. It is not compulsory. The economic conditions, we thought, did not justify compulsory consolidation but only by consent of those concerned. The railroad unions have an agreement with most of the class I railroads by which they are cared for during a period of 5 years to cover unemployment due to a consolidation. It is estimated that ordinarily those who are discharged on account of consolidations will be taken care of for 5 years either through a pension system that has been established by this agreement or because of the normal release of labor, which will provide places for a part of those who would lose their positions.

About 20 of the 21 brotherhoods are supporting this bill. Unfortunately in the ranks of railroad labor there is one limited group that seems to be against whatever the others propose. The leader of that limited group, I am sorry to say, refuses to face the facts. He is fighting against the interest of labor rather than cooperating with the main groups of labor in the rail industry. However, the bulk of the railway people recognize the true facts and support this bill.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman tell the members of the committee what percentage of railroad labor that one organization represents?

Mr. LEA. I would be pleased if the gentleman would state it, because I do not happen to know.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. About 10 percent.

Mr. LEA. Ten percent clinging for a thing that is absolutely impossible. This is a case where labor must help itself by helping the carriers by whom they are employed.

There are two things I would call to your attention in reference to the treatment of labor that may be released by consolidations. One is a provision that provides that the Commission shall require as a prerequisite to its approval of any proposed transaction under the provisions of this section, a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the employees. It is also provided in connection with the considerations that shall govern the action of the Commission, that in passing upon any proposed transaction under the provisions of this section the Commission shall give weight to the following considerations:

(4) Where appropriate the interests of the carrier employees affected.

By agreement with nearly all the class I railroads, there is a pension system against unemployment for 5 years. In addition, there is the duty placed upon the Commission to see that the employees are fairly treated in case of consolidation which might cause reduction in labor employment. A great reduction in railway labor employment has occurred and will yet follow unless some remedy for the railroads is discovered. The best remedy is to improve the status of the railroads. Put them in the position of being going concerns and then employment will increase.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it not true that, in the condition in which the railroads now are, railroad employment is going down steadily?

Mr. LEA. That is absolutely true.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it not also true that if something is not done and if the status of the railroads is not improved, in many instances, unless there is consolidation, many of the railroads will go out of existence?

Mr. LEA. That is true.

Mr. RAYBURN. In a situation like that, would we not be doing more to protect railroad labor and provide the hope of employing more men if we did not practically prohibit consolidation, which would be the effect of the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. LEA. Absolutely. The greatest help labor can expect will come through improvement in the condition of the railroads so the railroads will be able to employ more labor. Unless that improvement occurs, probably 75,000 or 100,000 miles of railroad will go out of business and the employees will then be out of employment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEA) there were—ayes 96, noes 68.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NORRELL:

On page 210, after line 9, insert the following paragraph:

"(f) The Commission shall require, as a prerequisite to its approval of any consolidation, merger, or acquisition of control under the provisions of this section, (A) that the total capitalization of the properties, consolidated, merged, or acquired shall not exceed the value of the property owned or used by each common carrier included in such consolidation, merger, or acquisition, determined by the Commission (whether or not the carrier is a carrier subject to part I) in the manner specified in section 19a, and (B) that the number of executive officers of any corporation so consolidated, merged, or acquired, or of any new corporation created as a result of such consolidation, merger, or acquisition, shall not exceed such number as in the opinion of the Commission is necessary for the proper management of such corporations or new corporation, and that the salary of any such officer shall not exceed such amount as the Commission finds to be just and reasonable."

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to consume the 5 minutes allotted to me in explaining this amendment. The amendment in brief simply provides that in case of a consolidation of railroads, before the order of consolidation is entered, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall do two things:

First, the Commission shall ascertain the value of the physical properties of the merged or consolidated railroads and shall see to it that the stock must not exceed the actual value of the properties, thereby eliminating the inflated, watered stock the railroads issued a few years ago. This simply provides that the stock of the consolidated railways shall not be in excess of the value of the actual physical properties owned at the time by the merged railroads.

Second, the amendment provides that before the consolidation order shall be entered the Interstate Commerce Commission shall ascertain the necessary number of executive officials the consolidated railroads should have and the reasonable compensation these men should receive, and fix the number of executives and the salary they shall receive. Then that will be the maximum number of such employees the consolidated railroads shall have and the maximum amount of salary the employees shall receive.

In other words, if you want consolidation of railroads, let us put them on a sound basis financially and let us not have the money that the railroads earn consumed by overpaid and oftentimes unnecessary executives.

Mr. Chairman, if you are trying to remedy the evil that exists, here is where you can remedy it. There is pending now in another body of the Congress a bill that will appropriate millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money for the benefit of the railroads. While we are making these loans or gifts, as the case may be, let us see that the railroads operate upon a sound financial basis, taking the inflated or watered stock out, and seeing that their executives are necessary and do not receive more than they should receive. Let us place this all within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to rendering the order of consolidation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas covers two rather distinct grounds.

Paragraph (a) deals with the total capitalization of consolidated roads. It is inconceivable that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which will have control of the subject, would permit an excessive capitalization. Ordinarily, we would expect that the consolidated company would not have a greater capitalization than is represented by the physical value of the property. It is wholly unnecessary to write in language of this kind, which would limit the power of the Commission in the premises. It might well be that the Commission would require the total capitalization to be less than the value of the property. A provision of this kind might be construed to mean that the Commission could not make the capitalization less than the value.

There is a great deal of conflict and difference of opinion about what constitutes the value of railroad property. You will remember that in the great leading case of Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S. 466), decided in 1898, the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, pointed out some of the different elements of value which exist in railroad property and enumerated the matters which any court or commission must take into consideration. The opinion states:

> We hold, however, that the basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public. And, in order to ascertain that value, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses, are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. We do not say that there may not be other matters to be regarded in estimating the value of the property.

This famous declaration has been the standard which the courts and the Commission have tried to follow through all the years. It is easy to conceive of innumerable disputes which would arise if there is written into the law the positive enactment that the capitalization shall not exceed the value of the property.

It will be remembered also that section 19a to which the Norrell amendment refers is a value for rate-making purposes. This is not necessarily the same as a value for capitalization purposes. It may be less or it may be more. The quotation above from Smyth against Ames refers to a value for rate-making purposes. It is obvious, therefore, that if we inject this element into the matter of consolidations, we have endless disputes before us as to what all these elements of value really mean.

The Interstate Commerce Commission once undertook to fix the value for rate-making purposes on the basis of prudent investment. The Supreme Court of the United States upset this theory in a well-considered case, commonly known as the O'Fallon case and the subject has been one which has given us the greatest difficulty ever since.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Congress, in 1933, repealed the recapture clause, partly for the reason that the Interstate Commerce Commission admitted that it had so much difficulty in finding value that the statute led to innumerable disputes and endless litigation. The same result might be expected if this amendment is written in.

The bill, as the committee reports it, contains standards which seem to be entirely sufficient. It is provided, lines 2 to 6 on page 210, that no consolidation or merger shall be approved which will result in an increase of total fixed charges, except upon a specific finding by the Commission. It is further provided, in subsection (c) on page 209, that the consolidation must conform to standards which will insure adequate transportation service, which will take in other railroads necessary to a particular section of the country, which will fix the amount of total fixed charges and which will protect the interests of the employees. In subsection (b), beginning on page 207, there are very adequate standards, all of which look to the protection of the public interest.

The effect of adopting the first part of the Norrell amendment will be to cause confusion and dispute, without accomplishing anything of substantial good.

The second part of the Norrell amendment, which he includes under (b), is an extremely objectionable provision, to which employees should be the first to object. It has always been the contention of railroad employees that the Government should not have the power to fix the number of employees, nor the wages of these employees. If it is sound, and we think it is, that the Government should keep out of this field so far as organized employees are concerned, by the same token the Government should not enter the field with reference to executive officers, so-called.

We think it is a sound contention that the Government should not hamper unduly the freedom of the railroads to manage their own affairs. There are certain matters which are in the public interest; there are others which should be left to managerial discretion. If the Interstate Commerce Commission is put in control of the number of officers and the salaries of officers, certainly it should follow that the Commission should be put in control of the number of employees and the wages of employees. To adopt such a provision would be to divest the management of the last shred of managerial control.

The salaries of railroad officers are not excessive, in comparison with persons performing no more responsible duties for other industries. Generally speaking, the maximum salary of any railroad officer is $60,000 a year. There are only one or two exceptions to this rule. If this amount is compared with the salaries of the officers of great industrial corporations and with those who produce moving pictures, it would seem that the salaries of railroad officers are modest indeed.

However that may be, no private business can hope to succeed if the Government undertakes to dictate the number of the officers and their compensation. The railroads need the services of young men to whom the business is attractive. If, however, the opportunity to advance and to be compensated is limited by the fiat of a Government agency, the result will be that the best young men will be drawn away from the railroad business and into more attractive fields. Whether a particular salary is or is not excessive may be a matter of opinion, but it is clear that if the railroad business is to prosper and advance and serve the public interest it must be sufficiently attractive to secure and retain the allegiance of a large circle of earnest and ambitious young men.

I trust that the Committee will vote down the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment, and I have two or three reasons for that, and the first one is this: Very shortly the Congress of the United States is going to be called upon to pass on a measure which will have for its purpose the lending of a considerable amount of money to the railroads.

If we are going to loan money or buy equipment and lease that equipment, whichever way we do about these consolidations, we ought to have something to say about the top-flight salaries they are going to pay, and the Commission ought to be instructed definitely to keep those salaries within reasonable limits.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, during the last 2 hours we have witnessed a remarkable exhibition on the part of some Members of this Committee. Some gentlemen, who, heretofore never appeared to be such friends of the railroads or of the railroad men, have suddenly become transformed into railroad experts and are attempting to solve the problems of the railroads and the railroad men in a most remarkable way.

When the rate question was under consideration a few moments ago, I noticed that some of the gentlemen most active in attempting to solve the railroad problem are the advocates of southern preferential rates, the strongest advocates of T. V. A., and the water carriers, all the cutthroat competitors of the railroads. These "friends" of the railroads and the railroad men are trying to write into this bill a new proposal for passenger rates. It may be interesting to these recently developed passenger-rate experts, that it usually requires 20 or 30 years for the ordinary mortal to grasp the intricate problems of rates. Yet, some of the gentlemen become qualified overnight. All this causes me to suspect that some gentlemen are not so much interested in solving these problems in the interest of a sound transportation system in this country, but in the interest of some of the many cutthroat competitors of the railroads which are intent upon destroying the railroads and destroying the jobs of railroad men.

A few moments ago this body adopted an amendment which will have the effect of nullifying the section concerning railroad consolidations. When that was done it was not done in the interest of railroad labor, as it was pretended. That amendment will penalize railroad labor. It will do great injury to railroad labor. It will cost many railroaders their jobs. And I will tell you why.

That amendment will force the railroads to abandon certain lines, and abandonment means the loss of jobs. It causes me to wonder whether some of these gentlemen are speaking as the friends of railroad labor today, or whether they are really the enemies of railroad labor. Behind this amendment I can see all the enemies of railroad labor functioning. The waterway advocates today have joined forces with those who support the T. V. A. and those who always have opposed the railroads. They are emasculating this bill; they are tearing it to pieces. When this bill is perfected in this committee and we are called upon to vote on the final passage, we will find out whether these gentlemen are the friends of railroad labor. We will find those who are offering these emasculating amendments under the guise of perfecting the bill, will vote against it, because they are not in favor of the railroads or of railroad labor.

Therefore, I say quit your demagoguing and stand up and vote for the things that will support the railroad men of this country. The railroad men are for this bill as it came from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. There are 21 labor organizations in this country, and 20 of those organizations support this legislation as it was reported. I say that 20 great labor organizations cannot be wrong. One organization is against the bill, but the vast and overwhelming majority of the laboring men are for it.

I know whereof I speak. I come from a railroad community. There are 27,000 honest-to-goodness railroad men in that community. They all support this legislation. Thousands of other citizens in my congressional district are indirectly dependent upon the railroads and they are for this legislation which is designed to place all forms of transportation on a substantial equality. So, I say again, quit demagoguing and support the railroad men and be fair in your consideration of this measure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NORRELL) there were ayes 39 and noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 208, line 15, after the word "it", strike out the word "shall" and insert "is authorized to."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment, which I would like to have read also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 209, line 19, after the word "of", strike out the word "other" and insert "weak."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the two amendments will be considered as one. The gentleman from Montana is recognized.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, in just what way are those two amendments related?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They are really not related, but I thought we could save time by discussing them both at the same time. They are short amendments.

Mr. MAPES. But they are so different that they ought not be voted on together.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Very well. If the gentleman objects, I will withdraw the second amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman withdraws the second amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will ask for consideration of the second amendment immediately following consideration of the first one.

Mr. MAPES. That is all right as far as I am concerned.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 208, line 15, after the word "it", strike out the word "shall" and insert "is authorized to."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana is recognized.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, the language I wish to change follows the language which I will read to you on page 208:

If the Commission finds that, subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control will be consistent with the public interest, it shall, or it is authorized.

Now, the way the bill reads it is mandatory upon the Commission to make the merger or lease of the property. I want the bill to read as it read when it came from the Senate, which was to the effect that if the Commission found that it would be in the public interest it may, instead of shall, consolidate. There might be something latent that would not appear as far as the public interest is concerned, such as causing unemployment, that should give the Commission the power to use its discretion as to whether or not it should compel the merger of the railroads. That is the reason why I want the original language restored. I want to say this to you members of the committee, and this is no reflection on the members of the committee of the House, that this bill was originally drafted by Senator WHEELER, of Montana, than whom there is no more conversant legislator in either branch of this Congress on transportation problems. He has been studying the railroad problem ever since he has been in Congress and is thoroughly familiar with its every angle.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to my friend. I could not help yielding to the gentleman.

Mr. CROSSER. You say that nothwithstanding the fact that the Commission finds it is in the public interest, they should not be required to put the matter into effect?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. If it is in the public interest, it is in the interest of the employees just as well, because they are a part of the public.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The trouble is it might be made to appear in the public interest through false propaganda. Bankers who made the loan may have had something to do with the propaganda.

Mr. CROSSER. That is not the public. The bankers are not the public. The public is all the people.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will say this, that usually the one who holds the purse-strings controls the situation.

Mr. CROSSER. But that would not be in the public interest.

Mr. O'CONNOR. To a certain extent it might appear to be. What I want to do is to give this Commission the power of a court, to make a finding, and after it has made a finding to the effect that it is in the public interest, I want to give it discretion as to whether or not the merger shall take effect.

Mr. CROSSER. What is the use of their finding it in the public interest if they cannot say the merger shall take place? That is simply saying, "In our judgment, this should be done."

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will say the word "may" has been written into the law for years. Why do we change that now?

Why do we make it mandatory upon the Commission to do this work now? Why not still leave it discretionary if we have faith in our Commission? The Commission is a quasi-judicial body that makes findings through rendered judgments.

Mr. CROSSER. But we are trying to make the law more intelligent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The law has always been intelligent. The difficulty has been that the Commission did not have the power. I think the committee should accept this amendment. I think it should accept the amendment and leave the discretion with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CROSSER. Does not the gentleman realize that inserting the language which he suggests here would give the Commission very questionable constitutional authority?

Mr. O'CONNOR. We are giving the Interstate Commerce Commission discretion and authority over transportation. That is what we are doing by this bill.

Mr. CROSSER. We say if they find this is in the public interest, the interest of the people of the United States.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then you are directing them to do something just as you would direct the courts.

Mr. CROSSER. If a thing is for the welfare of the people, in the public interest, should it not be done?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that this is a quasi-judicial body. You must give it some discretion.

Mr. CROSSER. If it is right, then that is what they declare.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman does not get my point. My point is this: Generally it may be to the apparent interest of the country that this merger should take place, but on account of local conditions, on account of unemployment, on account of many employees who have invested their entire savings in a home nearby their work—homes which would be rendered valueless—the Commission should not do it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 209, line 19, after the word "of", strike out the word 'other' and insert the word "weak."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take the full 5 minutes. I shall merely call attention to the fact that when this bill came from the Senate, written by a man who knew how to write railroad legislation, it included the word "weak." So that you will understand I will read subsection (c):

(c) In passing upon any proposed transaction under the provisions of this section, the Commission shall give weight to the following considerations, among others: (1) The effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; (2) where appropriate, the effect upon the public interest of the inclusion, or failure to include, other railroads in the territory involved in the proposed transaction.

I want to take out the word "other" and insert in lieu thereof the word "weak," which was written into the bill in the Senate. It was in the bill as it came to the House and that is the word that should be used, because under the bill now, two big, powerful railroads could merge. Why should you want to merge two roads like the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific? You might very well merge the Northern Pacific or the Great Northern with some railroad that could not stand on its own feet, some railroad that was weak and financially insecure, but why should you merge great big railroads? Yet this bill would give just that authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that is one thing we should not do.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Can the gentleman tell us what a weak railroad is in contemplation of law?

Mr. O'CONNOR. A weak railroad has been interpreted, I may say for the information of the gentleman from Indiana, a weak railroad has been interpreted as being a railroad that could not stand financially on its own feet, that has or is forced to go into receivership or lacking in power to perform properly. That is what a weak railroad means.

Mr. HALLECK. Where has that interpretation been made?

Mr. O'CONNOR. By the courts. I cannot cite the gentleman the decisions, but it is a general term known to and used by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was written into the bill when the bill came to the House. I ask the membership of this Committee not to pass a bill that would permit the consolidation of big powerful railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission, permit only the consolidation of railroads in the event that one of the roads is a weak railroad.

Mr. CROSSER. Is not a weak railroad another railroad?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is another railroad but the difference is that if a railroad is going out of business the employees lose their jobs anyhow, but if a big railroad takes over a weak railroad the employees stay on. That is just the difference, and to save those jobs is the thing I am trying to do.

Mr. CROSSER. Is not a weak railroad another railroad?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. Would not a weak railroad be included within this language, then? Of course it would.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Wait a minute. Other railroads includes strong as well as weak, but "weak" does not include "strong." There is a difference.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this matter was considered very carefully by the committee, and I am frank to say we had a lot of difficulty in trying to determine between ourselves just what would be a weak railroad in contemplation of the suggested language. I do not care to minimize the effectiveness or the ability of any member of any other body. There are undoubtedly able men over there. They have tried to draft a bill that met their ideas as to what this legislation should be. We have done the same thing, and if finally there are differences we can approach the solution of those differences when we get to conference. But I submit that this is not a change that should be written into this bill.

Two strong railroads capable of carrying on obviously would not want to consolidate in the first instance and would not apply for consolidation to begin with.

Not having particular regard to this amendment, but on another matter I want to say a few words. In general debate last week I referred to a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the American Farm Bureau in support of this legislation.

Subsequently the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] referred to that statement of mine and to the position of the Farm Bureau as expressed therein. He stated to the House that Mr. O'Neill, president of the Farm Bureau, had gone fishing with Mr. Pelley, president of the American Association of Railroads, and sought to draw the inference that that might have had something to do with Mr. O'Neill's attitude with respect to this legislation.

To begin with, the statement from which I quoted was from the executive committee of the Farm Bureau and not from Mr. O'Neill. In fairness to the gentleman from New York, and he is a fine, upstanding gentleman, he took the floor this morning to suggest to the membership that he had been in communication with Mr. Pelley, and Mr. Pelley said to him that no such occurrence ever took place. He then withdrew his statement.

Since that time I have been informed that Mr. O'Neill emphatically denies the allegation of the gentleman from New York and says that nothing of the kind ever took place. I believe that Mr. O'Neill makes a true statement in that regard. In order that the record may be kept straight, I wanted to make this statement to the Committee.

I have an idea that the leaders of Farm Bureau considered this whole matter very carefully. The men on the executive committee are able men. They represent all sections of this country. They represent a great body of our agricultural people. I do not believe they would have made the recommendation that they made if they had not thought this matter over very carefully and had not reached the conclusion that the passage of this bill substantially in the form it is now would be in the public interest not alone of the farmers and the people they represent, but of the people generally all over the country.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I had a number of things I intended to say in respect to this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR], which seeks to strike out merely the word "other" and put in the word "weak" which would leave entirely to whatever court or administrative body had jurisdiction, presumably the Interstate Commerce Commission, the job of determining what is a weak railroad. Therefore, no matter what expediency should arise, unless the railroad, under the determination of whatever body was holding forth, is considered a weak railroad, it could not be considered. One body might hold one way one week and another some other way next week. It is like a man's foot. Every man measured a foot by his own, up until the time 12 inches was reached, and became established as 1 foot.

That has not been done by or under this legislation. There is no use to go on with a lot of argument. There once was a man who went into a restaurant and ordered a cup of coffee, which was overturned. The waitress came up and said, "Look, my friend, you have turned your cup of coffee over." He said, "No; I did not. It was just so weak it fell over."

I think we will leave the amendment to its own end.

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEA. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact this provides what the Commission shall consider in determining whether or not it will take in any roads for consolidation.

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. LEA. If we confine consideration of the Commission to only weak roads, that may force another road to be left out that ought to be included. Suppose it became necessary to sidewalk a little road. A little road is not necessarily a weak road because it is small. It may be considered that it should be taken in. If this section is changed, as suggested, it would prevent the Commission from having the power to take care of that small road that ought to be included in the consolidation.

Mr. PATRICK. And it might result in the Commission regarding the road as weak, when it should not be so regarded, not having any measure by which to define the word "weak." It might result in a decision that a railroad was weak, which was not in the real or practical sense weak at all and might defeat the very purpose of this legislation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman, of course, knows that if a railroad or any other institution needs financial assistance, that is prima facie evidence, in fact it is conclusive evidence, that it is weak. That is the meaning of the word "weak" as proposed to put in the bill.

Mr. PATRICK. That is what the gentleman says.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is what everybody else says.

Mr. PATRICK. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Outside of you. Everybody but you says so.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman has nothing on earth to stand behind with that statement. There is nothing with which to measure a construction of "weak."

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURDICK: Page 210, line 9, after the last word, strike out the period, add a semicolon and the following: "Any finding or order made or issued under this section may be reviewed by the circuit court of appeals for any judicial circuit in which an interested party may reside, if a petition for such review is filed within 3 months after the date such order is issued. The judgment of any such court shall be final except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, in the manner provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 347). The review by such Court shall be limited to questions of law, and the findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. Upon such review, such Court shall have power to affirm or, if the order is not in accordance with law, to modify or to reverse the order, with or without remanding the case for a rehearing as justice may require. Pending the final determination of any such court review no liability for penalties under this part shall be incurred."

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I am not offering this amendment to incumber the bill. Does the gentleman want to make his point of order now?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; I was going to let the gentleman proceed.

Mr. BURDICK. If the gentleman thinks I should not proceed, make the point of order now and it will save me 5 minutes of effort.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order being passed on at this time?

Mr. HINSHAW. Not at this time, Mr. Chairman; I wanted to reserve the point of order until the end of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. BURDICK. I wish to say to the gentlemen of this House that I am very anxious to vote for this legislation and am offering this amendment because I believe the measure should be amended. After all, our liberties and our properties finally come into some court of law. While we find judges that are corrupt, I think it is to the credit of the American people that we are handling those judges as they should be handled.

In this bill on the question of mergers you have left with the Commission the absolute power of a court of review. Suppose in the case of a merger of the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern Railroads, which run through my section of the country, some interested stockholder or other interested party objected to the consolidation. The final and absolute control of that entire merger under this bill would be left with the Interstate Commerce Commission. In another section of this bill you provide for the building of bridges across navigable streams. With respect to awards as to payments to be made by the Government and by the railroads you provide the same kind of appeal in the case of the bridges that I recommend now in my amendment to this section of the bill.

I do not believe there is anyone here, whether you are interested in those who work for the railroads or those who own the railroads, who can find any possible objection to having the final power of determination of a question as great as a merger left in the courts of this country. I believe this Congress would be making a great mistake to give the power to this quasi-judicial body, this autocratic body, to determine a great question of law, and maybe a great constitutional question as well.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman, in his amendment, confines the appeal to questions of law and leaves the questions of fact to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman believe that such an appeal would be in no way effective; that is, the litigant complaining should have a right to appeal on both questions of fact and questions of law?

Mr. BURDICK. I cannot imagine that the Interstate Commerce Commission in making findings would ever make findings at all unless they found the facts in the case; but in making the application of the law that we are writing here today to those facts, they might make mistakes.

Mr. CULKIN. May I say that the gentleman is too sanguine on that.

Mr. BURDICK. I do not know what the gentleman means by "sanguine," but I accept the compliment.

I hope no one will object to this provision in the amendment. I believe it is a good one.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEA. A provision granting the right of review of the Interstate Commerce Commission's orders is in the Interstate Commerce Act, and this provision would apply to a case of this kind, so I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman is not necessary in order to give this right of review. That right exists under the general law.

Mr. BURDICK. Is the chairman of the committee prepared to state now that under the bill as you have written it the power of appeal from an order on a merger still remains with some interested party?

Mr. LEA. I am advised by the attorney here that that is true. In case that is not true, the chairman would be perfectly willing to return to this section in order that the gentleman's amendment might be considered. As far as I am concerned, I believe the right of court review should exist.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, with that explanation I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPEAL OF POWER TO FIX CERTAIN THROUGH ROUTES AND JOINT RATES

SEC. 9. Paragraph (13) of section 6 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended—

(1) by repealing subparagraph (b);

(2) by striking out "(c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(b)"; and

(3) by striking out "(d)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(c)."

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JONES of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from committees:

JULY 24, 1939.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the District of Columbia Committee, the Mines and Mining Committee, the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee, and the Pensions Committee.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM D. BYRON, M. C.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes at the conclusion of the business today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address delivered by the Postmaster General in New Haven, Conn., last Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a memorandum prepared by the United States Conference of Mayors on the subject of work relief and the future.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on three subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address recently delivered by me at the dedication of a post office at Everett, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement by the president of the American Good Government Society.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, by including a list of professors and instructors in Government office, as printed in the Washington Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of certain statements made in the Senate concerning my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, the same consisting of two and a half pages. I have an estimate from the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some brief extracts from Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's radio attack on the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a short excerpt from the New York Herald Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], is recognized for 5 minutes.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE HATCH BILL

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this morning's News has an editorial which I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point. This editorial pays me the compliment of saying that I may have heard of the late Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE RIGHT TO PLAY POLITICS

Congressman SAM HOBBS, of Alabama, was quite oratorical in opposing the Hatch bill. He based his opposition on high constitutional grounds. To restrict the political activities of Federal officeholders, he said, was to infringe upon their liberties.

We wonder if the Honorable Mr. HOBBS ever heard of the case of McAuliffe v. New Bedford, decided 47 years ago.

McAuliffe was a policeman in New Bedford, Mass. He was fired for violating the rule that "no member of the department shall be allowed to solicit money or any aid, on any pretense, for any political purpose whatever." McAuliffe took the case to the court on the ground that the rule violated his right of free speech.

The issue was decided by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, January 6, 1892, in this language:

"The petitioner may have a constitutional right to talk politics but he has no constitutional right to be a policeman. The city may impose any reasonable condition upon holding office within its control. This regulation is a reasonable condition."

The man who wrote that decision was the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. Mr. HOBBS may have heard of him.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, anyone would have great temerity to attempt to discuss the constitutionality of the Hatch bill without being perfectly familiar with the authorities dealing with that question. I am perfectly familiar, and was at the time I made my argument, with one of the leading cases on a similiar subject in the field of construction of State statutes, to wit, McAuliffe v. New Bedford, 155 Mass. 216.

The McAuliffe case is perfectly good law in its own field, but has little application to the question of the constitutionality of a somewhat analogous inhibition when written in a Federal statute. The sovereignty of a State is unlimited except by whatever of its power it granted to the Federal Government in the Constitution of the United States. The Federal Government has no power except that delegated by the States. None of the police powers were delegated. McAuliffe was a policeman who had taken office under a law of Massachusetts which provided that his tenure of office should be:

During good behavior and until removed by the mayor * * * for cause deemed by him sufficient after due hearing.

Another regulation prevented policemen from soliciting funds for political purposes. The mayor, upon due hearing, after complaint made against Police Officer MacAuliffe, held that the violation of this antisolicitation regulation was good cause for his removal from office. Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, as a Justice of the court of last resort in Massachusetts, held that under those circumstances MacAuliffe was not entitled to reinstatement on mandamus. So it is perfectly apparent that the MacAuliffe case is not an authority in point as to the Hatch bill.

Now, there is an authority in point as to the Hatch bill, and that is Ex parte Curtis, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 106 United States at page 371, and I am going to ask unanimous consent to put that decision in full in the RECORD at this point in conjunction with my remarks, for it is very illuminating.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The decision referred to is as follows:

EX PARTE CURTIS

The sixth section of the act of August 15, 1876, chapter 287, prohibiting, under penalties therein mentioned, certain officers of the United States from requesting, giving to, or receiving from any other officer money or property or other thing of value for political purposes, is not unconstitutional

Petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

The sixth section of the act of August 15, 1876, chapter 287, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government," provides "that all executive officers or employees of the United States not appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, are prohibited from requesting, giving to, or receiving from, any other officer or employee of the Government, any money or property or other thing of value for political purposes; and any such officer or employee who shall offend against the provisions of this section, shall be at once discharged from the service of the United States; and he shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $500."

Curtis, the petitioner, an employee of the United States, was indicted in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, and convicted under this act for receiving money for political purposes from other employees of the Government. Upon his conviction he was sentenced to pay a fine, and stand committed until payment was made. Under this sentence he was taken into custody by the marshal, and on his application a writ of habeas corpus was issued by one of the justices of this court in vacation, returnable here at the present term, to inquire into the validity of his detention. The important question presented on the return to the writ so issued is whether the act under which the conviction was had is constitutional.

The case was argued by Mr. Edwin B. Smith in favor of the petition, and by the Solicitor General in opposition thereto.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite, after stating the case, delivered the opinion of the court.

The act is not one to prohibit all contributions of money or property by the designated officers and employees of the United States for political purposes. Neither does it prohibit them altogether from receiving or soliciting money or property for such purposes. It simply forbids their receiving from or giving to each other. Beyond this no restrictions are placed on any of their political privileges.

That the Government of the United States is one of delegated powers only, and that its authority is defined and limited by the Constitution, are no longer open questions; but express authority is given Congress by the Constitution to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into effect the powers that are delegated (art. I, sec. 8). Within the legitimate scope of this grant Congress is permitted to determine for itself what is necessary and what is proper.

The act now in question is one regulating in some particulars the conduct of certain officers and employees of the United States. It rests on the same principle as that originally passed in 1789 at the first session of the First Congress, which makes it unlawful for certain officers of the Treasury Department to engage in the business of trade or commerce, or to own a sea vessel, or to purchase public lands or other public property, or to be concerned in the purchase or disposal of the public securities of a State or of the United States (Rev. Stat., sec. 243); and that passed in 1791, which makes it an offense for a clerk in the same department to carry on trade or business in the funds or debts of the States or of the United States, or in any kind of public property (id., sec. 244); and that passed in 1812, which makes it unlawful for a judge appointed under the authority of the United States to exercise the profession of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law (id., sec. 713); and that passed in 1853, which prohibits every officer of the United States or person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under or in connection with any executive department of the Government of the United States, or under the Senate or House of Representatives, from acting as an agent or attorney for the prosecution of any claim against the United States (id., sec. 5498); and that passed in 1863, prohibiting Members of Congress from practicing in the Court of Claims (id., sec. 1058); and that passed in 1867, punishing by dismissal from service an officer or employee of the Government who requires or requests any workingman in a navy yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes (id., sec. 1546); and that passed in 1868, prohibiting Members of Congress from being interested in contracts with the United States (id., sec. 3739); and another, passed in 1870, which provides that no officer, clerk, or employee in the Government of the United States shall solicit contributions from other officers, clerks, or employees for a gift to those in a superior official position, and that no officials or clerical superiors shall receive any gift or present as a contribution to them from persons in Government employ getting a less salary than themselves, and that no officer or clerk shall make a donation as a gift or present to any official superior (id., sec. 1784). Many others of a kindred character might be referred to, but these are enough to show what has been the practice in the legislative department of the Government from its organization, and, so far as we know, this is the first time the constitutionality of such legislation has ever been presented for judicial determination.

The evident purpose of Congress in all this class of enactments has been to promote efficiency and integrity in the discharge of official duties, and to maintain proper discipline in the public service. Clearly such a purpose is within the just scope of legislative power, and it is not easy to see why the act now under consideration does not come fairly within the legitimate means to such an end. It is true, as is claimed by the counsel for the petitioner, political assessments upon officeholders are not prohibited. The managers of political campaigns, not in the employ of the United States, are just as free now to call on those in office for money to be used for political purposes as ever they were, and those in office can contribute as liberally as they please, provided their payments are not made to any of the prohibited officers or employees. What we are now considering is not whether Congress has gone as far as it may, but whether that which has been done is within the constitutional limits upon its legislative discretion.

A feeling of independence under the law conduces to faithful public service, and nothing tends more to take away this feeling than a dread of dismissal. If contributions from those in public employment may be solicited by others in official authority, it is easy to see that what begins as a request may end as a demand, and that a failure to meet the demand may be treated by those having the power of removal as a breach of some supposed duty, growing out of the political relations of the parties. Contributions secured under such circumstances will quite as likely be made to avoid the consequences of the personal displeasure of a superior, as to promote the political views of the contributor—to avoid a discharge from service, not to exercise a political privilege. The law contemplates no restrictions upon either giving or receiving, except so far as may be necessary to protect, in some degree, those in the public service against exactions through fear of personal loss. This purpose of the restriction, and the principle on which it rests, are most distinctly manifested in section 1546, supra, the reenactment in the Revised Statutes of section 3 of the act of June 30, 1868, chapter 172, which subjected an officer or employee of the Government to dismissal if he required or requested a working man in a navy yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, and prohibited the removal or discharge of a working man for his political opinions; and in section 1784, the reenactment of the act of February 1, 1870, chapter 63, "to protect officials in public employ," by providing for the summary discharge of those who make or solicit contributions for presents to superior officers. No one can for a moment doubt that in both these statutes the object was to protect the classes of officials and employees provided for from being compelled to make contributions for such purposes through fear of dismissal if they refused. It is true that dismissal from service is the only penalty imposed, but this penalty is given for doing what is made a wrongful act. If it is constitutional to prohibit the act, the kind or degree of punishment to be inflicted for disregarding the prohibition is clearly within the discretion of Congress, provided it be not cruel or unusual.

If there were no other reasons for legislation of this character than such as relates to the protection of those in the public service against unjust exactions, its constitutionality would, in our opinion, be clear; but there are others, to our minds, equally good. If persons in public employ may be called on by those in authority to contribute from their personal income to the expenses of political campaigns, and a refusal may lead to putting good men out of the service, liberal payments may be made the ground for keeping poor ones in. So, too, if a part of the compensation received for public services must be contributed for political purposes, it is easy to see that an increase of compensation may be required to provide the means to make the contribution, and that in this way the Government itself may be made to furnish indirectly the money to defray the expenses of keeping the political party in power that happens to have for the time being the control of the public patronage. Political parties must almost necessarily exist under a republican form of government; and when public employment depends to any considerable extent on party success, those in office will naturally be desirous of keeping the party to which they belong in power. The statute we are now considering does not interfere with this. The apparent end of Congress will be accomplished if it prevents those in power from requiring help for such purposes as a condition to continued employment.

We deem it unnecessary to pursue the subject further. In our opinion the statute under which the petitioner was convicted is constitutional. The other objections which have been urged to the detention cannot be considered in this form of proceeding. Our inquiries in this class of cases are limited to such objections as relate to the authority of the court to render the judgment by which the prisoner is held. We have no general power to review the judgments of the inferior courts of the United States in criminal cases, by the use of the writ of habeas corpus or otherwise. Our jurisdiction is limited to the single question of the power of the court to commit the prisoner for the act of which he has been convicted (Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163; Ex parte Rowland, 104 U. S. 604).

The commitment in this case was lawful, and the petitioner is, consequently,

Remanded to the custody of the marshal for the southern district of New York.

Mr. Justice Bradley dissenting.

I cannot concur in the opinion of the court in this case. The law under which the petitioner is imprisoned makes it a penal offense for any executive officer or employee of the United States, not appointed by advice of the Senate [an unimportant distinction, so far as the power to make the law is concerned], to request, give to, or receive from any other officer or employee of the Government any money, or property, or other thing of value, for political purposes; thus, in effect, making it a condition of accepting any employment under the Government that a man shall not, even voluntarily and of his own free will, contribute in any way through or by the hands of any other employee of the Government to the political cause which he desires to aid and promote. I do not believe that Congress has any right to impose such a condition upon any citizen of the United States. The offices of the Government do not belong to the legislative department to dispose of on any conditions it may choose to impose. The legislature creates most of the offices, it is true, and provides compensation for the discharge of their duties, but that is its duty to do, in order to establish a complete organization of the functions of government. When established, the offices are, or ought to be, open to all. They belong to the United States and not to Congress, and every citizen having the proper qualifications has the right to accept office and to be a candidate therefor. This is a fundamental right of which the legislature cannot deprive the citizen nor clog its exercise with conditions that are repugnant to his other fundamental rights. Such a condition I regard that imposed by the law in question to be. It prevents the citizen from cooperating with other citizens of his own choice in the promotion of his political views. To take an interest in public affairs and to further and promote those principles which are believed to be vital or important to the general welfare, is every citizen's duty. It is a just complaint that so many good men abstain from taking such an interest. Amongst the necessary and proper means for promoting political views, or any other views, are association and contribution of money for that purpose, both to aid discussion and to disseminate information and sound doctrine. To deny to a man the privilege of associating and making joint contributions with such other citizens as he may choose, is an unjust restraint of his right to propagate and promote his views on public affairs. The freedom of speech and of the press, and that of assembling together to consult upon and discuss matters of public interest, and to join in petitioning for a redress of grievances, are expressly secured by the Constitution. The spirit of this clause covers and embraces the right of every citizen to engage in such discussions, and to promote the views of himself and his associates freely, without being trammelled by inconvenient restrictions. Such restrictions, in my judgment, are imposed by the law in question. Every person accepting any, the most insignificant, employment under the Government must withdraw himself from all societies and associations having for object the promotion of political information or opinions. For if one officer may continue his connection, others may do the same, and thus it can hardly fail to happen that some of them will give and some receive funds mutually contributed for the purposes of the association. Congress might just as well, so far as the power is concerned, impose, as a condition of taking any employment under the Government, entire silence on political subjects, and a prohibition of all conversation thereon between Government employees. Nay, it might as well prohibit the discussion of religious questions, or the mutual contribution of funds for missionary or other religious purposes. In former times, when the slavery question was agitated, this would have been a very convenient law to repress all discussion of the subject on either side of Mason and Dixon's line. At the present time any efficient connection with an association in favor of a prohibitory liquor law, or of a protective tariff, or of greenback currency, or even for the repression of political assessments, would render any Government official obnoxious to the penalties of the law under consideration. For all these questions have become political in their character, and any contributions in aid of the cause would be contributions for political purposes. The whole thing seems to me absurd. Neither men's mouths nor their purses can be constitutionally tied up in that way. The truth is, that public opinion is oftentimes like a pendulum, swinging backward and forward to extreme lengths. We are not unfrequently in danger of becoming purists, instead of wise reformers, in particular directions, and hastily pass inconsiderate laws which overreach the mark they are aimed at, or conflict with rights and privileges that a sober mind would regard as indisputable. It seems to me that the present law, taken in all its breadth, is one of this kind.

The legislature may, undoubtedly, pass laws excluding from particular offices those who are engaged in pursuits incompatible with the faithful discharge of the duties of such offices. That is quite another thing.

The legislature may make laws ever so stringent to prevent the corrupt use of money in elections, or in political matters generally, or to prevent what are called political assessments on Government employees, or any other exercise of undue influence over them by Government officials or others. That would be all right. That would clearly be within the province of legislation.

It is urged that the law in question is intended, so far as it goes, to effect this very thing. Probably it is. But the end does not always sanctify the means. What I contend is, that in adopting this particular mode of restraining an acknowledged evil, Congress has overstepped its legitimate powers, and interfered with the substantial rights of the citizen. It is not lawful to do evil that good may come. There are plenty of ways in which wrong may be suppressed without resorting to wrongful measures to do it. No doubt it would often greatly tend to prevent the spread of a contagious and deadly epidemic, if those first taken should be immediately sacrificed to the public good. But such a mode of preventing the evil would hardly be regarded as legitimate in a Christian country.

I have no wish to discuss the subject at length, but simply to express the general grounds on which I think the legislation in question is ultra vires. Though as much opposed as anyone to the evil sought to be remedied, I do not think the mode adopted is a legitimate or constitutional one, because it interferes too much with the freedom of the citizen in the pursuit of lawful and proper ends. If similar laws have been passed before, that does not make it right. The question is, whether the present law, with its sweeping provisions, is within the just powers of Congress. As I do not think it is, I dissent from the opinion of the majority of the court.

Mr. HOBBS. And there has never been a departure from the Curtis case. I verified that before my talk to the House the other night, fully expecting the proponents of the Hatch bill to cite some authority in support of their contentions as to its constitutionality; but when they cited none, I sent back to the Library the three books I had here in order to answer them; and, incidentally, one of the cases upon which I relied and had here was that of McAuliffe against New Bedford.

So it is, Mr. Speaker, that the newspapers continue to have their fun and wax sarcastic; but I wish to submit to this intelligent audience, now that the fever of battle has died down and pulse beats have become normal, that it is an absurd proposition that we can by mere congressional enactment deprive American citizens of their personal liberties guaranteed by the Constitution.

Section 9 of the Hatch bill inhibits political activity—no matter how innocent—by certain Federal employees completely and absolutely; not merely while "on their jobs" but in "off hours" as well; not only while in Government buildings but also when at home.

Read the Curtis case. Read it carefully and ponder its reasoning. Note the ground upon which it bases its decision. See what it says about the rights of officials to be active in political campaigns.

It seems to me that a study of this case will convince any man that the prohibition against taking any active part in political management or political campaigns, in section 9 of the Hatch bill, as passed, is unconstitutional.

There are eight sections of the Hatch bill which, in my judgment, are constitutional and which interdict every abuse of freedom of speech or freedom of action.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. MUNDT. I do not ask the question in a form of heckling. I realize the gentleman is a student of constitutional law and is very sincere in his belief. Also I realize that many of us who supported the Hatch bill are equally sincere. I wish the gentleman would explain whether, in his opinion, the curtailing features of the Civil Service Act upon the political activities of civil-service employees are not somewhat analogous to those we placed on their appointees under the Hatch bill, and whether, if one bill is unconstitutional, then must not all be unconstitutional?

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman for his question because I recognize his sincerity. I attempted to clear up that point in my argument Thursday night, but I shall try again gladly. The distinction is indicated in the Curtis case, in which there are, I think, six other instances aside from the civil service, where Congress has enacted perfectly valid regulations prohibiting pernicious conduct on the part of certain employees, but in each case the prohibited conduct was pernicious. For instance, the solicitation of funds for political purposes by one employee from another. But here, in the Hatch bill, after specifically and properly prohibiting all pernicious political activity, we went further and prohibited any activity in political management or political campaigns on the part of certain Federal employees, whether pernicious or not. Such activity might be as pure and wholesome as sunshine, and yet it is interdicted.

Mark you, there is no need of additional law to fire a man who diverts time that he is paid for, from the service of the Government to any kind of political activity, no matter how innocent, for he is bound to perform his duty. The civil service for 50 years has required that a civil servant abstain from political activity. Every person who takes a position under the civil service knows that law and exchanges his rights under the Constitution of freedom of speech and freedom of action for the security of the quid pro quo guaranty of a permanent job. I stated that the other night, and if you make this bill anything but retroactive, ex post facto, as it were, it would be much less obnoxious. Every free-born citizen has a right to bargain away rights, if he wishes. But we should not commission him for a term of 4 years and thereafter force him, by changing the law, either to give up his constitutional rights or his job.

Mr. MUNDT. Am I correct in assuming that the gentleman's constitutional objections are based on the retroactive features of the bill rather than its restrictive features?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir. The restrictions tie a string to a man's job after he took it, when there was no string. As a matter of policy, I doubt if the time has come when it is wise to foreclose the rights of freedom of speech and of action of any American citizen merely because he happens to be an employee of the Federal Government. And this consideration is wholly aside from the question of constitutionality.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOBBS. Assuredly.

Mr. MUNDT. It is not true, however, that since none of the penalties are retroactive, that the constitutionality of the law might therefore not be subject to criticism.

Mr. HOBBS. Oh, the gentleman cannot seriously mean that the penalties are not retroactive in the loose sense in which we are using the word.

Mr. MUNDT. Under the bill we are not penalizing anyone for some political indiscretion of the past.

Mr. HOBBS. We are talking about section 9. Section 9 says you must be kicked out. Let us say that I am a United States district attorney. When I accepted that position there was no restriction on my liberty of speech or conduct. I entered into that office and was commissioned for 4 years, and then after 3 years have expired you come along and say: "No matter how free you were when you assumed office, you cannot defend your administration no matter how bitterly it may be attacked in a political campaign. You can take no active part in political compaigns; keep your mouth shut, or I will fire you."

I say that is unfair and utterly indefensible. Abstract justice, as well as the Constitution, condemns such a provision. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

EASEMENT FOR CERTAIN LANDS IN NEW MEXICO

Mr. DEROUEN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 1558) to provide for the acceptance of an easement with respect to certain lands in New Mexico, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I have just made.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the business on the Speaker's desk has been disposed of and other legislative matters, I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire, on account of official business to attend the meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Union in Oslo.

To Mr. LANHAM, after today, to attend the Inter-Parliamentary Union as a delegate of the American group.

To Mr. HOOK, for 2 weeks, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adojurned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 25, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 25, 1939

The Senate met in executive session at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Reverend Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Guide: Inspire the hearts of Thy servants, the President of the United States, the Members of this Senate, and all the people of the land with the abundance of Thy grace. Nourish them with all goodness; replenish them with wisdom; and fill their minds with thankfulness for the mercies Thou hast ever bestowed, which exceed all that they have desired or deserved. Through Jesus Christ our Lord who with Thee and the Father reign as one God throughout the ages, world without end. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, July 24, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate adjourned last evening in executive session. Are we now automatically in executive session?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate having met this morning following an adjournment in executive session last evening is, therefore, now in executive session.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrd	Gillette	Johnson, Colo.
Andrews	Byrnes	Glass	King
Ashurst	Capper	Green	La Follette
Austin	Chavez	Guffey	Lee
Bailey	Clark, Idaho	Gurney	Lodge
Bankhead	Clark, Mo.	Hale	Logan
Barbour	Connally	Harrison	Lucas
Barkley	Danaher	Hatch	Lundeen
Bilbo	Davis	Hayden	McCarran
Bone	Downey	Herring	McKellar
Borah	Ellender	Hill	McNary
Bridges	Frazier	Holman	Maloney

O'Mahoney	Schwellenbach	Tobey	Wheeler
Overton	Sheppard	Townsend	White
Pepper	Shipstead	Truman
Pittman	Smathers	Tydings

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are absent on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is in executive session. Are there any executive reports of committees?

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Joseph A. Ziemba, of Chicago, Ill., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 39, with headquarters at Chicago, Ill. (reappointment).

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of several doctors to be assistant surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of Sam Husbands, of South Carolina, to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the unexpired term of 2 years from January 22, 1938.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion in the Coast Guard.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the Executive Calendar is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the pending treaty which was under consideration at the time the Senate adjourned last night be now taken up and that the Executive Calendar be not called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GENERAL TREATY WITH PANAMA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the treaty, Executive B (74th Cong., 2d sess.), a general treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, signed at Washington on March 2, 1936.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is recognized.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is pending an amendment offered to the treaty by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], which reads as follows:

> At the end of article X add the following: "either prior to or subsequent to the taking of such measures."

To understand that amendment one must again read article X.

Article X, to which the amendment is proposed to be added, reads as follows:

> In case of an international conflagration or the existence of any threat of aggression which would endanger the security of the Republic of Panama or the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama will take such measures of prevention and defense as they may consider necessary for the protection of their common interests. Any measures, in safeguarding such interests, which it shall appear essential to one Government to take, and which may affect the territory under the jurisdiction of the other Government, will be the subject of consultation between the two Governments.

The Senator from Rhode Island proposes to add to that article "either prior to or subsequent to the taking of such measures." That clause undoubtedly refers to "consultation."

In a letter from the Secretary of State, dated Department of State, Washington, February 1, 1939, we find a communication relative to article X. It is a very important letter. We also find a reply to that letter by Augusto S. Boyd, Minister of Panama. I think it is appropriate at this time to have both letters in the RECORD and under consideration, as the weight and effect of the letters are questioned by this amendment, and also by an amendment which will be offered by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

I desire Senators to listen to this letter, so as to ascertain whether the minutes of interpretation preceded the making of the treaty or whether they were made as a part of the treaty. That fact will be determined by the letter of the Secretary of State and the reply of the Minister of Panama.

I desire a careful consideration of the wording of this letter.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PITTMAN. If the question is not too long. I want to read the letter.

Mr. AUSTIN. I merely wish to ask a question. What is the date of the letter the Senator is about to read?

Mr. PITTMAN. I am going to read the full letter, date and all.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 1, 1939.

The Honorable Señor Dr. DON AUGUSTO S. BOYD, Minister of Panama.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the general treaty signed between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama on March 2, 1936, and to the record of the proceedings of the negotiations leading to this accord. As you may recall, on several occasions during the course of the negotiations, it was found necessary to discuss and to reach a mutual understanding as to the interpretation to be placed upon certain draft provisions eventually incorporated in the signed treaty. These discussions and understandings were, after each meeting, embodied in the duly attested typewritten record of the proceedings of the treaty negotiations.

It seems possible that, following the favorable report at the close of the last session of Congress by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate on the general treaty and accompanying conventions, the individual Members of the Senate in their consideration during the current session of Congress of the treaty and conventions, may ask for clarification as to the precise meaning of certain important provisions of the general treaty which affect the security and neutrality of the Panama Canal. With a view to anticipating these inquiries, and in the hope of avoiding further delay on this account in the consideration of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, it has seemed to my Government advisable to set forth in an exchange of notes between our two Governments the substance of some of these above-mentioned understandings as mutually reached. I should be grateful, accordingly, if you would inform me whether your Government shares the understanding of my Government upon the points which follow in subsequent paragraphs.

1. In connection with the declared willingness of both the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of Panama to cooperate for the purpose of insuring the full and perpetual enjoyment of the benefits of all kinds which the Canal should afford them (art. I of the general treaty of March 2, 1936) the word "maintenance" as applied to the Canal shall be construed as permitting expansion and new construction when these are undertaken by the Government of the United States of America in accordance with the said treaty.

2. The holding of maneuvers or exercises by the armed forces of the United States of America in territory adjacent to the Canal Zone is an essential measure of preparedness for the protection of the neutrality of the Panama Canal and, when said maneuvers or exercises should take place, the parties shall follow the procedure set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 2, 1936.

3. As set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 16, 1935, in the event of an emergency so sudden as to make action of a preventive character imperative to safeguard the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, and if by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the Government of Panama as provided in article X of said treaty, the Government of the United States of America need not delay action to meet this emergency pending consultation, although it will make every effort in the event that such consultation has not been effected prior to taking action to consult as soon as it may be possible with the Panamanian Government.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

CORDELL HULL.

I shall now read the letter of the Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic of Panama:

LEGATION OF PANAMA,
Washington, February 1, 1939.

Mr. SECRETARY: I have the honor to refer to Your Excellency's valued communication of today's date with respect to the general treaty signed between the Governments of the Republic of Panama and of the United States of America March 2, 1936, and to the proceedings of the meetings held by the Commissioners of Panama and of the United States of America during the negotiations which preceded the signature of the said treaty. Your Excellency invites my attention to the fact that during the course of the negotiations and after discussion a mutual agreement was reached with regard to the interpretation to be given to certain provisions which eventually were incorporated in the treaty. Your Excellency states that these discussions and understanding were, after each meeting, embodied in the typewritten records of the proceedings.

You then give as your opinion that in view of [sic] the favorable report presented at the close of the last session of Congress by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate of the United States of America on the general treaty and the various accompanying conventions, some Members of the Senate, during the debates with respect to the general treaty and the conventions in the present session of Congress, may ask for clarification as to the meaning of certain provisions of the general treaty affecting the security and neutrality of the Panama Canal. With a view to anticipating such an eventuality, and of avoiding new delays in the consideration of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, Your Excellency states that it seems advisable to your Government to effect an exchange of notes with my Government for the purpose of reiterating the interpretation given to certain points in the proceedings.

I take pleasure in informing Your Excellency that I have been authorized by my Government to effect this exchange of notes and to clarify the points propounded by Your Excellency, and which, for greater clarity, are set forth in the English language, as follows:

Then the three interpretations which have already been read are set out.

I avail myself of this occasion to renew to Your Excellency the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask the Senator to permit me to finish this line; then I will yield. The minutes referred to are minutes adopted by the negotiators.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will not the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think that if the Senator will yield we will be more likely to arrive at an understanding of what the Senator is reading. The Senator has omitted something in the letter, and I am not aware of the part omitted. I, therefore, ask whether in the part omitted there is a reference to negotiations preceding occupation.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have left out nothing from the letter except what I will now read. When I read the first letter, I stated that I was leaving out minutes 1 and 2, because I was reading only minute No. 3, which deals with article X; but will read the first 2 minutes:

1. In connection with the declared willingness of both the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of Panama to cooperate for the purpose of insuring the full and perpetual enjoyment of the benefits of all kinds which the Canal should afford them (art. I of the general treaty of March 2, 1936), the word "maintenance" as applied to the Canal shall be construed as permitting expansion and new construction when these are undertaken by the Government of the United States of America in accordance with the said treaty.

2. The holding of maneuvers or exercises by the armed forces of the United States of America in territory adjacent to the Canal Zone is an essential measure of preparedness for the protection of the neutrality of the Panama Canal, and, when said maneuvers or exercises should take place, the parties shall follow the procedure set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 2, 1936.

I now read the third minute again:

3. As set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 16, 1935, in the event of an emergency so sudden as to make action of a preventive character imperative to safeguard the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, and if by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the government of Panama as provided in article X of said treaty, the Government of the United States of America need not delay action to meet this emergency pending consultation, although it will make every effort in the event that such consultation has not been effected prior to taking action to consult as soon as it may be possible with the Panamanian Government.

I thought it was understood that I was leaving out minutes Nos. 1 and 2. Now they have been read into the RECORD; and, so that there may be no misunderstanding, I will state that I have read to the Senate all of the letter of Minister Boyd, except that I did not read the 3 minutes. So that there may be no occasion for criticism, I will reread those 3 minutes:

1. In connection with the declared willingness of both the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of Panama to cooperate for the purpose of insuring the full and perpetual enjoyment of the benefits of all kinds which the Canal should afford them (art. I of the general treaty of March 2, 1936), the word "maintenance" as applied to the Canal shall be construed as permitting expansion and new construction when these are undertaken by the Government of the United States of America in accordance with the said treaty.

2. The holding of maneuvers or exercises by the armed forces of the United States of America in territory adjacent to the Canal Zone is an essential measure of preparedness for the protection of the neutrality of the Panama Canal and, when said maneuvers or exercises should take place, the parties shall follow the procedure set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 2, 1936.

3. As set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 16, 1935, in the event of an emergency so sudden as to make action of a preventive character imperative to safeguard the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, and if by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the Government of Panama as provided in article X of said treaty, the Government of the United States of America need not delay action to meet this emergency pending consultation, although it will make every effort in the event that such consultation has not been effected prior to taking action to consult as soon as it may be possible with the Panamanian Government.

I avail myself of this occasion to renew to Your Excellency the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

AUGUSTO S. BOYD, Minister.

Mr. President, every day during the drafting of the treaty the parties who adopted these minutes of interpretation were called negotiators. As a matter of fact, they were ministers plenipotentiary of the President of the United States and the President of Panama. They were not merely casual negotiators.

Let me now read what will show who these parties were and what authority they had. They were the agents of two Presidents who had authority to act. They were acting for the President of the United States and the President of Panama, not only in making the treaty, but every day while writing it they were also writing the interpretation of every clause which might seem ambiguous.

The President of the United States of America;

Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and Mr. Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

The President of the Republic of Panama;

The Honorable Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Panama to the United States of America, and the Honorable Dr. Narciso Garay, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Panama on special mission;

Who, having communicated their respective full powers to each other, which have been found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following.

The agreement was the agreement of the President of the United States, who has the constitutional authority to make treaties, and the agreement of the President of Panama, and at the time the negotiators made the treaty, on behalf of the President of the United States and the President of Panama, they made these minutes of interpretation. Hearing this matter debated one would think these negotiators were some unauthorized persons who had taken this action. They were not; they were the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the President of the United States and the President of Panama.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator still leaves me without a convincing answer to this question: Why did they write a treaty which said, "We had to consult ahead of action," and write notes which said, "We could act ahead of consultation"? Why did they not say the same thing both times?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator knows as much about the drafting of treaties as does the Senator from Nevada, and in the little experience we have had with treaties, over a period of many years, we have discovered that it is exceedingly difficult, in making a treaty between two different governments which use different languages, to employ idioms which will give exact expression to what is meant.

My impression is that at the time article X was drawn the negotiators were considering normal times. I mean by that, there is no doubt whatever that it was understood that if the United States desired to make preparations for war in the territory of Panama, the United States should consult with Panama as to what it desired to do in the Panamanian territory. However, after that was decided, one of the drafters asked the question, "But assume that an emergency arises which requires immediate action before the representatives of the two governments can get together, before we can even consult with respect to what we want to do, then what shall we do?" The answer was simply, "Well, of course it is understood that in an emergency action must be taken, after which, if necessary, consultation will be had."

However, I revert to the question which has been raised by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], for whose legal opinions I have the very highest regard. Both Senators contend that there is nothing before the Senate to disclose whether or not the ratifying body of Panama had these minutes before it and ratified the treaty in view of these interpretations, and that afterwards either Government might say, "Oh, no; we did not know anything about these minutes of interpretation." That, of course, is quite an appealing argument.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand the Senator's contention concerning these minutes and notes of interpretation. But let me ask the Senator a very practical question. Suppose after we shall have ratified the treaty an issue should arise as to what the treaty means; in all good conscience which would control—the letter which the minister wrote, the minutes of the negotiation, or the treaty, for there is a conflict between them? That is admitted. Where would we go and put our finger on a provision and say, "It is right here?" Would we go to the minutes?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will try to answer that question from my viewpoint. I think the rules of interpretation and construction of treaties are the same as the rules of construction and interpretation of contracts. In fact, a treaty is nothing but a contract between governments. If a contract is drawn between another party and myself, and the other party must sign the contract before I sign it, and there happens to be a clause in it which seems subject to misunderstanding, and after signing the contract he writes me a letter when he transmits the contract to me, and says, "I understand the purpose and effect of article X of this contract which I am signing, to be so and so," and in view of that letter of transmission and that construction of article X of the contract I am induced to sign it, and do sign it, that letter becomes a part of the contract for the purpose of future interpretation and construction, and the courts of our country have universally so held.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, we recognize the rule that when the language of a contract is ambiguous some collateral writings may be considered. But here there is no claim of ambiguity, because the Secretary of Foreign Affairs says that article X means that there shall be prior consultation. He says that in his letter. Therefore it is not ambiguous. He says, however, "I am authorized by my government in effect to vary article X." But we are contending that since the Congress of Panama ratified the treaty more than 2 years previously, no one but the Congress of Panama can authorize the foreign minister to change the terms of the treaty.

Let me say to the Senator from Nevada that the amendment I have offered simply incorporates the third paragraph in the letter written by the Foreign Minister, in his own language, and if that should be agreed to then there could not be any controversy, and it would be a very simple matter for the Panamanian Government to accept what they say already they are accepting.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me proceed, then. My contention is that the language cannot be ambiguous. It does not say that before the United States Government shall occupy any portion of the territory of Panama for defense purposes the Government of the United States shall consult the Government of Panama. If it did say that, this interpretation might be considered as antagonistic. But it does not say that. It does not say whether the consultation shall take place before or after. It does not even say that there shall be a consultation, although it is thoroughly understood that there should be. What it says is—and I will read the language—"will be the subject of consultation between the two governments." That is the language. When is the consultation to occur? There is no time set for it. It is very well to have the minutes of interpretation by the makers of this treaty. They say that "consultation" ordinarily means before, but in case of emergency it means after, if necessary. That is what is said.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator concedes that article X refers to consultation. Consultation about what?

Mr. PITTMAN. Concerning the use of the territory of Panama.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly, concerning the use of the territory and the use of the Army. Does it not inevitably follow that since the consultation has to do with the use of the territory and the use of the Army, the language contemplates that the consultation shall take place before the use is actually made?

Mr. PITTMAN. Not necessarily, because under article XXIII of the 1903 treaty, which has not been abrogated, the right of the United States Government is recognized at any time, without consultation with anyone, to occupy any territory in the vicinity for the defense of the Panama Canal.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask another question, and then I shall not interrupt the Senator further. If article XXIII of the prior treaty controls why was article X put in the present treaty?

Mr. PITTMAN. Article X undoubtedly was put into the treaty for the purpose of giving the Panamanian Government some consideration, and it was perfectly proper to do so. The consideration given was that proposed action should be the subject of consultation. It did not in any sense of the word negative the absolute power of article XXIII under the 1903 treaty. The words "power of consultation" were contained in the treaty. There was nothing in it which indicated that the consultation should be before action. The makers of the pending Panama treaty wanted it so stated. So they said or indicated that the consultations should be before action, and our Government said, "Yes; unless an emergency arises." That is exactly what the language of the treaty means, and the drafters of the treaty have made it quite plain to everyone what it means.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Was not article X put in only for the purpose of establishing a status, and maintaining a status? In other words, the Panamanian Government wanted to maintain some semblance of sovereignty in the relationship between the two parties.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was put in, as is very plain to be seen, in the first place, for the purpose of binding the Government of Panama to cooperate in every possible way for the defense not only of the Panama Canal but of Panama. That is No. 1.

No. 2. It was put in, there can be no doubt, for the purpose, as I said before, of softening article XXIII of the 1903 treaty by providing that proposed action should be the subject of consultation. And in normal times consultation should be had before the United States acted in the territory of Panama. But there was nothing in the article which said whether the consultation should be before or after, until Panama insisted on the interpretation that it should be before, and the United States insisted it should not be before, if an emergency required the United States to act before consultation could be had. Then the Panama Government said, "If there is an emergency and you have to act before consultation, then you will consult after that as soon as possible."

Mr. President, that is as plain as day. I now go back to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island. The Senator from Rhode Island desires to add at the end of article X—

Either prior to or subsequent to the taking of such measures.

That would change the entire intent of the article so far as the Government of Panama is concerned. That would leave the United States free from the necessity of consulting in advance of action at any time it does not want to do so. Panama wants it understood that the consultation is to be before action whenever it is possible. The United States wants it understood that consultation shall be had before action, except in case of emergency, and then action will be taken immediately, and the consultation will be had thereafter as soon as possible. The amendment would make impossible what Panama wants.

Those who advocate amendments say that we have no proof that the ratifying body of Panama, which I now understand is its assembly, had any knowledge of the minutes of interpretation which were made by the makers of the treaty, and that the assembly might afterward say, "We did not know anything about that." I say that when the Minister Plenipotentiary of Panama to this country, with full and general powers, represents to our Government that his Government ratified the treaty with certain understandings, we not yet having ratified it, if we ratify it under certain representations by the Minister of Panama, Panama is bound by those representations, because we have a right to accept representations by the Minister of Panama, who has plenipotentiary powers to deal with this Government. It is absurd to say that governments which communicate through their plenipotentiaries with general powers may not have accepted the representations of their ministers as to the acts of the governments.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That being true, everybody, including the Panamanian Government, being in agreement as to what the language means, why is it in any degree offensive to the Panamanian Government to take the action proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and close the debate for keeps?

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall attempt to give my own view of the question. In the first place, the Assembly of Panama is in adjournment. It meets on the first Monday in September and will not meet again until 1940. If any amendment is placed in the treaty, either the treaty will be delayed until 1940 or there will have to be a special session of the Panamanian Assembly.

In the second place, such an amendment would be a clear indication that we do not trust the Government of Panama. A lack of trust in the Government of Panama would destroy one of the greatest advantages we would obtain from the treaty; that is, not merely the promise of cooperation by Panama but the wholehearted, friendly cooperation of Panama in the protection of the Panama Canal.

Mr. President, I am ready to close. On yesterday afternoon, having in mind the objection that we had no proof that the ratifying body of the Republic of Panama took into consideration the minutes and interpretations, I put the matter up to the State Department. The Secretary of State has just transmitted to me two very important communications containing a decisive statement with regard to the objection that the ratifying body of Panama might not have had knowledge of the minutes of interpretation made by the makers of the treaty at the time the treaty was made. I shall read the communications:

JULY 25, 1939.

His Excellency Señor Dr. DON AUGUSTO S. BOYD, Ambassador of Panama.

EXCELLENCY: I understand from the debate in the Senate of the United States yesterday on the treaties signed with Panama, March 2, 1936, that the question was raised as to whether the Assembly of Panama had the notes and minutes of the treaty negotiations before it at the time the treaties were considered and ratified by that body.

I shall thank you to advise me definitely as to whether the notes and minutes of the negotiations were before the Assembly of Panama and were thoroughly understood and considered by the Assembly in connection with its ratification of the aforesaid treaties.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

CORDELL HULL.

JULY 25, 1939.

His Excellency CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State.

EXCELLENCY: I am in receipt of Your Excellency's note of this date in which you state that you understand from the debate in the Senate of the United States yesterday on the treaties with Panama signed March 2, 1936 that the question was raised whether the Assembly of Panama had the notes and minutes of the treaty negotiations before it at the time the treaties were considered and ratified by that body.

I think that the best answer I may give to Your Excellency is to transcribe textually in translation, law No. 37, of 1936, which was passed by our assembly on the 24th of December 1936, and which reads as follows:

"The National Assembly of Panama Decrees

"Only article: There are hereby approved and ratified in all their parts the General Treaty, the Radio Communications Convention, the Convention on the Transfer of the Stations of La Palma and Puerto Olbadía, and the Convention on the Trans-Isthmian Highway, signed in the city of Washington, March 2, 1936, by plenipotentiaries of the Governments of the Republic of Panama and of the United States of America, which is done taking into account the minutes and the exchanges of notes signed on the same date and which contain interpretations and explanations of certain important aspects of the general treaty and of the conventions aforementioned."

From the law quoted above Your Excellency will observe that the minutes and the notes were before the assembly, and were considered and understood by it at the same time that the assembly ratified the treaty and conventions above mentioned.

Accept, Excellency, the sentiments of my highest consideration.

AUGUSTO S. BOYD.

I think those communications put an end to the question.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, on yesterday when the treaty was under consideration by the Senate I was struck, as the debate developed, by the fact that the treaty was ratified by Panama in 1936 and that the correspondence between the Panamanian Government and our Secretary of State was dated in 1939. I was also impressed, as was the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], with the fact that there was sufficient ambiguity in the treaty to cause our Secretary of State to deem it necessary to ask for further explanations.

I can well understand the point that when two governments are conducting negotiations through accredited representatives the representatives must have certain leeway, and that the conversations which took place during the negotiations, which conversations were taken down, would naturally have a bearing on the construction of the treaty.

I asked the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee whether or not there was any evidence to show that the treaty had been ratified by the Panamanian Senate. I received no answer to that question. Today I learn from the statement submitted by the State Department that it was ratified by the assembly. Apparently under the laws of Panama, of which no one present seemed to have a wide knowledge, treaties of the Panamanian Government must be ratified by the assembly, which I presume includes both bodies, and not merely the senate. However, I have no information as to that question.

One of the main things which was bothering me was the fact that there was nothing in the record to show that the Panamanian ratifying body, in conjunction with the executive branch of the Panamanian Government, had before them the minutes of the meetings. I raised that point; and it has now been answered. It appears that the minutes were before the Assembly of Panama, and therefore the assembly had knowledge of the proceedings. That circumstance seems to me very strong evidence of the fact that the situation was pretty well understood; and in my opinion it takes away much from the force of the argument that the clarifying letters were written afterward.

Under these circumstances, and because of the fact that the Senator from Texas has offered what I consider to be a better amendment, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. I will reserve final judgment, so far as my opinion is concerned, until I hear the debate further and certain other questions which are still puzzling me shall be cleared up in the debate.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield to the Senator from California but I should like to make a suggestion before he speaks.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I have asked unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island is withdrawn.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to article X which I should like to have read at the desk. Then, I will yield the floor to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new paragraph to article X of the treaty, as follows:

As set forth in the records of the proceedings of the negotiations of the general treaty of March 2, 1936, which proceedings were held on March 16, 1935, in the event of an emergency so sudden as to make action of a preventive character imperative to safeguard the neutrality or security of the Panama Canal, and if by reason of such emergency it would be impossible to consult with the Government of Panama as provided in article X of said treaty, the Government of the United States of America need not delay action to meet this emergency pending consultation, although it will make every effort in the event that such consultation has not been effected prior to taking action to consult as soon as it may be possible with the Panamanian Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in explanation, I wish to say to Members of the Senate that the amendment which I offer simply adds to article X of the treaty paragraph 3 of the letter of the Foreign Minister of Panama upon which the chairman of the committee relies for what he thinks is the proper interpretation of article X. If this amendment should be adopted there could be no controversy because as soon as the Panamanian Government should agree to it, which they are bound to do because it is the language of their own Foreign Minister, it would elucidate and clear up this situation entirely.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The result of the Senator's amendment would simply be to make the treaty actually say what the Senator from Nevada says it says, what the Panamanian Minister says it says, and what our Secretary of State says it says.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. With the further suggestion that we doubt the word of our Secretary of State, we doubt the word of the Foreign Minister of Panama, and our action will necessitate either delay for months in the reratification of the amendmen or cause the Government of Panama to call a special session of the congress of that country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator from Texas will permit me, I do not doubt anybody's word, but I doubt the advisability of relying upon ambiguous language in international relationships.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have no hostility toward this treaty; I am favorable to the treaty. I am willing to pay Panama the rental of the Canal territory in the old 100-percent dollars, although that will cost us nearly $150,000 annually more than the treaty provides. I desire to deal justly and generously with Panama; but, at the same time, while dealing justly with Panama, I want to deal justly with the people of the United States whose canal is located on that territory, and I want to prevent any possible subsequent argument with Panama. Our contention is, and it is the contention of Panama, that article X as written requires prior consultation. The amendment, if adopted, will make it clear, because we adopt the language of the Panamanian Secretary of State. They cannot object to this amendment in the nature of a reservation.

The Senator from Nevada says that it will take several months because their Congress does not meet soon; but we have had this treaty in the Senate for a long while, and we have not shown any tendency to violate the speed laws in its consideration. So why should we quibble over a few months' delay in Panama? My prediction is, however, that if we agree to this amendment Panama will ratify it within 30 days. The Congress of Panama is not like the Congress of the United States, whose Members live thousands of miles apart. I dare say members of the Congress of Panama could all be reached by telephone or automobile within 30 minutes after this treaty, with the amendment, is ratified; and I predict when they get the assurance of the $150,000 additional payment every year they will ratify it very quickly for fear we will change our minds. I say that with all respect to Panama. They want the increased payment.

If there should be any consultation under article X of the treaty, which is admittedly, according to the statement of those who are advocating it, ambiguous, suppose we should go ahead. It is said that in an emergency we could go ahead and consult Panama later, but, then, probably, they would have a claim for damages for the injury to their territory by reason of military operations because we had not consulted them in advance. That is a possibility. They could say, "You did not consult us in advance; the treaty said you ought to do so, but you did not do it, and your army tramples down our grass and our coconut trees, and we want some damages." If, however, we put this amendment in the treaty, and agree particularly in their very own language, there can be no discussion; there can be no quibbles.

Let me suggest to Senators that if we here on the floor of the Senate disagree about the construction of this treaty and the negotiations incident to it, is it not possible that the Panamanians might disagree about it with us after the treaty has been ratified?

So I submit, Mr. President, the Senate should agree to this amendment, which sets forth the meaning of article X exactly in accordance with what the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations contends it means, and what the Panamanians say they are willing for it to mean, and which they say is not meant by the present article X, because the letter of the Panamanian Secretary of State says that consultation in advance is required by article X. The Foreign Minister of Panama has no more authority to change the action of the Congress of Panama in ratifying this treaty than has the Secretary of State of the United States to repeal a statute of the Congress of the United States.

I do not want to argue the matter further, but I submit this is a sane, fair adjustment of the whole question and removes every doubt whatever.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Texas solves one question presented by this treaty. It seems to me to be perfectly ridiculous to contend that a treaty may be ratified in 1936 by the ratifying body of one signatory and in 1939 there may be added by the ratifying body of the other signatory a clarifying clause which will solve the difficulty of 1936. It would be like the Senate ratifying a treaty or not ratifying a treaty, and long afterward, when another Senate may have come into being or another one may be contemplated, having it ratify something that was done by the prior Senate or something done in times past which did not apply at all to the particular time in question.

Mr. President, the solving of this particular technical question is important, it is true; it goes to the heart of the very matter we are discussing; but there is something greater than that. Mr. President, can you not see that the Panama Canal is now completely under our jurisdiction? Always since its construction it has been under the power of the United States to do as it pleased in regard to the Panama Canal. And, Mr. President, do you not see that at this particular time of stress and crisis we are denying to the United States the absolute power that it has possessed up to this time and are whittling away a great portion of the power that was conferred by the original treaty? The pending treaty, first of all, abrogates the first clause of the old treaty of 1903, and it abrogates the succeeding clauses and provisions of that treaty and changes entirely the set-up of the Panama Canal. It is changed when we most need it, for we most need it today. I cannot for the life of me understand why we should be so ready for the Panamanians to change the power that we have exerted up to this time over the Panama Canal and today leave its control doubtful. I do not say that the treaty gives control absolutely to somebody else or to some other power, but it leaves the power of control doubtful at a time when we most need it and when it may be of most assistance to this country and to the other countries of the earth. So why do it? We do it, first of all, because we agree to give to the Panama Government $400,000 instead of $250,000 in round numbers. We give that, and we ought to give it, because the treaty originally obligated us to pay the sum in gold coin and in 100-percent dollars, and now we are tardily doing that justice to Panama. But we do it, too, because Panama insists that her citizens shall have all the commercial privileges of the Canal Zone and all of the business that shall be done there, and we are denying to American citizens the right to do business there. We do not permit them by this treaty to carry on their usual course of life. Why is it that we should now, 3 years after the treaty has been presented to the Senate, hurry its ratification? Why is it necessary right now, when fires are burning all over the earth, to say that the United States Government shall yield any part of its power over the Panama Canal?

I adjure you, my colleagues in the Senate, not to permit any part of the power that is ours over the Panama Canal to be taken away at this time, but to hang on to it for the safety of the United States and the protection of the world.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to the fact that I received this morning from the Minister of Panama a certificate of the resolution of ratification of the Assembly of the Legislature of the Republic of Panama on the 24th day of December 1936, which is set out textually. We do not have to rely on any subsequent correspondence.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to say just a few words in connection with the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

In the first place, I think we should bear in mind the fact that article XXIII of the treaty of 1903 is not in any way impaired by the ratification of this treaty.

In the second place, as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has just pointed out, we now are on official notice that these notes and interpretations were under consideration at the time this treaty was ratified by the Panamanian Government. Therefore I think it is clear that the interpretation contained in the notes is the interpretation which was placed upon article X of the pending treaty by the Panamanian Government when it exercised its right under its constitution and ratified the treaty.

Mr. President, as I see it, the power of the Government of the United States to protect the Panama Canal is amply safeguarded in the treaty. The question is whether or not, by its ratification, we wish to cultivate and encourage the friendship of the Panamanian Government and its citizens. To my mind that is a very important consideration, because it seems to me to be perfectly clear that any possible designs upon the Canal which might eventuate in the future will not occur in the Canal Zone, which is completely under the control of the Government of the United States and under the surveillance of our military and naval intelligence. If it is conceivable that in the future some plans, in view of international developments, may result in efforts to sabotage or destroy the Canal, such plans will be formulated in the territory of Panama.

Believing that all of our rights and privileges essential to the protection of the Canal are retained and safeguarded by the treaty, I believe we should ratify it without reservation and without amendment, in order that we may encourage and develop the friendship of the Panamanian Government and of Panamanian citizens.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator believe there is any conflict between the correspondence recently carried on between the Panamanian Government and the Secretary of State in regard to the treaty and the treaty itself, which was ratified by Panama back in 1936?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I personally see no conflict, because, as the Senator knows, the exchange of notes merely embodied the interpretative notes which were made at the time the treaty was negotiated; and we are now officially advised that at the time the Panamanian Government ratified the treaty those notes were before the Panamanian Assembly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Was the note of the foreign minister, dated February 1, 1939, before the Panamanian Parliament?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; but the note of the Panamanian Minister, dated February 1, 1939, quotes verbatim the interpretative note written at the time the treaty and article X thereof were negotiated; and we now are officially advised that all of those notes and interpretations were before the Panamanian Parliament when it acted upon the treaty and ratified it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, were those notes and the treaty in front of the Panamanian Government when it wrote the clarification letter?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, let me read this letter to the Senator. He was not here when I presented it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. This is the letter, dated this morning, to the Secretary of State, from the Minister of Panama:

JULY 25, 1939.

EXCELLENCY:

I am in receipt of Your Excellency's note of this date in which you state that you understand from the debate in the Senate of the United States yesterday on the treaties with Panama signed March 2, 1936, that the question was raised whether the Assembly of Panama had the notes and minutes of the treaty negotiations before it at the time the treaties were considered and ratified by that body.

I think that the best answer I may give to Your Excellency is to transcribe textually, in translation, Law No. 37 of 1936, which was passed by our assembly on the 24th of December 1936, and which reads as follows:

This is the law of ratification:

"THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF PANAMA

"DECREES

"Only article: There are hereby approved and ratified in all their parts the General Treaty, the Radio Communications Convention, the Convention on the Transfer of the Stations of La Palma and Puerto Olbadía, and the Convention on the Trans-Isthmian Highway, signed in the city of Washington, March 2, 1936, by plenipotentiaries of the Governments of the Republic of Panama and of the United States of America, which is done taking into account the minutes and the exchanges of notes signed on the same date, and which contain interpretations and explanations of certain important aspects of the General Treaty and of the conventions aforementioned."

That is the end of the law of ratification.

From the law quoted above, Your Excellency will observe that the minutes and the notes were before the assembly and were considered and understood by it at the same time that the assembly ratified the treaty and conventions above mentioned.

Accept, Excellency, the sentiments of my highest consideration.

AUGUSTO S. BOYD.

His Excellency CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. LUCAS. Then, undoubtedly, the Panamanian Government, having in front of it the notes and the treaty entered into back in 1936, considered the clarification letter a part of the treaty and those notes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I have stated, it seems to me that every power essential and necessary to the defense of the Panama Canal is protected by the treaty; and it comes down to a simple question of whether or not, by the ratification of the treaty without reservation or amendment, we desire to cultivate and encourage the friendship of the Panamanian Government and its people toward the Government of the United States. For that reason, I hope that no amendment or reservation will be agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada one more question.

A moment ago the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] made a very impassioned plea for nonratification of the treaty, and he indicated to me through that speech that the United States will lose some of its rights in the Panama Canal as a result of the ratification of the treaty. I do not believe that he fully explained what we shall lose as a result of ratification of the treaty, but I should like to have the Senator from Nevada reply to the implication or assertion which was made.

Mr. PITTMAN. That question has not been a serious one before the committee during the past 3 years. The treaty maintains the rights of all of the citizens of the United States who are now engaged in business in the Canal Zone. That is No. 1. It provides that United States citizens may engage in the sale of materials to the United States Government or to its employees or agents, soldiers, or others. It limits the amount of business which may be conducted in the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. LUCAS. That is, it limits American citizens in the amount of business they may negotiate in the Canal Zone?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; in the Canal Zone.

Mr. LUCAS. At the present time there is no limitation on the amount of business they may transact?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no limitation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The treaty specifically supersedes article I of the convention of November 18, 1903. That is point No. 1 where we yield a power.

Thereafter in article II it insists that—

The United States of America hereby renounces the grant made to it in perpetuity by the Republic of Panama of the use, occupation, and control of lands and waters, in addition to those now under the jurisdiction of the United States of America.

That is point No. 2 where we yield a power.

The Senator can count up pretty high in the digits, if he desires, as to what is done in relation to the business at Panama, and he will see what is yielded.

Here is the ratification note of Cordell Hull dated March 2, 1936, which is couched in pleasant terms, and states:

With reference to section 1 of article III of the treaty signed today, wherein are specified the classes of persons to whom goods imported into the Canal Zone, or purchased, produced, or manufactured therein, may be sold by the Government of the United States of America, I have the honor to confirm the understanding reached in the course of the recent negotiations, namely, that for the purposes of said section 1 of article III, the term "Officers, employees, workmen, or laborers in the service or employ of the United States of America," as it appears in section 2 (a) of said article III, is interpreted as referring exclusively to such persons whose services are related to the Panama Canal, the Panama Railroad Co., or their auxiliary works, and to duly accredited representatives of any branch of the Government of the United States of America exercising official duties within the Republic of Panama, including diplomatic and consular officers, and to members of their staffs.

Following that, I read a part of the statement given out by the representatives of Panama:

We wish to express our great pleasure at the statement made by the representatives of the Government of the United States of America during the negotiation of the treaty, that it is not the intention or desire of the Government of the United States of America to compete with Panamanian industry. We are also pleased to know with respect to the hotels—

Even the hotels—

in the Canal Zone that they were established for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the passenger traffic at a time when the hotels established in Panama were not entirely in position to do so; that as soon as this situation is satisfactorily altered the hotel business proper will be left in the hands of the industry established in Panama, and that the prosperity of the Republic of Panama in this, as in other respects, is earnestly desired by the United States of America.

We are carrying friendship pretty far in this treaty.

All through it run the indications that we will have nothing more to do with business in Panama. If an American has a business established in Panama, he is not permitted to transmit it to his offspring. It dies with him.

Mr. LUCAS. Does our Nation surrender any property rights under the treaty?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; the country does not. It is nationals of the country only who are affected in this way.

Mr. PITTMAN. We never gave any title to anyone in the Panama Canal Zone. Anyone who was doing business there was doing it by consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; we gave the God-given right of Americans to do business where they pleased and how they pleased, so far as they did it in a manner befitting Americans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER proceeded to put the question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I thought the ruling was that the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were ordered on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY].

Mr. McNARY. I asked for the yeas and nays just a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An insufficient number seconded the request.

Mr. McNARY. Then I suggest the absence of a quorum, because I am satisfied that a sufficient number of Senators are in favor of having the yeas and nays taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrnes	Guffey	Lucas
Andrews	Capper	Gurney	McCarran
Ashurst	Chavez	Hale	McKellar
Austin	Clark, Idaho	Hatch	McNary
Bailey	Clark, Mo.	Hayden	Maloney
Bankhead	Connally	Herring	Mead
Barbour	Danaher	Hill	Miller
Barkley	Davis	Holman	Minton
Bilbo	Downey	Hughes	Neely
Bone	Ellender	Johnson, Calif.	Norris
Borah	Frazier	Johnson, Colo.	Nye
Bridges	George	King	O'Mahoney
Brown	Gerry	La Follette	Overton
Bulow	Gibson	Lee	Pepper
Burke	Gillette	Lodge	Pittman
Byrd	Green	Logan	Radcliffe
Reed	Sheppard	Tobey	Walsh
Russell	Smathers	Truman	Wheeler
Schwartz	Taft	Vandenberg	White
Schwellenbach	Thomas, Utah	Wagner

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. McNARY. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the vote on the Connally amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote is on the Connally amendment.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that my colleague [Mr. SLATTERY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present he would vote "nay."

Mr. GREEN (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McNARY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who I observe is absent from the Senate. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and let my vote stand.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is detained in a conference at the White House.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] is detained in one of the Government departments.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not informed how he would vote on this question if he were present. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 49, as follows:

So Mr. CONNALLY'S amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive B, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, a general treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, signed at Washington on March 2, 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. An amendment was offered yesterday by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was withdrawn.

The Chair is informed that if there are reservations to be made to the treaty they must be made at this time. If there be no reservations, the question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if he were present and voting he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. I inquire if my colleague [Mr. SLATTERY] is paired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is no information at the desk on that question.

Mr. LUCAS. My colleague is unavoidably detained. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on important business. I am advised that if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] is absent on important public business.

The result was announced—yeas 65, nays, 16, as follows:

PANAMA—CONVENTION REGARDING THE CONSTRUCTION OF A TRANS-ISTHMIAN HIGHWAY

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are three collateral conventions on the calendar. In view of the vote, I do not think there will be any debate over any of them. One of them is with regard to building a road across the Isthmus of Panama. The second is with regard to conforming to the radio convention providing for the regulation of radio communications. The third is a convention transferring certain radio stations to Panama.

I ask that Calendar No. 8, the convention regarding the construction of a trans-Isthmian highway, be laid before the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the convention regarding the construction of a trans-Isthmian highway. However, I wish to take a moment to express my opposition to the conventions dealing with the radio situation.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the reason why I asked for the consideration of the highway convention first. I did not know of any objection to it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I reserve the right to object if consideration of the convention leads to any debate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Under the terms of the convention, is there any obligation on the part of the United States to construct a road?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is not.

Mr. KING. Or is it merely permissive?

Mr. PITTMAN. The convention grants permission to build a road.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the treaty?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive E (74th Cong., 2d sess.), a convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, with regard to the construction of a trans-Isthmian highway between the cities of Panama and Colon, signed at Washington on March 2, 1936, which was read the second time, as follows:

HIGHWAY BETWEEN PANAMA AND COLON

The United States of America and the Republic of Panama, in order to arrange for the completion of a highway between the cities of Panamá and Colón through territory under their respective jurisdictions, hereinafter referred to as the Trans-Isthmian Highway, have resolved to conclude a Convention for that purpose and have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and Mr. Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

The President of the Republic of Panama:

The Honorable Doctor Ricardo J. Alfaro, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Panama to the United States of America, and The Honorable Doctor Narciso Garay, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Panama on special mission;

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which have been found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE I

In order to make possible the completion of the Trans-Isthmian Highway, the Government of the United States of America undertakes to obtain such waiver from the Panama Railroad Company of its exclusive right to establish roads across the Isthmus of Panama as is necessary to enable the Government of the Republic of Panama to construct a highway from a point on the boundary of the Madden Dam area at Alhajuela to a point on the boundary of the Canal Zone near Cativá.

ARTICLE II

As a contribution to the completion of the Trans-Isthmian Highway, the United States of America will construct without delay and at its own expense that portion of the Highway between the Canal Zone boundary near Cativá and a junction with the Fort Randolph

Road near France Field, which portion shall thereafter be maintained by the Republic of Panama at its own expense.

ARTICLE III

Prior to the undertaking of further construction on the Trans-Isthmian Highway, each Government will appoint an equal number of representatives, who will constitute a joint board with authority to adjust questions of detail regarding the location, design and construction of the portions of the Highway falling under the jurisdiction of each Government. Questions of detail on which the board may fail to reach an agreement will be referred to the two Governments for settlement.

ARTICLE IV

The sections of the Trans-Isthmian Highway which are to be constructed by each Government shall have the following minimum characteristics:

(a) Pavement.—Concrete; normal width 18 feet, suitably widened on curves of 5 degrees or sharper; of the thickened edge type of 9" – 7" – 9" section, with proper reinforcement with steel in accordance with good practice; provision for suitable longitudinal and transverse joints, sealed with an asphalt filler, and with adjacent slabs properly doweled.

(b) Gradients.—maximum 8 percent.

(c) Curves.—maximum 12 degrees, properly superelevated and suitably widened pavement when of 5 degrees or sharper.

(d) Bridges and Culverts.—to be two-way, of a width of 20 feet; of capacity to carry live loads equivalent to 20-ton truck with 14 tons on rear axle and 6 tons on front axle; and so located and of such span or size as to afford adequate drainage under maximum flow.

(e) Right of Way.—to be of ample width to accommodate the pavement plus 4-foot berms and drainage ditches and to provide for suitable slopes in cuts and fills; the right to be reserved to each of the two Governments to install and use telegraph and telephone lines of either pole line construction or underground cable construction in that part of the Trans-Isthmian Highway subject to the jurisdiction of the other Government.

ARTICLE V

The portions of the Trans-Isthmian Highway which the two Governments undertake to construct according to the provisions of this Convention will be completed within a period of ten years after the entrance into force of the Convention. The two Governments will consult with each other with a view to coordinating the construction of the two portions of the highway so far as may be feasible in order that the usefulness of one portion may not be unduly impaired by a failure to complete the other portion.

ARTICLE VI

The United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall maintain in a good state of repair at all times the portions of the Trans-Isthmian Highway within their respective jurisdictions.

ARTICLE VII

Subject to the laws and regulations relating to vehicular traffic in force in their respective jurisdictions the United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall enjoy equally the use of the Trans-Isthmian Highway.

ARTICLE VIII

The present Convention shall be ratified in accordance with the constitutional methods of the High Contracting Parties and shall take effect immediately on the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Washington.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the Plenipotentiaries have signed this Convention in duplicate in the English and Spanish languages, both texts being authentic, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

DONE at the city of Washington the second day of March, 1936.

[SEAL] CORDELL HULL.
[SEAL] SUMNER WELLES.
[SEAL] R. J. ALFARO.
[SEAL] NARCISO GARAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive E, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, a convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama with regard to the construction of a Trans-Isthmian Highway between the cities of Panama and Colon, which was signed at Washington on March 2, 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to and the convention is ratified.

PANAMA—RADIO CONVENTIONS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it has been indicated by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] that he wishes to discuss the radio conventions. Therefore, in consideration of the fact that I know the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] desires to return to a bill which is pending in legislative session, I shall not at this time urge consideration of those conventions.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of legislative business.

WAGES UNDER WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be published in the RECORD at this point an editorial from the Bridgeport Times-Star referring to the matter of a cut in security wages under the W. P. A., and a telegram on the subject of the W. P. A. bill which I received from Mayor George J. Coyle, of New Britain, Conn.

There being no objection the editorial and telegram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Bridgeport Times-Star of July 22, 1939]

MALONEY ON W. P. A. WAGES

Connecticut Senator MALONEY is apparently on solid ground when he tells his colleagues at Washington that the W. P. A. intends to interpret one of the sections of the new relief act as instruction to raise the rate of W. P. A. wages in the South and lower those in the North and West.

The section in question directs that geographical differentials in the W. P. A. monthly security wage shall be equalized, insofar as is harmonious with living costs.

W. P. A. authorities are apparently preparing to pay little heed to the difference in living costs between the North and South, and to proceed, on September 1, to the elimination of geographical differences in the W. P. A. wage.

This will mean that the W. P. A. wage in the South is raised and that, to make this possible without adding to the cost of the entire W. P. A. national pay roll, the W. P. A. wage in the North and West will be dropped.

It would be an error for the North to regard this as a sectional battle—as Senator Maloney does—if it were not for the fact that the South itself began it as a sectional battle. Regardless of living costs, southern Members of Congress wanted southern W. P. A. wages raised to the level of northern wages, and this section of the new relief act is a direct result of their strategical stranglehold upon Congress.

We in the North know that the monthly security wage in effect on the W. P. A. here is no more than that—that it barely provides subsistence for those families who have to rely upon it.

The object of the southern bloc in Congress was to make the standard of living on the W. P. A. in the South better and higher than it is in the North. That would be inevitable, if wages are equalized.

Senator MALONEY holds that W. P. A. Commissioner Harrington doesn't have to interpret this section of the bill as a direct order to equalize wages at the expense of the North. He holds that the present northern rate of pay represents the absolute minimum for maintenance of a bare living standard.

We hope he is right legally; we know he is right morally and practically. His colleagues of the North and West should rally round him in his stand.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., July 24, 1939.

Senator FRANCIS T. MALONEY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Press reports indicate that Senator MURRAY, of Montana, will offer amendment to Relief Act to restore employment to 650,000 W. P. A. workers. As mayor of New Britain I respectfully urge you to support the proposed amendment or to offer one of your own in order that thousands of our people may continue to eat. Situation may become desperate if immediate restoration of employment is not effected.

Mayor GEORGE J. COYLE.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the San Francisco County (Calif.) Council of Labor's Nonpartisan League favoring the repeal of recently enacted legislation affecting the hours and wages of W. P. A. workers and the enactment of legislation restoring certain benefits to workers under the W. P. A., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Ellis Jirous Post No. 53, American Legion, of Perry, Okla., favoring the enactment of legislation to grant a service pension to all veterans of the World War and to all widows and other eligible dependents of deceased veterans of such war, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the New York State Federation of Post Office Clerks praying for the prompt enactment of legislation to grant sick and vacation privileges to substitute employees of the Postal Service, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

W. P. A. RELIEF WORK

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present a letter embodying a resolution from the general board of the Brotherhood of Shoe and Allied Craftsmen, urging the Senate to take action to modify the Work Relief and Relief Act of 1940, so that heads of families and workers over 45 years of age may be exempt from this act. I ask that this letter or petition be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter, in the nature of a petition, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF SHOE AND ALLIED CRAFTSMEN,
Brockton, Mass., July 21, 1939.

The Honorable DAVID I. WALSH,
The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The general board of the Brotherhood of Shoe and Allied Craftsmen at its meeting held on July 17, 1939, has requested me to inform you of its position in regard to the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939 as many of the brotherhood's 12,000 membership are directly affected by the above-mentioned act. At this meeting the general board unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Whereas the Brotherhood of Shoe and Allied Craftsmen is convinced that the right to work is a fundamental human liberty and is unalterably opposed to the substitution of public dole for public work; and

Whereas section 16 (b) of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939 provides for the laying off by September 1, 1939, of all W. P. A. relief workers who have been continuously employed for 18 months, which, in our opinion, will bring great suffering to thousands of such workers who have no other means of sustenance: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Brotherhood of Shoe and Allied Craftsmen, hereby request that you bring before the Senate at once a bill designed to modify this act so that heads of families and workers over 45 years of age be exempted from this section of the act.

We trust that those workers who because of their inability to obtain employment in private industry are forced to depend upon W. P. A. relief work to support themselves and their families will receive your full cooperation as requested in the above resolution.

Very truly yours,

BROTHERHOOD OF SHOE AND ALLIED CRAFTSMEN,
By WALTER V. RISLEY, General President.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF RULES AND NOTES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE FOR DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. HAYDEN. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 162, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 162), submitted by Mr. ASHURST on July 13, 1939, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That House Document No. 460, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, entitled "Rules of Civil Procedure for the District Courts of the United States," and House Document No. 588, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, entitled "Notes to the Rules of the Civil Procedure for the District Courts of the United States," be printed in one volume with an index and bound, as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing; and that 550 additional copies shall be printed, of which 100 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 450 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

FLOOD CONTROL—AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. MINTON each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 6634) amending previous flood-control acts, and authorizing certain preliminary examinations and surveys for flood control, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MOTION TO DISCHARGE COMMITTEE STRICKEN FROM CALENDAR

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, under the heading of "Subjects on the Table," in the calendar of business of the Senate, appears the following:

Motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] to discharge the Committee on Interstate Commerce from further consideration of Senate bill 280.

I move that the motion be indefinitely postponed, and that all reference to it be stricken from the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM FOR FINANCING RECOVERABLE EXPENDITURES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. ASHURST submitted an amendment, and Mr. TAFT submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (S. 2864) to provide for the financing of a program of recoverable expenditures, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 171), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-sixth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2892) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

THE NATIONAL DAIRY PROBLEM—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LA FOLLETTE

RESIGNATION OF HON. JESSE H. JONES

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD a letter to the President of the United States from Hon. Jesse H. Jones, tendering his resignation as a member of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order that he might accept appointment as Federal Loan Administrator, and the President's reply thereto.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, July 15, 1939.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I hereby tender you my resignation as a member of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order that I may accept appointment by you as Federal Loan Administrator under your reorganization plan No. I.

When I came to the R. F. C. upon its establishment, February 2, 1932, it was assumed that the conditions which caused the creation of the Corporation by Congress would soon pass. The breakdown in our financial and economic affairs has been repaired, but the readjustment is taking much longer than any of us expected.

It has been an honor and a privilege to serve as a director of the R. F. C. and as Chairman of its Board during this reconstruction period, and I shall be glad to contribute what I can as Federal Loan Administrator.

My greatest compensation in my R. F. C. work has been the continued confidence and support which you have given me, and the confidence of Congress, my associates in the Corporation, and the business world generally. Whatever success I may have had in furnishing leadership to the organization has been due to that confidence and support.

The Corporation is solvent. It has sound assets sufficient to pay all of its debts and return to the Treasury the entire capital stock invested in it, with something in addition.

I have said on many occasions that the R. F. C. organization is as capable as that of any privately owned business. I wish to emphasize that statement and to bespeak for the organization and for my successor as Chairman the same confidence and support that I have enjoyed. Mr. Schram is competent; the organization is competent. They are in every way worthy of confidence and support.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE H. JONES, Chairman.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 18, 1939.

Hon. JESSE H. JONES,
Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JESSE: I have received and accepted your resignation as a member of the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but I do so only because of your undertaking the work of Federal Loan Administrator.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation under your chairmanship has made an amazing record of financial efficiency, while at the same time assisting many banks, corporations, and individuals to continue solvent and to do their part in giving employment and keeping the wheels of industry turning.

Your statement that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation "has sound assets sufficient to pay all of its debts and return to the Treasury the entire capital stock invested in it, with something in addition," reminds me that in 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 a few people in the executive branch of the Government, more people in the Congress of the United States, and many individuals and newspapers in civil life were announcing to the Nation that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was broke and that the Government would not get back more than 50 cents on the dollar.

These people were in some cases honest in their belief, but in many cases were making these ghoulish statements with the hope that their own type of partisanship would thereby be served. In either case their action did little to encourage the "confidence" they were so loudly talking about. In either case their gloomy predictions proved false.

I call this matter of history to your attention because it is illustrative of the difficulties which public servants find in carrying out their duties.

You, the fellow members of your Board, and all of us who have some confidence in the good sense of the American people, and confidence in the ability of honest government to cope with difficult situations, which have not been solved by wholly private efforts, have a right to some measure of pride in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that when the bill was laid aside yesterday a motion to recommit had been made, and that that motion is now the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The situation is as stated by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that not later than 2 p. m. today the Senate proceed to vote on the motion to recommit; and, if that motion shall be rejected, that the Senate then proceed to vote on the bill and any amendments thereto.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I object, not because I desire to delay final consideration of the bill, but because I am not certain that by 2 o'clock we shall have had a fair opportunity to debate this very important measure. I assure the majority leader, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], that so far as I and anyone else for whom I can speak are concerned, there is no disposition to delay the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. When we were about to adjourn yesterday, I understood it had been tentatively agreed among those who had been conferred with that we would vote today at an hour not later than 12:30, which would have given an hour and a half for debate. I do not wish to shut off any Senator who wishes to discuss the bill; but the Senator will appreciate that it is necessary for us to proceed with some expedition.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I can clarify the situation by saying that I was in accord with that suggestion. However, after consulting with the able Senator from Kansas, I learned that he intended to object.

Mr. BARKLEY. We will let the matter run along for a few minutes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is always my desire, whenever possible, to support the report of a committee of this body. The only way in which we can fairly legislate upon the tremendous number of subjects which come before us is through committees; and with me the report of a committee always has much weight. The report of the committee in this case has much weight. However, there is one outstanding and unusual circumstance attached to the report of the committee. After it made its report upon the question of the number of additional judges which should be approved and authorized, it introduced a witness of its own. Today I shall quote only from the witness brought into the case by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] with the high approval of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

In brief, Mr. President, the bill authorizes the appointment of two additional circuit judges and six additional district judges, being a lesser number than that recommended by the judicial conference, which was headed by the eminent Chief Justice of the United States. The committee took the liberty of not agreeing with the judicial conference. The committee made recommendations away below those of the judicial conference. The 9 or 10 or 11 old men in the case seem to have had not much more weight than "the 9 old men" had with the Congress upon a previous occasion.

But I wish, Mr. President, to call the attention of the Senate to the evidence introduced by a witness brought into this case by the committee itself. I refer to Judge Merrill E. Otis, a district judge of 14 years' experience and service, one of the most eminent jurists in the United States, who wrote an article which was put into the RECORD by the Senator from Vermont. In that article Judge Otis sets up for the first time, to my knowledge, a standard by which this body may be governed in the authorization of additional judges for the circuit and the district bench. I wish to read from the article of Judge Otis, the witness of the committee, in which he used the language which appears on page 9678 of the RECORD of last Friday. At that point Judge Otis went on to speak of the motives which should govern the judicial conference as well as the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in the selection of additional judges, and Judge Otis, in this very learned and able article, speaking of those who advocate more judges, I think rather optimistically, stated:

> They would spurn any effort of any politician to secure the creation of some new judgeship for the mere sake of patronage, although his efforts be buttressed by some specious showing or even by an honest showing of a need obviously transient. Packing a district court with unneeded judges is not only an economic waste; it is degrading and humiliating to every serving judge in the district affected. Responsible statesmen will welcome a measuring stick, if one can be devised, by the application of which to the work to be done in any district it can be determined whether a new judge is needed.

That testimony, Mr. President, was put in the RECORD with the approval of the Senator from Vermont and the approval of the Senator from Arizona, chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Judge Otis did provide a yardstick. I hope every Member of the Senate will read the article of Judge Otis, and really I wish that no Senator could be permitted to vote on this measure until he had read that article.

Mr. President, by the yardstick set up by the eminent witness brought into this picture by members of the committee itself there is not a single district judge recommended who is justified by that yardstick.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly yield at that point?

Mr. REED. I shall ease the mind of the Senator from Nevada if he will let me proceed for a moment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

Mr. REED. Although technically there are none of these additional judgeships that meet the yardstick measurement of Judge Otis, I would be disposed to say that perhaps two exceptions might be made and two additional judges possibly might be justified. I put at the top of that list an additional judge for the southern district of New York, and, because of the statement of the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] yesterday, who said he had made a personal investigation of the matter, I would be inclined to go further and allow one for the southern district of California, although, in all candor, it should be said that we have been allowing southern California additional judges to an extent that really ought to take care of the business there. However, I will, if I can, quiet the mind of the Senator from Nevada by saying that I shall not object to an additional judge for the southern district of California.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, now will the Senator kindly yield?

Mr. REED. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I, first of all, dispel the idea that I am at all interested from the standpoint of patronage, for I have no patronage in California. I was selected by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to go into California to investigate conditions in the Federal courts in that State, and especially in the southern district of California. I did so impartially; and I say "impartially" because I have no personal interest whatever in California. There is no involvement of jurisdiction; there is nothing that crosses the State line except that California comes over to Nevada once in a while to get some money and take it back to California.

Mr. REED. May I break in on the Senator at that point?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I have been around Arizona and Nevada to a considerable extent, and I was under the impression that it was the hope of citizens of Arizona and Nevada that when they died they would go to California instead of going to Heaven. Perhaps that is not correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is the most incorrect statement ever uttered. May I say that my one outstanding idea of Heaven is that I may live and abide for eternity in the breast of my Saviour in Nevada. I would not select any other place of all the places of the earth save and except the place of my birth. So the Senator need have no concern in that respect.

But recurring to the original question, let me say to the Senator that the yardstick of Judge Otis, if it were applied to practical conditions and facts in the southern district of California it would apply a hundred percent, for I may say to the able Senator, that there is a limit of human endurance; men cannot work over 18 or 20 hours a day mentally or physically, and the judges in southern California are working to the very limit, to an extent that some of them have been broken down in health.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from Nevada that I am not a lawyer, but I understand when a lawyer wins his case that is enough. I have said to the Senator from Nevada that, so far as I was concerned, I was not going to object to an additional judge for southern California. Does not that satisfy the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. McCARRAN. If the able Senator from Kansas is not a lawyer he will do until we find another one. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I have led a fairly respectable life up to this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. That makes the Senator a lawyer.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we have heard much in this country about "court packing." I disagreed profoundly with the President of the United States in what was called his "court packing" plan, not because I agreed with the decisions of the Court, but because I did not like the method of the President. But I am just as much opposed to "court packing" by the courts themselves through a judicial conference as I am to "court packing" in any other way. I desire to read further upon this point from the testimony of the distinguished witness, who was brought into this case by the Judiciary Committee itself. Judge Otis, in a footnote referring to that part of his statement which I have already read, says:

> Regretfully it must be said that instances of such efforts have been numerous.

That is to say, efforts to increase the number of judges upon the bench of the circuit and district courts for the purpose of increasing patronage. That is what Judge Otis was referring to in his footnote.

I charge the mind of the Senate with this statement:

> Even the Conference of Senior Circuit Judges occasionally has been misled to suggest additional judgeships where there was no need. The conference and Congress would do well to consult the district judges on the ground and the organized bar, not for recommendations but for facts. They might hope to get accurate information from such sources.

Mr. President, every lawyer—and most of the Members of this body are lawyers—every student of public questions knows that litigation is declining. It is the complaint of lawyers everywhere that, because of the decline in litigation, they are having more and more difficulty in earning a living practicing law. It is the testimony of judges generally that, because of that fact, their terms of court are shorter. Yet in the period of the past 15 or 20 years there have been appointed additionally to the district and circuit courts of the United States the following number of judges:

Under the Harding administration, 26 additional district judges were appointed and 1 circuit judge.

Under the Coolidge administration, 22 district and 2 circuit judges.

Under the present administration, 41 additional district judges and 7 circuit judges.

And now we are faced with a recommendation from the judicial conference for additional judges, both district and circuit.

Let me use as an illustration the policy of the judicial conference as to my own State of Kansas. The judicial conference and the Attorney General recommended an additional district judge for Kansas. My colleague the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who sits here at my left, and I told the chairman of the Judiciary Committee that Kansas did not need an additional judge. We did not want to take the responsibility for incurring an expenditure which was not justified by the appointment for life of a man who, once in office, could be removed only through impeachment. Therefore, we asked the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to leave Kansas out of the bill, and he did so. Yet, by the yardstick of Judge Otis, not only does every one of the courts for which these additional judges are recommended fail to meet the requirement but in most cases they fall below what actually is taking place in the United States court in Kansas.

I desire to say, for the information of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee—I am speaking now to the question of the bill being recommitted—that if that motion fails—it should not fail, but if it does fail—I expect to offer several amendments to the bill. I make my last appeal, without much hope of its being accepted, to the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the committee, and to the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], a member of the committee, and say to them that in this situation I should infinitely prefer to recommit the bill to the committee, to let the committee take up these questions and work them out where they will have more time, where the work can be done more intelligently, where that kind of work ought to be done, than to try to amend the bill from the floor. The latter is not a good way to legislate, and I should be very much happier if my very good friend the Senator from Arizona—whose graciousness is so well known—in the light of the testimony of his own witnesses, and in the light of what the committee knows, would agree to recommit the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. So far from feeling any irritation, I honor the able Senator from Kansas for the performance of his duty and his able defense of his view.

The able Senator urges that the bill be recommitted. I shall state the reason why I shall not support the motion, if the Senator will permit me to do so. The judicial conference—and I need not describe it; every Senator knows what it is—urged that provision be made not only for all the judges mentioned in the bill but for at least 10 or 12 additional judges. The Attorney General likewise urged that provision be made for 10 or 12 more judges than are in this bill; whereupon, I say now, as I said yesterday, that the Committee on the Judiciary early last year addressed itself to the question of additional judges. The Committee on the Judiciary made this problem its first business. At great inconvenience to many Senators, I, as chairman, sent one Senator into the eighth circuit, one into the seventh, one into the sixth, and they made a personal investigation. They examined the dockets; they conversed with the clerks; they conversed with the lawyers and the judges. After personal investigation, they brought back their report, to the effect that those named in the bill were the only judges needed, and that the additional 8 or 10 judges recommended by the judicial conference were not now needed.

Suppose the bill were recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. There is nothing more that we could do. We should not be justified in sending Senators again personally to examine the dockets. What new facts would we obtain? What more may we do? I cannot too highly commend the diligence of the special committee in this matter.

I am going to mention a name. For example, I committed to the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] the delicate and important task of investigating the first and second circuits to ascertain what, if any, additional judges are necessary. The able Senator from Vermont, with a diligence that is most commendable, made his investigation and submitted his report; the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously supported his report, and I am certain will continue to do so.

I say again we have reduced this bill to an irreducible minimum. If the Senate should vote to recommit the bill to the committee I should feel no irritation, but it would simply mean that there would be no judicial bill. I assure the Senator that if the bill shall be recommitted we can do no more than we now have done.

I thank the Senator for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Vermont will take no offense at what I am about to say, that despite the very earnest efforts and all the investigation and the report the committee made, it is common gossip upon the floor and in the cloakrooms that with the exception of the southern district of New York and the southern district of California, many members of the committee itself are in serious doubt as to whether any of the other additional judges are justified.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that may be true. For years I was afflicted with the vice of listening to and sometimes being guided or rather misguided by gossip. In reconstructing my plan of life many years ago I made it my first business never to be guided in any matter, large or small, by gossip, but only by facts. How much this gossip will influence Senators will be determined when the roll is called.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is giving evidence that he is going to make a superb United States Senator. He is already giving vouchers that he is going to be a useful Senator; but I warn him respectfully, of course, that in great matters or small matters, if he listens to gossip—the greatest gossipers on earth are United States Senators—he will put a bad mark on the splendid career he otherwise would make.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I assure the Senator that some of the gossip comes from such high sources on the committee that I could not possibly disregard it.

Mr. ASHURST. I must be fair enough to say, if the Senator will permit, and I say it frankly, by no means did the entire committee agree with all the provisions of this bill. The committee was unanimous in the conclusion that there should be no judges other than those mentioned in this bill, but I do not want to be understood as saying that all the members of the committee voted for the creation of all these judgeships in this bill. Personally, I voted for them all, and if I had not thought I was right I would not have done so.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Unfortunately I was not able to be present and hear all the remarks of the Senator from Kansas, and I wondered whether there was any doubt in his mind as to the necessity for an additional judge in the southern district of New York.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from New York that I have already stated that, so far as I am concerned, and so far as I know, so far as those who feel as I do about the matter are concerned, there will not be any objection to the recommendation of the committee for an additional judge for the southern district of New York.

Mr. WAGNER. My reason for making the inquiry is that I introduced originally the bill providing an additional judge, and I did it only after an investigation I had made, not as thorough an investigation as that made by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], but sufficient to satisfy me of the absolute need. I may say to the Senator that unless I were convinced there was a need I certainly would not be for it.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from New York and to the Senator from Vermont that I, even as a layman, realize that there is quite a difference in the character of litigation, or there may be a difference, that the number of cases, which is the main yardstick used by Judge Otis, is not an infallible yardstick, and Judge Otis does not so contend.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no disposition to argue with my distinguished friend the senior Senator from New York as to the necessity of an additional judge for the southern district of New York; but I recall that just a few years ago, some 3 years ago, when a bill was pending in the Senate for two additional judges in the southern district of New York, there was actually a vacancy permitted to exist for a period in excess of a year in order that three judges might be appointed at one time.

Mr. REED. While the Senator from Missouri is on the floor, I may say to him that the committee report is remarkable in that it contains a recommendation for an additional judge for the district of New Jersey when a vacancy on the district bench in that State has existed for 18 months. Yet the committee brings in a report recommending an additional judge, which can only be justified on the ground of more work than the court can do, when there has been an 18 months' vacancy due to the inability of Boss Frank Hague to determine whom he wants appointed judge. But the committee brings in a report for an additional judge in New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. If the bill shall be recommitted, that will be the end of it. If the bill shall not be recommitted, I expect to offer an amendment striking out the provision for an additional judge for New Jersey, under the circumstances.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. I should like to say to the Senator from Kansas that I hope he knows more about the State of Kansas than he does about New Jersey. There has been no vacancy existing in the State of New Jersey for 18 months, and the inability of Boss Frank Hague to decide who is going to be the judge is not the reason why the vacancy has not been filled.

Mr. REED. I understand Boss Hague decides everything in New Jersey. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMATHERS. That may be true for Kansas, but it is not true for New Jersey.

Mr. REED. I was speaking about New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Kansas that the vacancy which has existed in the United States district court judgeship in New Jersey for 9 or 10 months has nothing in the world to do with the fact that we need an additional judge there, because we promoted one of the United States district court judges to the circuit bench, and more than half of the time since he was promoted he has been sitting as a United States district court judge.

Mr. REED. But the Senator does not mean to say that the vacancy caused by the promotion will not ultimately be filled, if it has not been already, does he?

Mr. SMATHERS. I mean to say to the Senator that there were in the Federal district court of my State of New Jersey 400 cases which were over 2 years old, before the vacancy occurred.

Mr. REED. The number of cases which may be 2 years old, or 1 year old, or 3 years old, is as much a matter of the attitude of the litigants and their counsel as it is of the time of the court. In all litigation there is one side or the other which is perfectly willing that a decision shall never be rendered. So the length of time that some cases may be hanging on the calendar or the docket of the court is not important.

Tested by the yardstick of Judge Otis, the New Jersey district does not need any relief. Judge Otis stated that, after making allowance for various facts and reducing the yardstick materially so as to get it down to a sound basis—and if New Jersey has any judges as able as Merrill Otis, it is to be congratulated——

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. In just a moment I will yield to my Republican colleague.

The records show that in the New Jersey district, per judge, 97 Government civil cases were filed in 1938, and 127 private civil cases, a total of 217, and the yardstick of Judge Otis showed that a judge should be able to handle, in addition to his criminal work, 200 civil cases in which the Government is a party, and 200 civil cases in which there are private litigants.

In Kansas by the same yardstick the 1 judge is handling 240 cases a year, against an average of 217 in New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator from Kansas think that the three district court judges now presiding in New Jersey, all Republicans, and my distinguished Republican colleague, would all support this application for an additional district court judge in New Jersey if he were not needed?

Mr. REED. I am very fond of my Republican colleague from New Jersey, but I fear he has a weakness, so far as New Jersey is concerned, which will at least deter me from fully accepting any recommendations he may make regarding New Jersey without looking the animal in the teeth. [Laughter.]

I now yield to the junior Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I plead guilty to the weakness with which the Senator charges me, for certainly my desire to see that what is right and just for New Jersey is always done for New Jersey is no less than that entertained by my colleague or anyone else in New Jersey.

I was about to say, before my colleague spoke, that certainly I cannot possibly be accused of any partisan or selfish interest, particularly in connection with this additional judgeship in New Jersey. At present all the district judges in the State of New Jersey are Republican judges, and if I wanted to play partisan politics or be selfish in my own personal political interest, I would, of course, do everything I could, in the closing days of this session to prevent any new judges being appointed, because obviously they undoubtedly would both be Democratic judges. But I am not now playing politics and never will do so, certainly so far as the judiciary is concerned.

As my colleague has stated, the district judges of the State of New Jersey are unanimously, all three of them, in support of this proposed legislation, which would enable two new judges to be appointed. The district judges of New Jersey know that these additional judgeships are definitely needed in the public interest. I know them all and I trust them all. I believe in them all. They have written to me that they are in favor of the creation of these judgeships. They have written and told me they are in favor of these new judgeships because they are necessary—absolutely necessary. The Bar Association of the State of New Jersey also urges the creation of these new judgeships in New Jersey and for the same reason. Many important attorneys, some of whom I have known all my life, who have no partisan interest in the matter, speak of the necessity for these two new judgeships.

Mr. President, I realize that there was a delay in filling the vacancy which was caused when Judge William Clark was promoted to the circuit bench. I most certainly do not condone the delay in filling that vacancy. Naturally, I was not consulted with respect to the situation, and there was nothing that I could do about it. I was not involved. As I understand, the delay grew out of a difference between my colleague [Mr. SMATHERS] and other powers that be in the State of New Jersey.

Mr. REED. Meaning Mr. Frank Hague, of Jersey City?

Mr. BARBOUR. Meaning Mr. Frank Hague, of Jersey City. Perhaps I should also add the Governor. But in any event, Mr. President, entirely aside from that unfortunate and regrettable delay, or the reason for it, or the justification for it, if there was any, which I do not admit, I think it was occasioned very largely by the desire on the part of my colleague—if I understand the situation correctly—that the new judge to fill that vacancy should come from the southern part of the State, while Frank Hague and possibly others wanted the new judge to come from the northern section of the State.

Mr. President, the point I am trying to make is that entirely aside from that inexcusable delay—and I never have condoned the delay—there never was at any time any question whatever about the absolute necessity for the additional judge to fill the vacancy caused by Judge Clark's elevation to the circuit court. We are dealing with the necessity—not a quarrel between Democrats in New Jersey—a necessity not only for a judge to fill the vacancy, but a judge to fill the additional judgeship which is created by the bill. Both are necessary, and that is the reason, the only reason, I am for this proposed legislation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I may suggest to my good friend the Senator from New Jersey that the figures do not bear him out. His district, per judge, is far below the average of the country as a whole. His area is below the standard set by Judge Otis, way below what we are doing in Kansas; and New Jersey has a vacancy in a judgeship, a vacancy which it was stated here yesterday has continued for 18 months.

I made inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] this morning to confirm that statement, because I am using the statement made on the floor yesterday as to the length of time the vacancy in New Jersey has existed. I have no knowledge of my own concerning it. It was stated yesterday that the vacancy had existed for 18 months. The Senator from Connecticut told me this morning that the vacancy had existed for 18 months. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey how long the vacancy has continued?

Mr. BARBOUR. I think what the Senator stated is probably correct. Of my own knowledge I do not know the exact number of months, but I do not challenge the statement that it was 18 months.

Mr. REED. Then, is it not ridiculous, when a district in which there are now three judges shows a less load per judge than the average of the country, according to the yardstick of Judge Otis, a district where a vacancy has existed for 18 months, that the Committee on the Judiciary should bring in a report recommending an additional judge for that district? If that is not the height of absurdity, then I do not know what it is; and I challenge my distinguished friend, the Senator from Arizona, for whom I have deep affection and high respect, to reconcile such a situation with good legislation and sound public policy.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me, since he asked me the question?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Long ago I learned to depend upon the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] as a Senator and public servant because I found that he was usually accurate. I am beginning to learn to depend upon the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] likewise. When I want information as to Kansas I do not go to New Jersey. I believe that WARREN BARBOUR and WILLIAM SMATHERS know more about New Jersey than the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] knows about New Jersey. Likewise, I believe that ARTHUR CAPPER and CLYDE REED know more about Kansas than the New Jersey Senators know about Kansas.

When I wish information I go to those who in reason are supposed to have the information. With due deference to the able speech made by the junior Senator from Kansas, I chose to follow the reasoned judgment of the Republican Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], whom I esteem, and in whose judgment I believe, and the reasoned judgment and conclusions of the Democratic Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], rather than the judgment of the Senator from Kansas, who I am sure has never made a close investigation of the judicial situation in New Jersey.

In other words, Senators will pardon me when I follow the New Jersey Senators in respect to New Jersey matters, and the Kansas Senators in respect to Kansas matters.

Mr. REED. May I inquire of the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, whether he accepted at 100-percent face value the recommendation of every Senator regarding the requested increase in the number of judges in his State? Will the Senator answer "yes" or "no"?

Mr. ASHURST. My answer is "Yes."

Mr. REED. Then I say that on that statement alone the report of the committee should be recommitted. Any important committee of the Senate which undertakes to rely upon local influence, local advice, local demands, 100 percent, is not entitled to an unquestioned vote of the Senate, nor should the measure be passed without the severest scrutiny and criticism.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I respect the judgment of the Senators from Kansas, and let me say that I will not mention any State except the State of Kansas. I do not feel at liberty to mention other States. The Senators from Kansas made a request of me in a most respectful way, and they had a right to do so. They said, "We do not want a new judge in Kansas." I said, "I shall kill the bill, then, if I can, before you get another judge in Kansas."

Mr. REED. The Senator was very gracious about it.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senators from another State—I shall not mention the name of the State unless they ask me to do so—said, "If you will put a judge for our State in the bill, we will kill it." I said, "There will be no new judge for your State."

The Senators from still another State—I continue to refrain from mentioning the name of the State—requested that no new judge be named for their State. I said to them, "So far as I am concerned, there will not be a new judgeship for your State in the bill, if I am going to manage the bill, if the Senators from that State are against such a proposal."

Mr. President, I feel safe in trusting Senators. When a Senator says, "I need an additional clerk," I am willing to vote favorably on his request. If we cannot trust him in the matter of a clerkship, we cannot trust him to manage the important and vital affairs of the Government.

I do not say that I would be in favor of having legislation passed simply because the two Senators from a State should walk in and say, "We want another judge for our State," but I say that when the Senators agree in making the request, and the record bears them out, I am willing to support the proposition.

The same statement applies to forest preserves. If a Senator were to say to me, "I do not want any more forest preserves in my State," I would adopt his view.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Perhaps I should not interrupt him?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield. Perhaps I have said enough.

Mr. BARBOUR. No; the distinguished Senator from Arizona never says enough. But, anyway, I do not charge the Senator from Kansas with prejudice or with having charged me with trying to exert what I think he termed influence, or trying to get power. Certainly in my case in this instance that absolutely could not possibly be so. There is, moreover, probably no Republican in the whole State of New Jersey who is known to be politically more absolutely opposed to or forthrightly against Frank Hague than myself. I want that to be clearly understood by everyone, both here in the Senate as it is back home in New Jersey. Moreover, I have not heard from Mayor Hague in this whole connection, as I have not communicated with him or would not do so. So much for the subject of Frank Hague so far as I am concerned. But, as the Senator from Kansas has based his information on the reports of judges and others who have come here and said that on the basis of the review they feel this way and that way, I am basing my information as a United States Senator and as a citizen of the State of New Jersey and, regardless of my party affiliation, on what I know to be the necessity for these additional judgeships. That is why, as I have said before, I am for these additional judgeships. Even despite the fact that of necessity they will be Democratic appointments, that is entirely beside the point so far as I am concerned.

Mr. President, as I have said, I do not criticize the Senator from Kansas for his position, and I do not want him to criticize me for mine. There are frequently grounds for an honest and friendly difference of opinion as to these sort of facts. I honestly believe my facts are correct. The Senator from Kansas believes his facts are correct.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. They are not my facts. They are the official record—that is all.

Mr. BARBOUR. Well, Mr. President, the official record deals academically with just numbers of cases. We all know that districts vary very greatly, and the character of cases varies very greatly. In the discussion of certain types of legal cases here a few days ago between the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and another Senator who was engaging him in colloquy at the time, it was admitted that some of the cases in the southern district of New York took as long as 2 years to be disposed of. Very obviously one cannot compare those cases with cases of other sorts in other areas which take a very short time to dispose of. I know we have good hard-working judges in the State of New Jersey, and I know they cannot keep abreast of their dockets. They must have additional judges to help them if justice is to be properly administered in my State.

Mr. President, personally I am very sorry that the vacancy in New Jersey was not filled. It of course should have been filled long ago, but as I have stated that is really not the issue. The issue is, Are two additional judgeships necessary? And there is nothing in the record anywhere which at any time refuted the necessity for these additional judgeships—both of them.

Mr. REED. Will not the Senator concede that if that judge had been working we would have had the equivalent for the past 18 months of an additional judge? And that is all that the bill gives the State.

Mr. BARBOUR. I never denied that. That is that the vacancy we have spoken of so often should have been filled long ago.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. When the junior Senator from New Jersey has completed I shall be happy to yield to the senior Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am glad to yield. All I wanted to do was to make my position absolutely clear and make sure that everyone understands just why I take the position I do in this whole connection.

Mr. REED. I will now yield to the senior Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. I wish to say to the Senator from Kansas, so that he will not again become excited and exercised over the 18-month vacancy, that the vacancy took place last year. During the closing hours of the previous session of Congress Judge Clark was confirmed as a circuit court judge. Instead of qualifying as a circuit court judge he continued as a district court judge for all of last year, and tried a great number of district court issues up until practically the first of January of this year. So, as a matter of fact, the vacancy has existed from January 1 of this year until the present time.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from New Jersey will get his calendar straight, the Congress adjourned last year in June.

Mr. SMATHERS. In June.

Mr. REED. We are now approaching August 1939.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator from Kansas misses the point every time I try to bring it home to him.

Mr. REED. I have not been able to understand that there is any point.

Mr. SMATHERS. Oh, yes; there is a point. I am sure the Senator will get it if he listens. At least, I have hope.

Mr. REED. The Senator should not be too optimistic. He will have to make the point much plainer than he has made it up to this time.

Mr. SMATHERS. I realize that. I want to bring home this point to the Senator from Kansas: Although Judge Clark was confirmed by the Senate in June of last year, he did not take office as a circuit court judge, but continued to serve practically throughout all of last year, doing district court work as a district court judge before he resigned his position. Does the Senator from Kansas get that point, or does he want to get it?

Mr. REED. I heard the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. All right.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I told the majority leader——

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to delay the conclusion of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. REED. I assure the Senator that there will be a quorum call. Let me say to the Senator from New York that I would not want to take a vote at this time, because nearly all the Senators now in the Chamber are interested in additional judges, and I certainly would not hazard a vote in the group now present. We will have a quorum call before we vote.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator really has not a sufficient appreciation of what Senators regard as their obligation. I am sure the Judiciary Committee has never had the experience of a Member of the Senate coming before it asking for additional judges unless he was able to support his request by statistics indicating the necessity therefor. No Senator would do such a thing; and after the Senator has been in the Senate a little longer he will know that to be a fact.

The Senator has suggested that political considerations are creeping into this legislation for additional judges. In the first place, the Judiciary Committee, above all others so far as I know, has the reputation of not permitting political considerations to creep into its discussion of legislation pending before it with reference to the judiciary.

I think some of us consider these matters above mere politics. There were two vacancies in the circuit court of appeals, one of them created last year as the result of some legislation which I introduced. I myself had the pleasure of endorsing two candidates for those offices. Both are members of the Senator's party, but they stood so high in the profession that I did not hesitate to recommend them for that office. I think the Senator is not accepting the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee to guard against mere rumors and to rely upon facts.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from New York will permit the observation, no one is so simple as to accept the correctness of the statement that Senators are not at times—not always, but frequently—interested in the political considerations attaching to the appointment of judges and the creation of judgeships. All that the distinguished Senator from New York can say from now until the debate closes will not change that fact in the minds of the people.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator think that a Senator would deliberately recommend an additional judge, although he knew that such additional judge was not needed?

Mr. REED. I think it has been done; yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I know of no such case.

Mr. REED. I think it has been done.

Mr. WAGNER. I cannot think of a Senator who would make such a recommendation under those circumstances.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to read briefly, and then I shall conclude, so far as the motion to recommit is concerned. Of course, I want it distinctly understood that some amendments will be offered to the bill in an effort to reach the most glaring examples of things that ought not to be done. In my humble judgment, with due deference to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and my very good friend the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is not now present, the committee should have taken care of that matter.

I wish to quote again from Judge Otis:

> Packing a district court with unneeded judges is not only an economic waste; it is degrading and humiliating to every serving judge in the district affected.

Judge Otis continues:

> Regretfully—

I wish the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] were present—

> Regretfully, it must be said that instances of such efforts have been numerous.

This is a United States judge of long experience speaking.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator reading from Judge Otis' statement?

Mr. REED. I am reading from a footnote written by Judge Otis to his own remarks, explaining them.

Mr. BORAH. Where were the remarks made? Were they made before a committee?

Mr. REED. They were made in an article written for and printed in the University of Kansas City Law Review for June 1939, entitled "The Business of United States District Courts," by Merrill E. Otis.

Mr. BORAH. I know Judge Otis. I esteem him very highly. I would not make any suggestions which would reflect on his integrity of mind when he makes these statements. However, I have been on the Judiciary Committee for 30 years, and I have had an opportunity to observe the workings of that committee. I wish to say that, in my opinion, the present chairman of that committee would not for a moment brook any improper action on the part of anyone in the selection of judges if he knew of it. As Judge Otis says, there may be instances in which such things as he refers to occurred.

Mr. REED. He said there were numerous instances.

Mr. BORAH. Does he give the numerous instances in the footnote?

Mr. REED. No. Judge Otis said:

> Regretfully it must be said that instances of such efforts have been numerous.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to God that in this country politics were cleaned out of other departments as thoroughly as is the case in the judicial department of the United States. Of course, there are exceptions, but taking the history of our judiciary as a whole, it is a proud story.

Mr. REED. I wish to complete the reading of what Judge Otis said. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Idaho that I am merely trying to bring the situation to the attention of the Senate and of the country.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is quite within his duty in bringing all the facts to the attention of the Senate. I am not criticizing him at all. However, it does not help us on the Judiciary Committee to say that these things occur without giving any instances in which they have occurred.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Idaho, being the dean of the Senate, knows that one Senator does not go around digging into some other Senator's patronage preserves when it is not any of his individual business.

Mr. BORAH. If that be true, there is no use in our debating the question.

Mr. REED. Senators do not do that. The Senator knows that as well as anyone.

Mr. BORAH. It does not help us to say that judges are being selected for political reasons without citing specific instances.

Mr. REED. I am quoting a distinguished and experienced United States judge literally, and reading his exact language. If I may proceed, he says:

> Even the conference of senior circuit judges occasionally have been misled to suggest additional judgeships where there was no need.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, we have to operate the Government with human beings; and they make mistakes. However, I am now speaking of those who willfully do the things about which the Senator speaks. I am happy to say that I think such instances are rare, indeed. As a lawyer, as a Senator, and as a citizen I have learned to deeply respect the American judiciary.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have not been in the Chamber during all of the Senator's discussion.

Mr. REED. I am very sorry. The Senator from New Mexico would have been highly edified. I am trying to do with the judicial situation what the Senator has been so successful in doing with the political situation.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say to the Senator from Kansas that if he has been criticizing the Judiciary Committee for its lack of fidelity to duty in the recommendation of judges, the Senator from Kansas is the last Senator who should make that charge, for this reason—and I ask the Senator if I am not correct: The judicial conference has recommended, and the Attorney General has recommended, for 2, 3, or perhaps more years, that an additional judgeship be created in the State of Kansas.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. And the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate has gone through that recommendation, not once but several times, and in this bill has refused to follow the recommendation of the conference, and has not reported an additional judge for the State of Kansas.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. HATCH. The committee was right, was it not?

Mr. REED. The committee did the proper thing; yes, sir. I am giving the committee credit for it. I am criticizing the committee for some of the recommendations which it has made in the bill—not all of them, but some of them—and if and when the time comes to offer amendments to the bill these matters will be developed more in detail as to specific cases.

Mr. HATCH. I merely mention that to call to the mind of the Senator from Kansas and of the Senate the fact that the committee has been more than careful; that we have excluded judges whom we did not think were necessary. Only yesterday I stood on the floor of the Senate and told about another judge provision for whom was excluded from the bill, although there was need and use in that case for an additional judge in the particular circuit. There is no question about that. All the judges agree as to the need, but the committee decided that it was not absolutely necessary that the additional judge in that case be provided, and so the committee eliminated the provision for him. We have tried to provide for judges on the basis of need.

Mr. REED. And sometimes the committee had to go contrary to the recommendations of the Judicial Conference, headed by the Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. As the Senator from Idaho has just explained, they make mistakes; they are human beings, and perhaps we have been mistaken in refusing to follow them. Perhaps they were right; we may have been mistaken, but we exercised the best judgment we had.

Mr. REED. Let me say to the Senator from New Mexico that I am merely trying now to help the committee acquire information by which it may, or the Senate may, correct the mistakes.

Mr. HATCH. It would be no help to the committee to recommit the bill. If there is any judgeship that ought to be eliminated and stricken from the bill, well and good; that would help; but to recommit the whole bill merely in order to strike out provision for one judge would be wrong.

Mr. REED. I am sorry the Senator from New Mexico was not present——

Mr. HATCH. I am also sorry.

Mr. REED. When I stated I preferred to handle these matters through the committee, I thought that was the better, the more intelligent, the more systematic way to do it; I always prefer to operate through the committees; but it is now late in the session and there are provisions in the bill for the appointment of three additional judges whose appointment I think would be an outrage from the standpoint of public policy.

The first thing to do—and I would rather have the committee do it—would be for the committee to take the bill back and reconsider the matter. I made an appeal to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to do that, without intending any reflection upon him or upon the committee. We have heretofore recommitted bills. There is nothing novel about it. We have done it sometimes, in fact, usually in the face of the opposition of the committee itself. I probably would feel that way about it if a bill were to be recommitted to a committee of which I was a member. But there are some things in the bill that I think do need correction; and I am not alone in that view; it has been freely voiced on the floor within the last few days, and probably will be continued to be voiced.

Mr. President, I have taken much more time than I had intended. I want to respect the courts; I differed with the President of the United States as to his method of "court packing" without undertaking to justify or defend the opinions of the Court, which I thought were open to criticism. But, further than that, I want the courts to respect themselves; I want the legislative agencies of this Government to help preserve the courts in their full integrity, and I want the machinery of this body to respond and operate in a way that will keep the judiciary as clean as may be. That is the only purpose for my appearance on this floor.

I have no present personal interest in a single one of these cases. I am only discharging what I conceive to be a public duty in the interest of a sound public policy.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, just a word. I think in justice to Judge Otis a brief extract from his remarkably fine work should be read. I read from page 222 of the reprint.

> The measuring stick devised will not be sufficiently accurate to measure thirty-seconds of an inch; it will be sufficiently accurate to measure miles. What has been done by a judge can be done again. And if some single judge, by reason of special capacity, can do more than the average judge, so that his record, considered alone, is not a measure of great value, the average work of several judges will be a useful and valuable measure.

That is the end of what I want to read. There is no need of any comment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. REED. May I not ask the distinguished Senator from Vermont whether or not in establishing his yardstick Judge Otis reduced it from the maximum? He eliminated a number of factors so as to bring his yardstick down to what he very strongly intimated and probably directly stated was the reasonable applicable yardstick for practical application.

Mr. AUSTIN. I can show exactly how much he reduced it. He reduced it with respect to the 10 districts which he used for his test, that is, the 10 most busy districts, from 492 for criminal cases to 400; from 227 for civil cases in which the Government was interested to 200, and from 221 cases of all other kinds to 200.

Then he made another comparison, that is, a comparison with his own western district of Missouri, where there are two judges. In that case he reduced his figure from 574 criminal cases to 400; from 248 civil cases in which the Government was interested to 200, and from 241 civil cases of all other kinds to 200.

Mr. REED. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Vermont if I have not used the reduced figure used by Judge Otis in making his yardstick in every case?

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DANAHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The CHIEF CLERK called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	La Follette	Russell
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	George	Lucas	Shipstead
Barbour	Gerry	McCarran	Smathers
Barkley	Gibson	McKellar	Stewart
Bilbo	Gillette	McNary	Taft
Bone	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Gurney	Miller	Tobey
Brown	Hale	Minton	Townsend
Bulow	Harrison	Murray	Truman
Burke	Hatch	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hayden	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Herring	Nye	Wagner
Capper	Hill	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Chavez	Hughes	Pepper	White
Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Danaher	King	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DANAHER. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GREEN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and therefore withhold my vote. I am not informed how the Senator from Virginia would vote if present. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] is absent on official business. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on important public business. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "nay."

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent because of illness in their families.

Mr. STEWART. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who, I am advised, if present and voting, would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 63, as follows:

So Mr. DANAHER's motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary was rejected.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in view of the vote, I think the fact should be called to the attention of the Senate that I made the motion for the reasons stated yesterday, and also in the belief that no possible harm could come were the motion to prevail, with the chance that a very real amount of good would ultimately be accomplished if the need for additional judges should later prove to be not established, or at least dissipated, as the result of pending legislation which will become effective. The fact that the Judiciary Committee has adequately considered the situation on the basis of present needs is clear. Feeling, as I do, that the confidence which we all have in the Judiciary Committee should be reasserted, I wish to state that on the question of the passage of the bill itself I shall vote for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "district of New Jersey."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there are some other amendments to follow the one now pending. I am offering this amendment because of the peculiar circumstance that there has been a vacancy in the New Jersey district for 18 months, according to the information the Senator from Connecticut had, and for about 14 months according to the information given me today by the senior Senator from New Jersey.

I think it is a wholly inconsistent thing for this body to vote an additional judge for a district where the work is below the average per judge of the districts of the country when there has been a vacancy in that district, and the judge not working, for a year or more. Therefore, I offer the amendment to cut out of the bill the provision for that judge.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. SMATHERS] was, I think, absent when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] offered the amendment and first began to discuss it. I did not want action taken in my colleague's absence. Now, I am not going to repeat what I said earlier in this whole connection, so I will merely repeat that I join my colleague in hoping that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, it is not my desire to take any additional time of the Senate. I am certain that my colleagues will be guided by the resolution of the New Jersey State Bar Association and of all of the other organizations which have gone on record in requesting this additional judgeship.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

ORDER OF BUSINESS—TRUTH-IN-FABRIC BILL

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before a vote is taken on the pending question, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate once more the situation which exists with respect to the truth-in-fabric bill. That measure was passed by the Senate on Friday last, and the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], after the vote was taken, rose and entered a motion to reconsider.

It would have been quite possible for any one of the Senators who had voted for the bill immediately to have moved to reconsider and then to have moved to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, but the motion was not made, out of regard for the senior Senator from Oklahoma, who stated upon the floor that it was his purpose to seek some information with respect to the effect of the bill.

Yesterday when the Senate assembled, and the genial senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] announced that the judicial bill would be laid aside temporarily at any time for the consideration of the motion to reconsider, or for the substitution of the works-financing bill, some of us who were in favor of the truth-in-fabric bill, and who desired immediate action upon the motion to reconsider, called the attention of the Senate to the parliamentary condition in which the bill was, and at that time the senior Senator from Oklahoma announced that he was waiting for a telegram which would arrive in his office within a few minutes.

Thereupon, it being about 12:15 o'clock, I sought to obtain unanimous consent to fix a time for the consideration of the motion to reconsider. The Senator from Oklahoma was unwilling to grant that consent, and again out of courtesy to the desire of the Senator to obtain additional information, the friends of the truth-in-fabric bill refrained from making a motion to reconsider, and promptly moving to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. President, it begins to appear, though I cannot say this with any definiteness, that the intention is to prevent the will of the Senate from being effectuated. Under the rules of the Senate, a motion to reconsider may be made during the next 2 days of actual session after a vote is taken. Yesterday was the first day of actual session after the vote was taken on the truth-in-fabric bill and today is the second day. The rules of the Senate were made for the purpose of effectuating the will of the Senate.

Mr. President, I am altogether unwilling to permit the judicial bill to be voted upon, or to permit any other business to be carried forward in this body, until the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed by the Senate last Friday shall be taken up for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It had been my purpose upon the conclusion of the consideration of the judicial bill, which I think is near a vote, to cooperate in bringing up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed, and if no other Senator made a motion to lay that motion on the table I intended myself to make it, in order that the matter might be speedily disposed of.

I think it is unfortunate and will be unfortunate if we are prevented by any method from voting upon the bill which is now pending merely because we have not yet reached a point where we can consider the motion to reconsider. I will cooperate completely and fully with the Senator, and I have no reason to believe that the Senator from Oklahoma has any desire to delay the consideration of his motion. But it is susceptible of easy disposition by the motion to which the Senator from Wyoming has referred, and I hope that the Senator will not carry out what seems to be the implication of his remarks, and prevent a vote on the pending bill until we can take up the motion and dispose of it, because the sooner we can dispose of the judicial bill the sooner we may dispose of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am an inexperienced Member of this body——

Mr. BARKLEY. I should have to demur to that statement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not an expert in parliamentary procedure, but I will say to the Senator that during the course of the afternoon I have received some very valuable advice from the senior Senator from Arizona. The senior Senator from Arizona, meeting me in the cloakroom only about an hour ago, I think gave me some very wise advice when I was discussing this matter with him. He said, "Young man"—he complimented me by using that phrase.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not beyond the Senator's deserts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator. The Senator from Arizona said, "You must remember that the first rule of the Senate is lex talionis," the law of the claw.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the Senator from Arizona explain the meaning of that to the Senator? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I said, "The law of the claw."

Mr. ASHURST. That sounded like the Senator from Arizona. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It was the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. BARKLEY. I really sincerely and seriously hope that we may dispose of the pending bill, and I can assure the Senator from Wyoming, and all other Senators interested in the truth-in-fabric bill, for which I voted, that I will do my level best—which is not always the best, but it is the best I can do to bring about an immediate disposition of the motion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside in order that we may take up the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not make that request, because, frankly, I would be compelled to object to it. I think we might have disposed of the pending bill by now if we had been permitted to go ahead with it. The Senator knows, as all other Senators know, that I am trying my best, in a rather difficult situation, to facilitate the passage of legislation, for obvious reasons.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, and I sympathize with the Senator——

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's sympathy, and I will appreciate his cooperation no less than his sympathy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I sympathize with the intention of the Senator to secure action upon legislative matters before this body. One of the legislative matters is the truth-in-fabric bill, which has already been passed——

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And I hope to have the cooperation, the immediate cooperation, of the Senator from Kentucky, and of all other Senators, to bring about action upon that matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will give me his immediate cooperation on the pending bill, I will give him my immediate cooperation on the other matter.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask for unanimous consent that immediately upon the passage of the judicial bill, or perhaps I should say the disposition of the judicial bill—and I thank Senators about me for the amendment—that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, when I may have the floor——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma what he means? I do not quite understand what he means by saying "When I may have the floor." Does he mean on his motion, or now?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I want the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did I understand the Senator to inquire whether he might have the floor now, or at the time his motion comes up? The Senator does not have to ask unanimous consent to get the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is what I am asking.

Mr. BARKLEY. The point is whether, if consent is granted to take up the motion of the Senator immediately after the disposition of the pending bill, he is asking that he may have the floor at that time, or is asking that he may have it now.

Mr. AUSTIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. May a Senator who has proffered a request for unanimous consent hold the floor?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I had the floor when I proffered the request, and there has been no response as yet.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Reserving the right to object——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is customary in the Senate, if a Senator asks unanimous consent, to allow any other Senator who desires to state the reasons for his objection to make them known. That is the ordinary practice. Whether the Senator from Wyoming has the floor or not, he will be recognized after whoever desires to discuss the objection shall have finished. Does the Senator from Oklahoma object?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Reserving the right to object, I ask for the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield the floor?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am trying to obtain an understanding among all the Members of this body. I see no reason why the Senator from Oklahoma should not state his position without calling upon me to yield the floor. I confess to the Senator that I am rather hesitant, because in my inexperience I do not know what new parliamentary procedure he may be proposing. I understood the other day that it was merely a matter of securing some information, and that the purpose of the Senator was not to interrupt or obstruct the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. On a unanimous-consent request, cannot the discussion be terminated at any time by any Senator calling for the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be. The question is on the request of the Senator from Wyoming. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to give notice that at the earliest opportunity, when I may secure the floor after action on the judicial bill, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma, unless at this moment I may obtain the consent of the Senator from Arizona to make a motion on my own behalf to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed.

Mr. ASHURST. I felicitate the Senator from Wyoming; I am very much in favor of the position he has taken; I am as much in favor of the bill he is championing as I am in favor of the judicial bill; I am in favor of both bills but we must be practical. The judicial bill is approaching a final vote. I believe we will vote on it within 30 minutes—certainly in 40 minutes. The Senator then surely can secure the floor to have the motion considered. The Senate was serious and in earnest when it voted for the truth-in-fabric bill. The Senate is not going to commit the futile action of considering a bill today, and then, forsooth, because some Senator entered a motion to reconsider another matter, find itself powerless to resume consideration of the bill it was considering.

Let us finish consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in order that the matter may be disposed of I will state that if the Senator from Arizona were to yield to the Senator from Wyoming in order that he might make the motion to take up the motion to reconsider, then it is my purpose, and I state it frankly, to move to table the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma so it can be disposed of.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would not the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the sponsor of the pending bill, by his own yielding displace the pending business?

Mr. ASHURST. I want to thank the Senator for his inquiry. I have no such power. I have no such influence. I simply insist in a modest way that we finish the business at hand. I am sure the Senator from Wyoming will have no opportunity——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. "No opportunity" is right. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. No—will have no trouble in procuring the floor. Let us finish consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one parliamentary inquiry pending. The Chair asks the Senate to give the Chair an opportunity to dispose of the pending parliamentary inquiry.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] on July 21 moved that the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed be reconsidered. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has asked unanimous consent that the motion be disposed of now. If, while the business under consideration is pending, another matter is taken up on motion, then the unfinished business is displaced.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. When such a request for unanimous consent is proposed, is it not in order to object to it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be in order to object to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the motion to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed been entered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was entered on July 21.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that it is in order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is in order at any time, and particularly would be at the conclusion of the pending business, to move to proceed to consider that motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is within the parliamentary practice.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will state to the Senator from Wyoming, if he will permit me, that immediately upon the passage of the pending bill I will cooperate with the Senator to have that motion taken up, if I myself have to make the motion to take it up, and then move to table the motion to reconsider. I think the matter ought to be disposed of in order, and not interfere with the bill now under consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, with the statement by the Senator from Kentucky, I am quite satisfied. Let me say that the position which I have taken before the Senate has been prompted by a desire to secure action by the Senate to carry out its will already expressed. And because I have been resisting what I have regarded to be, however mistakenly, a dilatory procedure, I myself am not willing to engage in a dilatory procedure against the consideration of and immediate action upon the pending bill. So, with the understanding which has already been expressed by the Senator from Kentucky, I shall not proceed to make any further request at this time to make any further remarks to the Senate, but immediately upon the disposition of the pending bill, I shall seek to obtain recognition by the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I happen to represent in part, as best I can, one of the great cotton-producing States. My State produces approximately 1,000,000 bales of cotton a year. When the truth-in-fabric bill was before the proper committee, a subcommittee was appointed to consider it. The subcommittee consisted of Senators from the Northern States—the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], a Northern State where no cotton is grown; the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], from a Northern State where no cotton is grown; and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], likewise from a Northern State where no cotton is grown. I was not a member of either the subcommittee or of the main committee. I listened to the discussion of the bill on the floor of the Senate, and I desire now to take a very few moments to make a short statement.

Mr. President, on July 21 the Senate passed Senate bill 162, the so-called truth-in-fabric bill. During the debate on the bill, as it appears on page 9664 of the RECORD, the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] asked the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] this question:

> How much, if any, would the market for cotton be impaired if one of the effects of the operation of this bill should be to reduce the production of goods made of mixtures of cotton and wool?

In part the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] replied:

> Due to those circumstances the sale of cotton, to some extent, would probably be affected.
>
> Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the Senator if he can state whether it is correct that a hundred million pounds of cotton go into mixtures with wool annually?
> Mr. BARKLEY. It has been a long time since I gathered the figures, but I would not in any way dispute the figures given by the Senator. A very large quantity of cotton goes into the manufacture of garments that are made of mixed wool and cotton.

Mr. President, if the figures mentioned by the Senator from Vermont are substantially correct, then 100,000,000 pounds of cotton, when measured in bales of 500 pounds each, means that some 200,000 bales of cotton are used annually in the wool-manufacturing industry.

The Senate subcommittee which held the hearings was composed of Senators from noncotton-growing States; hence the relation of wool to cotton and the amount of cotton used jointly with wool in producing cloth and such products as cotton blankets, worsteds, and mohair, using cotton warps, were given little, if any, consideration. I make no complaint of that, because the Senators did not represent cotton-producing States, and the question no doubt was not called to their attention. It was because of the development of this new possible adverse effect which the enactment of the bill might have upon cotton that caused me to enter the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed the Senate.

Immediately after the motion was entered, I sent an inquiry to the National Association of Wool Manufacturers. I now send to the desk and ask to have read the telegram of inquiry which I sent to the best authority that I knew of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

JULY 21, 1939.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF WOOL MANUFACTURERS,
386 Fourth Avenue, New York:

During consideration Schwartz wool bill it was admitted that vast quantities of cotton were used in conjunction with wool for making cloth. Please contact manufacturers making cloth from wool-cotton combination and advise estimate of amount cotton used annually in the manufacture of cloth containing both commodities.

ELMER THOMAS.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that message was sent late last Friday. I expected an answer on Saturday. It did not come. But yesterday at noon, upon the convening of the Senate, I advised the Senate that I would receive a telegram shortly. I now send to the desk a message received at the telegraphic office here at 12:45 on yesterday, and I ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 24, 1939.

Hon. Senator ELMER THOMAS of Oklahoma,
United States Senate Office Building:

Re your telegram July 21. Beg to advise that vast amounts of cotton are combined with wool in the manufacture of various types of textile fabrics for many purposes. Despite the fact that our association represents a large majority of the textile mills classified as wool textile mills, it will be necessary to get information on combined use of wool and cotton from mills considered cotton textile mills in order definitely to estimate annual volume of cotton so used. We are undertaking a survey to get this definite information from mills of both classifications immediately. At the same time we are asking these mills to advise us their opinion of the effect the pending bill will have on their use of cotton, that is, whether or not the present proposal enacted into law will increase or decrease the use of cotton by them and to what extent. We will immediately forward this information to you as quickly as received.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF WOOL MANUFACTURERS.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, to the cotton farmers in the cotton-producing States, facing the loss of a large part of their foreign trade and being forced to compete with new substitutes for cotton, it is all-important that nothing be done by their Government still further to reduce the demand for their product.

I have made a search of the hearings held by both the House and the Senate to see if I could find some testimony which would throw some light on the relation between wool and cotton when used in the same cloth. It so happens that a young Representative from my own State gave the only testimony that I found. I have in my hand the House hearings wherein Representative MIKE MONRONEY testified. I read only one paragraph from his testimony, on page 376 of the House hearings. Mr. BOREN, a member of the House subcommittee, from my State, asked Mr. MONRONEY the following question:

Mr. BOREN. I understand that you indicate it is your belief that this would be injurious to cotton raisers and the sellers of cotton that moves into the manufactured article?

Mr. MONRONEY. Very definitely.

Mr. MONRONEY is not the ordinary run of Members of Congress; and I do not limit that statement to the House of Representatives. I have served in both bodies. I have seen them come and go, and I know the ordinary run of Members of both the House and Senate. Mr. MONRONEY is not of that type. He comes from a wealthy family. His family made its money in the furniture business. Mr. MONRONEY grew up in the furniture business. I shall proceed to read his testimony, which shows that in the furniture business a vast amount of cloth contains wool, and at the same time it contains cotton.

Some of the finest tapestries and mohair finishings for furniture products contain as much as 75 percent of cotton and only 25 percent of wool. If furniture factories must label their furniture products "This product contains 25 percent wool and 75 percent cotton," what is the furniture buyer to do? I do not know; but I am fearful that the furniture buyer will look at some other product which does not have a portion of the product containing 75 percent of cotton.

Mr. President, I voted for the bill. I did not want to, but I had to. So far as wool is concerned, it is a good bill. I sympathize with the demand that we label our products properly if it can be done; but, as a result of the Monroney testimony before the House committee, carpets, rugs, and mattings were eliminated from the bill.

Mr. President, I am trying to obtain information. I want to know how the bill affects the cotton industry. Such information is not in the records. I tried to obtain information from the Census Bureau. The Census Bureau states that according to its records, in 1914, 28,000,000 pounds of cotton were used in the wool manufacturing industry. Twenty-eight million pounds of cotton means something like 56,000 bales. If the figures used by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] are accurate, 100,000,000 pounds of cotton are used annually. That means 200,000 bales.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know to what extent the subcommittee went into that question in the consideration of this particular bill. However, I think it is fair to say that there is nothing new on the subject with respect to cotton being a component part of certain mixed fabrics. As I said to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], when he asked me the question the other day, I did not recall the number of pounds of cotton which go into the manufacture of mixed products. However, in the hearings which have been held from time to time for the past 25 years within my knowledge, the question of the proportion of cotton going into mixed cotton-and-wool products has been gone into, and figures have been submitted.

So the matter of cotton entering into cotton-and-wool products is not really a new question. We went into it rather intimately years ago. I have not reexamined the hearings for a long time, and I was unable to answer the Senator from Vermont as to whether or not 100,000,000 pounds of cotton went into the manufacture of mixed fabrics. Assuming that that be true, however, it does not follow that in articles of furniture—which means upholstering of furniture—the knowledge of a customer that a certain proportion of the upholstering is cotton and a certain proportion wool would necessarily militate against the sale of that product, or against the use of cotton.

The only thing I had in mind, and still have in mind, is the possibility that in the purchase of wearing apparel such knowledge might have some effect. When a man is buying a suit of clothes, or a woman is buying a coat, suit, or something of that sort, the buyer might rather delude himself and we might rather delude ourselves into the belief that it is all wool, rather than that any part of it is cotton. We are all human in that regard. I would not be willing to say to the Senator, from my experience and observation, that the sale of 100,000,000 pounds of cotton would be affected by the passage of the bill, because I do not think the passage of the bill would militate against the use of that much cotton. It might in some small degree have some effect upon the sale of wearing apparel in which there is a mixture of cotton and wool. However, in upholstery and other materials in which the matter of personal pride does not enter, I doubt very much whether it would have any effect upon the sale of cotton, because frequently in upholstery and materials of that kind, and even in draperies, a mixture of wool and cotton rather adds to the wearability than otherwise.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Does not the Senator from Kentucky realize that if the bill is enacted into law it will require labels to be placed upon such things as shirts, ties, socks, underwear, and everything that contains wool?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the bill goes that far.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senate bill should become a law, it would not go that far; but if the original bill as it came before this body should be enacted, anything that contained any wool, or that anyone suspected contained wool, or anything which was represented to contain wool, would be a wool product and would have to be labeled. That is what I objected to.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate has corrected that situation. Of course, the bill would have to go to conference unless the House agreed to the Senate amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I understand, a similar bill is pending in the House. The two bills are not the same, but they are similar. The House has not passed the House bill. I cannot understand why the emergency is so great that one-half of the United States, which produces cotton, has not been given a fair opportunity to go into the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it ought to be said that during the quarter of a century in which I have been familiar with the subject, everybody has had an opportunity to be heard. Everybody who favored the legislation and everybody who opposed the legislation has had an opportunity to go into the subject; and volumes of testimony have been taken. It may be regrettable that an incomplete and probably an inaccurate and spontaneous response to a question asked by the Senator from Vermont the other day injected the cotton situation into the debate on this particular bill; but there was nothing new about the question. It was really so old that I could not remember the figures. Anybody who was interested in such legislation during all the time it has been considered for the past quarter of a century has had the opportunity to present his views. My recollection is, although I cannot recall the figures, that years ago testimony was submitted showing the amount of cotton that went into the manufacture of mixed products, and all other fabrics and component parts of fabrics that went into the manufacture of mixed products; so there is really nothing new in the subject.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The only information I can obtain is from the Department of Commerce, from the telegram I have received from the cotton association, and from the brief extracts from the House hearings. The telegram from the organization which represents the woolen mills as well as the cotton mills states that vast quantities of cotton are used in the woolen-manufacturing business. The organization does not know how much is so used. It does not know the effect the bill would have on the cotton industry, but it has promised in the telegram to obtain and furnish the information as soon as possible.

If the Senate does not want that information, I do not want to force it upon the Senate. However, from the standpoint of my State, I want to do what I can to protect 1,000,000 bales of cotton grown in my State annually against a bill which might have a deleterious effect upon that cotton.

Mr. President, I do not want to hold up the bill indefinitely. I was in the Chamber yesterday afternoon on two occasions when other matters were under consideration. I did not care to inject the telegrams into the RECORD at that time, because they were all the information I had. I am perfectly willing to take up the motion and vote upon it as soon as we have the information. If that is considered too long a time to wait, I am willing now to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement that the moment we shall have concluded with the so-called lending-spending bill, which should not require more than 2 or 3 days, the next order of business shall be the motion to reconsider.

I am willing to enter into an agreement that debate at that time shall be limited to 15 minutes to a side, for all I want to do is to present my information. I do not think the lending-spending bill will take more than 2 or 3 days. By that time I shall have all the information I can gather; and at that time the motion could be laid before the Senate, I could present my additional information, and I would then be willing to take a vote.

Mr. President, in order to make the record clear, I shall submit a unanimous-consent request. As I understand, Senate bill 2864 is to follow the pending judicial bill. If that be true, I ask that at the conclusion of the consideration of Senate bill 2864 the motion to reconsider be laid before the Senate, and that debate shall be limited to 30 minutes—15 minutes to a side—whereupon the vote shall be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I object.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I object.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that leaves me no alternative. I desire now to read——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at this time?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma has been ably supporting the Judiciary Committee in his insistence that an additional judge shall be provided for Oklahoma. I am converted. I believe the Senator from Oklahoma has made a case. Let us proceed, as practical men, with the business at hand. It is a well-known axiom of natural philosophy that one body cannot occupy two places at one and the same time. Let us proceed as men with the judicial bill and vote it up or vote it down. I shall be good natured, whatever may be done; whether it be voted up or whether it be voted down. And then let us take up other matters. But I submit that—not like children making mud pies, shaping one here and in a few minutes making another at some other place else, and letting the first one fall apart—we should proceed like sensible men to the business at hand and finish the pending bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Asking the attention of both Senators from Wyoming, may I suggest that the House of Representatives has not yet passed the proposed legislation affecting the truth-in-fabric matter. I think I may say to both Senators that the House will not pass upon such proposed legislation at this session. If we should send this bill over to that body today, in my judgment, the House would not act upon it before final adjournment.

In view of that situation, what would be really lost by agreeing to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma to pass upon the motion to reconsider immediately upon the conclusion of the bill which is to follow the judicial bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma expressed the opinion that the legislation to which the Senator now refers will be disposed of in 2 or 3 days. From what I have heard around the Chamber, I am very much inclined to doubt the validity of that prophecy. It is my opinion that so soon as the judicial bill shall be disposed of the Senate will enter upon a prolonged discussion of the works financing bill. It is my understanding that the House committee, which is considering the companion measure to that offered by the Senator from Kentucky, has not as yet concluded its hearings.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has done so, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to know that, and that will, of course, help to expedite action. But it would seem to me to be altogether undesirable, so late in the session, to postpone the consideration of a mere motion to reconsider until discussion of any bill of such far-reaching importance as the works financing bill shall be concluded.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me say——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me interject the statement that I am willing to agree that when the Senate convenes on Monday the first order of business, after the prayer, shall be the motion to reconsider, with a limitation upon debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma. The point I wanted to emphasize to both Senators from Wyoming—and I am in sympathy with their position—is that nothing would be lost by postponing the vote on the motion to reconsider for 2 or 3 days. I do not know how long the works financing bill will occupy the time of the Senate, but I do not think it will consume more than 2 or 3 days. If, however, it should consume a longer time, it would not be very material, because I can say to Senators that no effort will be made to adjourn the present session of Congress until that measure shall have been disposed of, one way or the other. So, in view of the situation in the House, and the unlikelihood of having the House act upon the truth-in-fabric bill at the present session, I do not see how time will be lost in the ultimate passage of the measure by waiting 2 or 3 days to pass upon the motion to reconsider. I am willing to agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma. I would agree to fix Friday even or Thursday of this week as the date for a vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This is Tuesday, may I say?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; this is Tuesday.

I would be willing to agree to vote at 12:30 o'clock on Friday on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma, or on any other day this week, or not later than Monday.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if this were an emergency matter, if someone was suffering, if someone was hungry, it would be different; but this is not that kind of bill. If this bill should pass, it would not go into effect for 6 months. So no harm can be done, in my judgment, by postponing the consideration of the motion by this body for 2 or 3 days and obtaining the information that is promised and that will be a benefit to one-half of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Personally I think the Senator's request is not an unreasonable one. I myself am perfectly willing to accede to it if the Senator from Wyoming, the author of the bill, who made the report, would be willing to agree to vote on the motion to reconsider not later than 12:30 o'clock on Friday of the present week.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I would be agreeable to that; but at the present time, in view of what the Senator from Oklahoma has been saying about cotton, I want to say something. The senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] just remarked that the Senator from Oklahoma had a good case. I have heard many plaintiffs who "had a good case" before the other side of the case was heard. I do not want for a moment to be precluded from stating the other side.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I meant the Senator from Oklahoma made a good case for an additional judge for Oklahoma. The able Senator from Wyoming must have misunderstood me. I think one of the great things the junior Senator from Wyoming and the senior Senator from Wyoming have done has been to secure the passage of the truth-in-fabric bill. It should have been passed 20 years ago. I congratulate those Senators. I said the Senator from Oklahoma made a good case, not on the truth-in-fabric bill but on the judges bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that calls for an explanation. I have as yet made no speech and no statement on the judges bill.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator handed me a brief, which I read, and which convinced me that Oklahoma should have an additional Federal judge.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am for the bill, I will say to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oklahoma will yield there, I will say that, of course, the Senator from Wyoming, upon being recognized by the Chair on this bill or on the next bill or any bill, can make a statement regarding the statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma.

If the Senator from Oklahoma will permit me—or he can do it himself—I should like to have the Senate agree now to vote on the motion to reconsider at 12:30 o'clock on Friday, as the colored man said, "irregardless" of what may then be before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Reserving the right to object, I will say that I think it would be unfair to cut off the junior Senator from Wyoming from making his explanation. It would be unfair to fix a time to vote on the motion in such a way that I could not even submit the telegrams which I am sure I shall receive. If the Senator will fix the time for a vote at 12:30 o'clock Friday, and provide a limited amount of time for debate on either side, that will be agreeable to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield, I ask unanimous consent that upon the assembling of the Senate on Friday the motion to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in fabric bill was passed shall be taken up for consideration, and that at the end of 1 hour's debate, to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Wyoming, the Senate shall proceed to vote on the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, merely that I may understand clearly the request of the Senator from Kentucky, it is, as I understand it, that immediately upon the convening of the Senate on Friday next the motion to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed shall become the unfinished business of the Senate, regardless of any other measure before the Senate at that time, which shall be temporarily laid aside; that there shall then be 1 hour's debate, one-half of which shall be under the control of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who has made the motion to reconsider, and one-half of which shall be under the control of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], who has sponsored the proposed legislation, and that, at the end of the hour's debate, there shall be a vote without further debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. The Senator understands the request accurately, except there is, probably, one point which should be suggested, namely, that the unfinished business of the Senate on Friday, whatever it may be, shall at the assembling of the Senate immediately be temporarily laid aside, and the motion to reconsider become the special order, to be concluded at the end of an hour's debate, as has been suggested.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will ask if the Senator from Kentucky will not include in his request that a motion to lay on the table shall not be in order during that hour?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether such an unanimous-consent agreement would be in order. It could not be in order, I will say, in my judgment, for there could not be a vote on the motion to reconsider until the end of the hour. At the end of the hour, if no motion were made to lay on the table, the vote would come on the motion, and then a motion to lay on the table would be in order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will yield for a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In order that I may clear up the question which the Senator from Oklahoma has addressed to the Senator from Kentucky, I am very happy to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that it is my understanding that under such a unanimous-consent agreement a motion to lay on the table could not be presented; and I, for one, would not present such a motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my understanding.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor and will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senate enters into a unanimous-consent agreement to take up a certain matter at a certain hour, and that 1 hour thereafter the debate shall close and a vote shall be had, the inquiry is, Would a motion to lay upon the table be in order during that hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that it would be inconsistent with the intent of the unanimous-consent agreement, and therefore that a motion to lay on the table would not be in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it has been frequently stated by presiding officers that the Senate may do anything by unanimous consent. In order that there may be no doubt about the matter, I include in my unanimous-consent request a modification to the effect that no motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma shall be in order until the conclusion of the hour of debate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say that the purpose of a motion to lay on the table is simply to shut off debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So that when there is a unanimous-consent agreement to limit debate, a motion to lay on the table would be altogether out of order and would be unnecessary, because a vote upon the original motion to reconsider would dispose of the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree to that statement. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand the unanimous-consent request, it is contemplated that on Friday there will be 1 hour of debate, one-half of the time to be controlled by one Senator, and the other half of the time to be controlled by another Senator.

I recognize the practice of the House of Representatives of permitting Members of that body to control the time, and to deal it out as those Members see fit to the other Members of the body, but I submit that that is a practice which ought not to be engrafted upon the senatorial system. I do not mind at all the limitation of 1 hour's debate, but I think the general rules of the Senate with respect to the right of a Senator to recognition and to speech should be followed, and that a Senator should not be relegated to the grace of some other Member of the body if he wants to discuss a measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. For 50 years the Senate on special occasions has disposed of the time for debate in that precise way. It is not a practice that I would sanction as a general thing in the Senate to anywhere near the extent to which it prevails in the House; but under special circumstances the Senate frequently has adopted such a procedure, and I think there is nothing vicious about it now and then.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think it is a thoroughly vicious practice; and I dislike to see the Senate further commit itself to that method of controlling and regulating debate in this body.

I am not going to object to the unanimous-consent request, but I think the inclusion of any such provision in a unanimous-consent request is unwise. If there be a precedent, it is strengthening an unfortunate and an unwise precedent that we should not encourage in the future.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in reply to the distinguished Senator from Maine, let me say that if this agreement is reached, I now make the statement that I shall not use in excess of 15 minutes. That will leave 15 minutes free for anyone who may be a proponent of the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has heard the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky as modified. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the modified agreement is entered into.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, lines 2 and 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "western district of Oklahoma."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, among the absurd things in the bill, the clause I propose to strike out I think is perhaps the most absurd.

The State of Kansas, lying immediately to the north of Oklahoma, has one Federal district judge. If I correctly understood the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] the other day, Oklahoma now has four Federal district judges. Am I correct?

Mr. LEE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. The junior Senator from Oklahoma agrees. The bill proposes to give Oklahoma a fifth judge. Geographically, the two States are the same size. The Senator from Oklahoma the other day called my attention to the fact that Oklahoma has 2,600,000 population, and Kansas has something less than 2,000,000. The table of cases filed in the courts last year shows a considerable number in the western district of Oklahoma, but it also shows that in the eastern district of Oklahoma only 42 civil cases were filed in which the Government had an interest, and 72 cases were filed in which the litigants were entirely private litigants.

When there are four district judges in the same State, if the work in one district is heavy and in the other and adjoining districts it is light, it ought not to be difficult for the judges themselves to adjust the matter, and certainly the bill now pending before this body providing for an administrator in the judicial system would take care of a situation of that kind.

There is no personal feeling on my part about this matter. It just seems to me to be absurd that the State of Oklahoma, with 2,600,000 people, and with four Federal district judges now, should be given a fifth Federal district judge. It does not make sense. It has no rhyme or reason, and the amendment I have offered ought to prevail.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the genial Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has next selected Oklahoma for the slaughter. I do not know where the Senator's figures originated. I should have to look at them to be sure. Otherwise I would not have an opportunity to know.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. However, I am going to quote from the annual report of the Attorney General of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, in support of the figures I shall offer.

As to the geographic comparison of Oklahoma and Kansas, or even the comparison from the standpoint of population, those are not necessarily conclusive arguments as against the provision for an additional judge. We need judges in proportion to the case load, and I propose to show that Oklahoma needs an additional judge. I go further than that and say that Kansas needs an additional judge. I am not in a position to say what the Senator from Kansas would do if the situation were reversed and we had a Republican administration which was asking for these judges. I am not prepared to say what the Senator would do, but I will say that according to the Judicial Conference, Kansas needs an additional judge.

Kansas last year had a case load of 592 for the entire State. Oklahoma had a case load of 2,090 for the entire State. Oklahoma needs an additional judge; Kansas needs an additional judge; and the Judicial Conference, presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, and composed of the senior circuit judges of the 10 circuits plus the senior judge of the District of Columbia, recommended an additional judge for the State of Kansas, and recommended an additional judge for the State of Oklahoma. The Senators from Oklahoma believe that we should have the additional judge in accordance with the recommendation of the Judicial Conference.

We further believe that the Attorney General was correct when he also recommended an additional judge not only for Oklahoma but for the State of Kansas, because of the case loads in the two States.

The case load in western Oklahoma is considerably greater than the average per judge for the entire country, and is growing greater year by year. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the number of civil and criminal cases filed in the western district of Oklahoma was 545, as against 371 cases per judge for the entire country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator be good enough to put in the corresponding figure for the eastern district of Oklahoma, which lies right next to the western district, so as to reduce the two Oklahoma districts to a common denominator? The work in one of them is heavy; in the other it is very light. They could be equalized, so far as the case load on the judges is concerned, merely by one judge helping the other.

Mr. LEE. If the Senator has the figures, I should be glad to have him submit them. Since the eastern district was not in controversy, I did not think to have the figures available.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LEE. If the Senator is about to read from the same source from which he read a while ago, I should say the figures were so far wrong that I should object to them going into the RECORD at this point. The Senator read something about 42 cases. I have quoted from the highest authority, the Annual Report of the Attorney General of the United States, for 1938, in which he reports that for the western district there are 545 cases, civil and criminal.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have referred only to matters put into the RECORD by members of the Committee on the Judiciary. What I have referred to is taken from an article written by Judge Otis, and he bases his information on the actual facts in the districts themselves, and I think as taken from the Attorney General's report. I was referring only to the civil cases, cases in which the Government was concerned, or where there were purely private litigants, because it is generally agreed among the lawyers here that criminal cases are quickly disposed of. In attempting to make a comparison, I have discarded the criminal cases, and confined my statement to civil cases. The information I read was taken from Judge Otis' report which, in turn, I understand, is official information taken from the Attorney General's report.

Mr. LEE. The Senator is entirely welcome to his complete reliance upon the quotation for his own information. However, I prefer the text of the Annual Report of the Attorney General of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938.

There are three judicial districts in the State of Oklahoma, northern, eastern, and western, with one judge for each district and an additional judge serving in all districts; but in spite of the fact that Oklahoma has four Federal judges, the case load per judge is 174 cases greater than the number of cases per judge for the entire country.

Again, let us compare the State of Oklahoma with other States of approximately the same population which also have four judges. For example, take the States of Virginia, Louisiana, and Tennessee. Each of these States has approximately the same population as Oklahoma. Likewise, each of these States has four judges, but of the cases terminated during the fiscal year 1938, none of these States exceeded 1,500, whereas the case load in Oklahoma for that period was 2,090.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this place in my remarks a brief table supporting my last statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Statement showing the number of district judges in the State of Oklahoma as compared with other States having 4 judges and approximately the same population

State	Number of districts	Population, 1930 census	Number of district judges	Number of cases terminated during fiscal year 1938
Oklahoma	3	2,396,040	4	2,090
Virginia	2	2,421,851	4	1,345
Louisiana	2	2,101,593	4	1,173
Tennessee	3	2,616,556	4	1,442

Mr. LEE. Thus it will be seen that Oklahoma had 548 more cases last year than the nearest State to her, which is Tennessee, having a case load of 1,442, and had a load of 817 more cases for that period than the State of Louisiana, and 645 more than the State of Virginia.

Again, the heavy burdens of the cases tried by district courts in Oklahoma is borne out further by the number of appeals made from district courts to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, a total of 48 cases were appealed from Oklahoma. This was the highest number of cases appealed from any of the six States in the tenth circuit, the next State to it being Kansas, where 41 cases were appealed, and the next State being Colorado, where 14 cases were appealed.

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, a total number of 52 cases were appealed from Oklahoma, whereas only 39 were appealed from Kansas. This trend shows how the case load in Oklahoma is increasing.

The State Legislature of Oklahoma, at its last session, passed a law establishing a permit system for the sale of spirituous liquors for certain exempted purposes. This permit system, according to the general counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, makes Oklahoma the only State in the Union which has the protection of the Federal Government from the importation of liquor. Consequently, there will be an increase of Federal cases in Oklahoma.

The case load in Oklahoma is heavy because almost half of the Indian population of the United States resides within that State. These Indians are the wards of the Federal Government and Federal courts have jurisdiction of the cases affecting not only the Indians but their lands.

Now, therefore, I submit that Oklahoma needs this additional district judge for the western district, as shown by comparison of the case load of other States of similar population, as shown by the comparison of the case load of 545 per judge in Oklahoma as against the case load of 371 per judge throughout the country.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the State of Oklahoma, either fortunately or unfortunately, is not like the other States of the Union. We have territory embraced within our State as other States have, but in that territory we have a greatly diversified set of jurisdictions. In addition to that, there are in the State 2,600,000 people, with the north half of the State one kind of a State, the southern half another kind. By that I mean that in the north the people raise corn, wheat, alfalfa, and similar crops, and in the southern half they raise cotton and kindred products.

In addition to having a State with such a population of the regular kind, we have in Oklahoma almost one-half of the entire Indian population of the United States. One hundred and forty thousand Indian citizens live in Oklahoma. Those 140,000 Indian citizens are divided into 52 tribes, and remnants of tribes. Each tribe has its own reservation, and its own allotments under certain laws, and no two are alike.

On great numbers of these Indian reservations oil and gas are found. The title to the land has to be adjusted under the laws pertaining to the various reservations. That means that in my State the time of at least two Federal judges is needed to take care of the Indian litigation, cases growing out of Indian problems.

For example, one circuit judge has worked for 2 years trying to adjust the affairs of one estate, the so-called Jackson Barnett estate. Jackson Barnett was a poor, forgotton Creek Indian. He had a piece of land which no one would have. But oil was discovered upon his allotment, and from the time oil was found on the Barnett allotment, royalties accrued which have amounted to more than $3,000,000. When Barnett died a few years ago there was this great estate, to be probated.

Barnett had no known descendants, and no known heirs. Probably 500 people have laid claim to a part of the Barnett estate. Those 500 claimants were represented in the Federal court by upward of 100 attorneys, and it has taken Judge Williams 2 years to go into the case, to hear the evidence and the arguments, and to read the depositions, and even yet a decision has not been reached.

Mr. President, Oklahoma is different from the ordinary State in that we have the Indian problem, with many reservations, every reservation having its own private system of laws, which must be interpreted. I submit that is an additional reason why the courts of our State are far behind in their several dockets.

The western district in Oklahoma takes in the western half of the State, embracing the capital, Oklahoma City, a city of from 225,000 to 250,000 inhabitants, and, of course, a great deal of business gravitates toward the State capital. It is for that district that we desire to have an additional judge.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I wish to supply the figures which the Senator from Kansas requested concerning the eastern district of Oklahoma. I have just tabulated them. The cases add up to 774. The reason why the courts are able to handle that many is because of the roving judge, who holds court in the eastern district, and helps in the work.

Mr. REED. How many of those cases are criminal cases?

Mr. LEE. Six hundred and forty-one cases.

Mr. REED. There is quite a distinction. I have omitted, in giving the figures for my State, all criminal cases, unless I otherwise stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, on page 2, lines 2 and 3.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 5 and 6, as follows:

(c) One, who shall be a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have had about the luck that I expected to have, and after the pending amendment shall have been disposed of I shall take about 5 minutes of the time of the Senate to discuss the general proposition.

I now wish to take about 2 or 3 minutes to develop the part that Florida is playing in this tremendous scandal, a national scandal arising from the creation of additional Federal judgeships, for which there is no justification whatever, specifically as shown when dealing with the Florida question. There was a time following the great boom in Florida, back in 1925, when everyone down there went crazy about the value of land, and then went broke. There was a tremendous amount of litigation. It reached a peak sometime between 1925 and 2 or 3 years ago. I wish to show the situation as it is at the present time, using the basis that has been used, which the Senator has most cheerfully disregarded, and which is perfectly all right with me. It is not my basis. It is the basis used by one of the very ablest Federal judges in the United States, and put into the RECORD by the Judiciary Committee members themselves. I have not departed in a single respect from the information which the committee members themselves put into the RECORD.

I wish to refer to Florida. The southern district has a heavier load than the northern district. Eliminating criminal cases—and I wish very cheerfully to admit to my good friend the Senator from Oklahoma that the criminal load in Oklahoma is a great deal heavier than the criminal load in Kansas——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I certainly do.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A large number of our population came from Kansas, I will say to the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. That was the kind that had to leave our State [laughter], and they found a resting place in Oklahoma, and most unfortunately many of them have never recovered from the habits which made us put them out of Kansas.

Mr. LUCAS. Why is the Senator so strongly against the Oklahoma and Florida judgeships?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what did my distinguished friend, the Senator from Illinois say? I do not know where he got his chips, anyhow.

Mr. SMATHERS. He got them at the same place where the Senator from Kansas got his.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Kansas will not permit himself to be interrupted now in the consideration of the bill. He has a right to the floor and he does not have to yield. I wish to protect the Senator in the enjoyment of his exclusive right to the floor.

Mr. SMATHERS. I should like to suggest that the Senator from Kansas allotted himself 2 minutes, and the 2 minutes are up.

Mr. REED. I thank the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. I have always yielded, and with a smile, if you please. I have wanted to conduct the debate as courteously and as fairly as could be done, and in as good nature as the seriousness of the subject will permit. I am going to take 5 minutes when we come to the closing consideration of the bill, when the Senate is ready to vote on the bill. Then I shall take 5 minutes to state some conclusions upon this kind of stuff.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am so anxious to get to that 5 minutes that I am rather impatient that we move forward now.

Mr. REED. I may suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Oklahoma and the two Senators from Wyoming and the Senator from Kentucky between them delayed—I am not fixing the responsibility, I am only stating the fact that those four Senators, between them, delayed the disposition of the bill for quite a long time. I am talking, and have talked, directly to the merits of this particular bill at all times.

If we consider the civil cases in the northern district of Florida filed in 1938—the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, to which Judge Otis applied his measuring stick—there were 304 civil cases in the southern district, mind you, and 156 in the northern district. Added together and divided by two, they give an average of 222.

Again, Florida is a State within which there are two district judges. It is easy enough to arrange for help between one district whose courts are heavily loaded, and another district which has a very light load.

Certainly a condition of that kind does not justify the Senate, notwithstanding the recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary to the contrary, to increase the number of Federal judges.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday I discussed at some length the bill under consideration and I shall not consume much of the time of the Senate in further discussion. I desire, however, to repeat what I said yesterday, that in my opinion there are no sufficient reasons to justify the passage of the bill before us. There seems to be a mania to increase Government agencies and add to the great army of Federal employees. This mania manifests itself in connection with the judiciary. Many judicial districts have been created of late and a large number of judicial positions created. The movement for additional Federal judges has been greatly accelerated during the past quarter of a century and the movement seems to be increasing in volume if not in velocity.

As I stated in my remarks yesterday during the administration of President Harding provisions were made for the appointment of 26 additional district court judges and one circuit court judge. Not content with this great increase, Congress, during the administration of President Coolidge, provided for 2 circuit court judges and 22 district court judges. Notwithstanding this deluge of new judges soon after President Hoover had been inaugurated additional efforts were made to increase the number of Federal judges. Congress, responding to the spirit of the times, passed measures authorizing the appointment of nine district court judges and two circuit court judges. I have before me the districts and circuits to which these judges were assigned, but the demand for an increase in the courts was not satiated with the creation of the districts to which I have referred.

During the administration of President Roosevelt large additions have been made to the Federal judiciary. During the past 6 years Congress has passed acts authorizing the appointment of 41 district court judges and 7 circuit court judges.

Following the defeat of the bill to increase the number of judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, Congress gave consideration to the question of still further multiplying the number of judges and in 1938 measures were passed providing for 17 additional district judges and 5 additional circuit court judges. I did not believe that the condition of the courts required additional judges nor did I believe that the creation of so large a number of judicial positions under the administrations of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover was justified.

It is unnecessary to add that I have not approved of the large number of judicial positions which have been created under the administration of President Roosevelt.

An impartial study of the article prepared by Judge Merrill E. Otis, which was placed in the RECORD last Friday, will demonstrate that too many Federal judges have been appointed and that the present demand for additional judges is without warrant unless perhaps one may be needed in the southern district of New York.

It has been shown during the discussion of this bill that the work of the courts is decreasing and that the number of cases is falling off and the legitimate demands for increased judicial machinery are not warranted. In my opinion, there has been too much pressure, certainly during the past quarter of a century, for the creation of additional judicial districts and the appointment of additional Federal judges. Without being critical, I cannot help but believe that our judicial machinery has not been employed to the extent which it was capable. Members of the bar, in my opinion, have contributed to the delays of the courts in the handling of cases pending in the courts. The record shows that there has been a decline in the number of actions brought in the Federal courts.

Notwithstanding the decline, demands have been made for additional judges. There have been, as I recall, approximately 100 additional judges within the past few years. And the record now shows that there are approximately 309 Federal judges and 15 upon the retired list. The bill under consideration calls for two additional circuit judges and six additional district judges.

During the past quarter of a century in nearly every session of Congress measures have been introduced to increase the number of judicial districts. I am repeating when I say that pressure has been brought to create additional judicial districts and to augment the number of judges. It is believed by many that political considerations have not always been absent in passing upon this important question.

I adverted to the fact, in my address yesterday, that the judiciary was the most important branch of our Government and should be absolutely free from politics. However, there are evidences that political considerations have not always been absent in the creation of new judicial districts and in the appointment of additional judges.

The Senator from Kansas has just condemned the efforts to secure additional judges and has indicated that the same are unworthy.

During the discussion yesterday it was clearly shown that there was no justification for the creation of additional judicial districts, and there was a complete absence of any reason that would warrant providing an additional judge for Florida and also for Oklahoma. The same may be said concerning the provision for an additional judge for southern California.

However, the forces behind this bill are so powerful that opposition will be unsuccessful. It is quite likely that in the next session of Congress new demands will be made for the creation of additional Federal districts and for the appointment of additional circuit and district judges. If the Senate did its duty, it would defeat this bill and give notice to the country that no additional Federal judges shall be provided for until the evidence conclusively shows that they are imperatively needed.

I shall vote against the bill and regret that the opposition will not be sufficient to defeat it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, on page 2, lines 5 and 6.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thank the Senators from New Jersey very much for letting me handle my own affairs in my own way and in my own time. I shall try not to occupy too much of the time of the Senate. The votes have been very overwhelming against my proposed amendments, as I had expected. The votes are very significant. However, they are not indicative of the maintenance of a sound public policy. I do not want the Senators who are in the Chamber now to think that their vote today can make an unsound public policy into a sound public policy. Litigation in this country has decreased, as the Senator from Utah said. In the face of decreasing litigation and of the need for fewer judges, there has been an increase of 100 Federal judges in recent years, and we now have before us a bill, upon which we are voting today, which proposes further to increase both the circuit court judges and the district court judges, in contravention of every existing fact, and every bit of information as to the trend of litigation in the country.

I cast no personal reflections upon my good friend from Arizona, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I have no feeling about any of these cases. I number among my friends particularly the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], a very warm friend who sits on my side of the Chamber. I do say upon my responsibility as a Senator of the United States that the Senate today has done a bad job from the standpoint of what would be an honest, decent, courageous, and straightforward policy regarding the Federal judiciary of the United States of America.

All the overwhelming "ayes" by which the bill may be passed will not change the accuracy or the soundness of that statement.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I am far from being irritated. The Senator is secure from my prejudice. Whenever a Senator so manfully and boldly champions the view he entertains, he is secure from my prejudice. I respect him rather than otherwise.

However, Mr. President, on one side are the Attorney General, the judicial conference, the special committee, and the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. They may all be wrong, and the Senator from Kansas may be right. I scarcely think so. However, I repeat that the Senator from Kansas is secure from my prejudice, as is anyone who so manfully argues what he believes.

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say.

Mr. REED. The Senator's committee could not follow the judicial conference, and did not follow the judicial conference. The committee could not follow the Attorney General, and did not follow the Attorney General. Therefore, the conclusions of the judicial conference and of the Attorney General were not regarded by the committee as sound and conclusive. Is that correct?

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct. The majority of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary did not agree that the entire number of judges asked for by the judicial conference and the Attorney General were necessary at this time. The committee should not be blamed for erring, if it erred. Taking the view of the Senator from Kansas, we erred on the side of conservatism and prudence.

Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I was praising the committee for taking the attitude it took. I am citing that circumstance only to point out that not even the judicial conference, presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, could make or did make a report which was acceptable to the Senator's committee. The same observation applies to the Attorney General. When Senators, in support of an additional judge for their State, quote such support as comes from the judicial conference or from the Attorney General, I leave the action of the Judiciary Committee as a complete answer to the fallibility or infallibility of such organizations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass.

The bill (S. 2185) was passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I may not be in the Chamber if and when conferees are appointed. If I should be absent, I respectfully request that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] be appointed conferees on the part of the Senate if it becomes necessary to appoint conferees.

I may be a little premature. I merely ask the Chair to appoint the Senators whom I have named as conferees on the part of the Senate if and when the time arrives for the appointment of conferees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If and when conferees are appointed, if the present occupant of the chair is then in the chair, he will announce that the Senators named are appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 839) to amend the Retirement Act of April 23, 1904, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON, and Mr. ANDREWS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5375) to promote nautical education, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BLAND, Mr. SIROVICH, Mr. RAMSPECK, Mr. WELCH, and Mr. CULKIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6746) to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts, to further the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BLAND, Mr. SIROVICH, Mr. RAMSPECK, Mr. WELCH, and Mr. CULKIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

PROGRAM FOR FINANCING RECOVERABLE EXPENDITURES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2864, Calendar No. 936.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2864) to provide for the financing of a program of recoverable expenditures, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	La Follette	Russell
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Logan	Sheppard
Bailey	George	Lucas	Shipstead

Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Danaher	King	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I realize that after 5 hours of a session of the Senate we are rather at a disadvantage in attempting to begin at this hour of the day the consideration of a bill of the importance of the one now under consideration. However, I wish to make a general statement concerning the measure, its background, the reasons for its introduction, and, in a general way, what it attempts to do.

Since 1929 or 1930 we have been progressively engaged in bringing more and more to bear upon our social and economic problems the authority, influence, and cooperation of the Federal Government. However regrettable the necessity for this may be, however much we might have preferred that the course of our economic, industrial, and social life might have made it unnecessary for the Government of the United States to engage in many of the activities which it has undertaken as a result of this condition, we have been confronted, as a great President once remarked, with a condition and not a theory.

I dare say that if the course of our economic life had gone along in the ordinary sequence of events, there would have been no demand by the people that the Government of the United States engage in many of the activities which it has undertaken in the past 6 or 8 years; and there would have been no necessity for the Government, as such, to have placed at the disposal of the American people its taxing power, its credit, and its cooperation in undertaking to guide the people out of the morass of depression and despondency toward what might be hoped to be the enjoyment of all the abundent resources with which our country has been blessed by nature.

But the conditions which have faced this Nation and the world since 1929 and 1930 have been of such a character as to make it incumbent upon the Government of the United States to indulge in activities probably not contemplated by the men and women of a previous generation. I say that all of us probably would have preferred that this necessity had not existed, unless there be some among us who, in advocacy of some theory, would prefer to see the Government engage in these activities in the normal course of the exercise of its functions.

We have in this country unbounded resources; we have almost unbounded credit; we have almost unbounded reserves of money and credit. The Federal Reserve Board on yesterday made public a statement showing the gradual improvement in business conditions over a period of several weeks or months, and a week or so ago it also released information showing that the peak of reserve credit in this country has almost again been reached. Notwithstanding the fact that we have unbounded credit and unbounded resources, and that we have a reserve which has been multiplying and accumulating over a period of years, drawn from nearly every other nation in the world, due to world conditions, we still have a very serious economic condition, involving the unemployment of almost 10,000,000 able-bodied men who are anxious to work, who desire to make their contribution toward recovery and toward the enjoyment of normal life in this Nation but who are without employment today, by no fault of their own.

Whether this situation has been produced by any shortcoming of Government in previous years we need not now stop to inquire. Whether some policy followed in the years gone by has brought this debacle upon the American people or whether it might have been avoided by another course not pursued it would be futile now to discuss. We have the condition. We have such a condition that money and men are not being brought together in sufficient proximity with resources to bring about the production of commodities for sale in the market place, resulting in purchasing power on the part of the American people that would enable them to absorb unemployment.

We have tried the Works Progress Administration which, I think, has on the whole, done a splendid piece of work, involving the employment of about 3,000,000 men at any given time—sometimes a little greater number and sometimes a fewer number. The activities of the Works Progress Administration have had, perhaps, some grievous faults, probably incident and inherent in a widespread unemployment program brought together in haste as a result of economic conditions which have to be met and dealt with at least, in the first instance, without great deliberation, but in spite of its faults and its shortcomings, this program has brought to almost every township, every school district, every county, every city, and every State in the Nation permanent values in the way of permanent improvements they never would have obtained and could never have hoped for if they had relied upon their own immediate resources and ability. Yet with all the work, all the construction that has been accomplished by the Works Progress Administration, millions of men have still remained unemployed.

We have also had the Public Works Administration, based upon a slightly different foundation and underlying it a slightly different theory. In view of the fact that during the progress of the P. W. A., as we call it, approximately $4,000,000,000 worth of non-Federal projects have been undertaken and completed in the United States, with all the opportunities for misconduct and the misuse of funds that the expenditure of such enormous sums of money might involve, I believe I can say—and I think the Senate and the country will concur in the statement—that no similar amount of money was ever expended under the jurisdiction of any individual, either in war or in peace, that has involved so little criticism, so little misappropriation or waste of funds, or so little lack of business acumen and foresight. Yet in spite of the vast sums expended by the Public Works Administration, added to the amount spent by the Works Progress Administration, we have not been able to absorb the unemployment which has faced our country for nearly a decade.

We have also had the Civilian Conservation Corps, which has drawn from every community throughout the Nation young men between 18 and 25 years who not only have done a fine job physically in the improvement of all sorts of facilities on which they have labored but who at the same time had brought to them a new conception of the relationship between the Government of the United States and the people and a new relationship between them and society of which they are a part and whose responsibilities must in the very near future be assumed by them.

These men, numbering in the aggregate two or three million, averaging from 300,000 to 500,000 at any one time, returning to their homes a very large proportion of the modest pay which they have received, have been thus kept probably in large numbers from the relief rolls in the States, counties, and cities, and because of the character of their work, because of the improvement—moral, educational, and physical—which has been brought to them through this work, we can all testify to the fact that there is almost a universal sentiment in the Nation for the permanent adoption of the Civilian Conservation Corps as a part of the activities of our Government. So well have they done their work, so fine an impression have they made in every community where one of their camps has been located, that in my State there has never been a movement or a suggestion to remove one of them from a neighborhood in which they are located that has not brought a protest from the community against such removal. But, in spite of these things, we still have unemployment.

So, Mr. President, we are today confronted with a situation which challenges the earnest consideration and the single-minded devotion of every man, woman, and child in America, and certainly every man and woman in a responsible position, without regard to politics, geography, color, or religious distinction.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The Senator stated that scarcely any project had been removed, or its removal talked of, without a protest from the community. It reminded me of a letter I received from one of my constituents, who said:

DEAR SENATOR: Stop this blankety-blank spending.

Last paragraph:

Don't cut off any of our projects.

[Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. That emphasizes the old statement that "the tariff is a local issue"; and very frequently expenditures are.

As I was saying, without regard to undertaking to fix responsibility—and I do not attempt it; men have been writing for a decade about the responsibility for the condition which faces this country—without regard to the responsibility, political or governmental or legislative or executive, we are faced with a problem which we have not yet solved, the question of unemployment in the United States; and I do not know how near we are to a final solution of the problem.

We started out at the beginning of this administration in an effort to solve it through the recommendations of business in the enactment of the National Recovery Act, sponsored by the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], which was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. Whatever may have been the defects of that law, whatever may have been the lack of wisdom in Congress in framing the law, and whatever may have been the misfortune of the type of case upon which the test was made, it was an effort initiated by industry, by business in cooperation with the Government and those who labor, to solve, at least for the time being, the economic problem which faced the United States in 1933.

We have tried to solve the question of unemployment by the wage and hour law. I have always believed and I now believe that if we have reached the time or if we shall ever reach the time in this Nation when we must decide whether all our people shall be able to work three-fourths of the time or whether three-fourths of them shall work all the time and one-fourth of them never work at all, we must decide in favor of the former of the two courses. If there is not sufficient work in the United States in the production of the necessaries of life and in their distribution so that all of our people who are capable of labor may share that labor in order to support themselves and their families, and look their fellow men in the face with pride and assurance under a great nation, then it seems to me we must devise some other alternative by which we may provide for the fair distribution of labor among those able and willing to work.

In order that we might make a beginning, that we might start the process of distribution of available labor among available laborers, we enacted the wage and hour law, by which we have undertaken to cut down unreasonable hours, in order that more men might be able to be employed, and in order that we might lift unreasonably low wages, so that purchasing power among those who do work might be enlarged, and thereby they might be enabled to buy more of the things that other men and women produce, and with the endless chain of increase in the purchase of commodities, increase in their production, and automatic increase again from time to time in purchasing power, we might ultimately reach a time when all our people might be able to work in the production of things necessary for the enjoyment of life in the United States.

As another means of solving the question of unemployment we enacted the Social Security Act, designed to give a measure of security against unemployment in abnormal times and in abnormal amounts. We have provided a beginning, which I think is only a beginning, in old-age assistance, in order that there may be a time in the history of every man's life in America when he will feel that after he has devoted the best of his years to activity, whether in war or in peace, whether in business or in the schoolroom or behind the counter or in a bank or on the farm or in the church, and has been unable to accumulate a sufficient amount of this world's goods to enable him to look forward to retirement with any degree of assurance or consolation, a generous and just society will make it unnecessary for such a man or such a women to look forward with fear and trepidity toward the coming of old age; and in order that those persons might retire from the field of actual labor and give way to younger and abler and stronger men, and thus spread employment among those more qualified to perform labor in any field, we endeavored to make at least a contribution toward the solution of the question of unemployment in the United States.

Mr. President, all these methods, and others, too, which I need not recount, but with which every Senator is familiar, have been undertaken in a tardy fashion by the United States of America; for in nearly every other progressive nation in the entire world such activities have been undertaken and carried much further over a period of a quarter of a century than is the case in the United States.

So, Mr. President, we now find ourselves with millions of our people unemployed. We find ourselves with undeveloped resources. We find a lack of purchasing power on the part of the average man and woman and the average family in America, which makes it impossible for the American people to enjoy the degree of prosperity, the degree of security, the degree of faith in the future which, in my judgment, are essential to the perpetuity of our institutions.

We talk about an annual national income of forty, fifty, sixty, seventy, or eighty billion dollars. In his message to Congress at the beginning of this session the President set as a goal an annual income of the American people of $80,000,000,000. There is nothing fantastic about that figure. I should not be satisfied to look forward to a time 10 years from now and feel that $80,000,000,000 was the limit of the annual income of the American people. I think the time will come when we shall reach not only eighty but ninety or one hundred billion dollars, and it may be that before the youngest Member of the United States Senate ceases to be an active member of society we may even reach $150,000,000,000 as the annual income of the American people. But we cannot continually look with indifference upon unemployment, and the unsatisfied condition of a large proportion of the American people in the enjoyment of the natural resources of our country, the enjoyment of an opportunity to live and to educate their children, and to enjoy not only the necessaries but some of the luxuries of life.

There is a large amount of unused capital in the United States; and the reason why it is unused is a matter upon which we need not spend a great deal of time. We hear much discussion about faith and confidence. Of course, our whole business and economic structure is based upon faith and confidence. If one does not have faith in a bank, he does not put any money in it. So long as he has faith in it, he will keep his money there; but the very moment he begins to lose faith in a bank, he takes out his money. So long as we know we can get our money, we do not want it; but the very moment we begin to suspect that we may not be able to get it, we want it.

Undoubtedly there has been and there is a hesitation on the part of private capital to venture very far out from shore in the investment of its money in construction, or to some extent in business enterprises; and there are some persons in our country who take the position that it is due to some act or policy of our Government that men are not willing to rush forward as they did in 1929 and invest their money in stocks or in other business ventures.

There are those who contend that we owe too much money now, that the debt of our country is too large, and that, because of this enormous debt on the part of our Federal Government, business is hesitant and timid, and that we are on the road to bankruptcy because of the size of the national debt.

I share the same regret with respect to the necessity for the increase of our public debt that I expressed a short time ago in reference to the embarkation of our Government on the various activities which have characterized it for the last 2 years. But in determining whether we are on our way toward bankruptcy as a people, I think it is legitimate not only to consider the size of the debt of the United States Government but to consider the size of the debts of the American people combined and in the aggregate. When we consider the size of the debts of the American people in the aggregate, I find nothing to give alarm to our country.

In 1921 the total debts of the American people, all sorts of debts—Federal debts, State debts, county debts, city debts, farm debts, home debts, railroad debts, all sorts of debts——

Mr. WALSH. Private and public?

Mr. BARKLEY. Private and public, amounted to $110,000,000,000. By 1926 the figure had risen to $140,000,000,000. In 1921 the debt of the United States Government was approximately $24,000,000,000. It gradually went down, under a refunding plan which was adopted, I may say, in the administration of Woodrow Wilson. The public debt of the United States declined until in 1930 it was $15,922,000,000—practically $16,000,000,000.

However, while the Federal debt had declined from $24,000,000,000, in 1921, to $16,000,000,000, in 1930, the total debts of the American people of all kinds, public and private, had risen from $110,000,000,000 to $161,000,000,000. So that during the period from 1921 to 1930, while the public debt of the Government of the United States was declining about $8,000,000,000, the total debts of all the people, public and private, had risen about $50,000,000,000.

In 1931 the public debt began to increase again. It rose from $16,000,000,000, in 1930, to over $19,000,000,000, in 1932, and to over $22,000,000,000 in 1933, and at the end of 1938 it was $36,576,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. In a moment. While the combined debts of all the American people, public and private, had risen to $161,000,000,000, practically, in round figures, in 1930, by 1938 the total combined indebtedness, of all kinds, of all the people of the United States had dropped to $155,000,000,000. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not wish to interrupt the course of the Senator's argument, but there are two matters about which I should like to inquire, if it will not disturb his thought.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. When the Government debt dropped to $16,000,000,000, were there any indirect debts, or debts guaranteed by the Government? Had the R. F. C. been established at that time, and were there any Government-guaranteed debts, or any indirect obligations at that time?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was established in February or March 1932, I believe, and began to issue bonds at that time in order to obtain money with which to carry out its purposes. To what extent it had issued bonds to guarantee obligations of the Government in 1932 I cannot say. But the other agencies which have since been created, such as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Housing Administration, and other activities which have been established since 1933, did not exist in 1932.

Mr. ADAMS. If I may make one further inquiry in order to get the judgment of the Senator, I have had a feeling that the depression which came upon us in 1929 and 1930 was more chargeable to the vast increase in private and corporate indebtedness than to any other single cause. I wonder what the judgment of the Senator from Kentucky is on that question.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is much to be said in support of that theory, but it is a historic fact that all periods of prosperity, so-called, whether real or spurious—and many of us believe that especially in 1927, 1928, and 1929 the prosperity was not real—when everyone in this country thought that there never again would come a day when anyone would be steeped in poverty, when all the poorhouses were to become fading memories in the minds of men—during all periods of intense prosperity, whether real or spurious, there has been an increase in the debt of the people of the United States, and from 1920 to 1930, the period referred to as the heyday of prosperity in the United States, the average increase in the debt of the people of our country was about $6,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. ADAMS. So, while the use of credit is essential to a prosperous condition, an excess use of it brings on depression.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Credit is like many other things; used properly and in the right proportions it is an indispensable agency of the people, but, like other things, it can be abused; it can be carried too far, and undoubtedly in the latter part of the decade from 1920 to 1930, which was characterized by a speculative fever such as I cannot remember—and I doubt whether the Senator from Colorado, who is much younger than I am, can remember such a period—there was an excess and an abuse of credit, spurred on by a speculative mania not altogether discouraged by men in high places in the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. We could go beyond that; it was encouraged by men in high places, was it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is true. The point I am trying to make is that all our wealth in this country stands back of all our debts. Whether a debt is public or private, the property of the people of the United States stands behind the debt. Otherwise, it would be unsafe for us to indulge in credit of any kind.

The figures may be somewhat varied by either an increase or a decrease in the general field of indebtedness in the last 6 months, but when we consider that at the end of 1938 the entire debt of all the people of the United States, public and private, which constitutes a mortgage upon all the property of the United States, had declined from $161,000,000,000 to $155,000,000,000, I think we can say with some degree of assurance that we are not headed toward bankruptcy.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator does not feel that the Federal Government should consume all of the reduction in private and corporate indebtedness, does he? Some of us are a little uneasy lest in Government financing we go beyond what may be considered proper credit, and go to extremes, perhaps, until we reach the point which private credit expansion reached in 1929. There is a point beyond which the Government credit may be expanded too far.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree that there may be. How near we have come to that point is a matter which is open to legitimate dispute. But I will say to the Senator from Colorado, and to other Senators, and all others interested in any views which I may entertain, that I regret that it has been necessary for the Government of the United States to borrow a single dollar in order to furnish credit to those who are entitled to it in the United States because private credit has not been available to them.

I would infinitely have preferred that the banks and other lending agencies in the United States should have furnished the credit so essential for the American people rather than have the Government of the United States do it, but in the absence of either the ability or the willingness of private lending agencies to furnish the credit, in my judgment, there was no alternative, except the entire collapse of our economic and social order, unless the Government of the United States for the time being should enter the breach and provide the credit which others were either unable or unwilling to provide.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's analysis of debts of various kinds is exceedingly interesting. However, I should like to have one further analysis if the Senator is able to give it. The Senator now is speaking entirely of the Government debts. There are two kinds of debts. There are debts in the shape of loans or other investments, if there be investments, which will bring returns eventually, in theory at least, and I think usually in practice, which will pay them off. Such debts are very different from debts which we never can expect to recover. Can the Senator give us accurate information as to how much of the public debt of the United States is of such a nature that we have reason to believe it will be repaid? What provision has been made in the way of recovering on loans made by the Government? What proportion of the Government debt is represented by loans which we can expect to be repaid to the Government so it will not be necessary to use the taxing power of the Federal Government to pay it off? I hope I have made my question plain.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I understand the question. That is a situation which I think is important to keep in mind all the time in considering debt, and it is a situation which is not always accurately kept in mind by those who discuss the public debt of the United States. I am not able at the moment to give the Senator the exact figures. Assuming that our present National Treasury debt amounts to about $40,000,000,000, my recollection is that approximately one-fourth of that is recoverable, but I will get the exact figures. I may be slightly in error as to the approximate amount.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator realizes, of course, that if we go into debt with a reasonable assurance that the debt will be repaid to us such a debt should not give us as much concern as a debt to pay which we must use the taxing power. There is a great difference between the two. A large debt which under ordinary circumstances will be reduced through repayments of loans to the United States Treasury should not give us great concern, as I see it, whereas if we go into debt rapidly and to a very large amount, and the debt is of such a nature that we know the people of the United States must be taxed to pay it; that debt should excite the concern of every legislator and everyone who has anything to do with it.

Mr. BARKLEY. At the beginning of 1933, following a year in which there had been no activity whatever among the land banks, scarcely a loan having been made in 1932, and very few in 1931, the farm-loan system set up in 1916 having ceased to function, in order to inject new blood into its veins, and make it flow, we started out by appropriating $125,000,000 from the Treasury to be put into the capital stock of the Federal land banks, and later we put in some more money, all of which is, of course, recoverable. We have loaned about $3,000,000,000 to home owners in the United States, all of which is recoverable in theory. Some of it is not recoverable against individuals, in which case the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, like any other money lender, takes possession of the property, holds it or rents it, and so manages it as to get back what the Government has put into it. Those are merely two instances of loans and investments made by the Government of the United States through its Treasury which are supposed to be recoverable.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Kentucky certainly does not contend that the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, amounting to over $3,000,000,000, are included in the direct debt of the United States Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that a part of the money which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loaned at the beginning was money made available out of the United States Treasury. Of course, expenditures, due to increase in the personnel, whose salaries have been paid, all of the W. P. A. expenditures, ranging all the way from one and three-quarter billion dollars to a little over $3,000,000,000, represent money that has been spent without any hope of recovery. We do not expect to get that money back. But I think it is well within the truth—and I will get the exact figures—that almost one-quarter of the entire direct debt of the United States may ultimately be recovered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kentucky will find himself very much in error in that statement, because nearly all of the recoverable items in loans made by the different lending corporations are not included in the direct public debt.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not all of them. The Senator is partly right, and I am partly right. Not all of them were included. But at the beginning of the program the Treasury of the United States was drawn upon for some of these funds.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amounts advanced out of the General Treasury were to purchase the capital stock of some of these corporations, and on the capital stock will fall the first loss. I think the Senator will find upon investigation that he is very much in error when he says that one-fourth of the present direct debt amounting to $10,000,000,000—one-fourth of $40,000,000,000—will be recoverable.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I am mistaken——

Mr. BYRD. I think the Senator will find that not over 5 percent of the present direct debt is recoverable. He will find, on the contrary, that there is going to be a large loss from the Goverment lending corporations, and that those losses will have to be transferred to the direct debt or paid by current taxation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think anybody can say now whether the contingent losses that may occur will be large or small.

Mr. BYRD. The reason we cannot say whether they are going to be large or small is because there has been no appraisement made of the assets of these corporations. Some have been operating for 5 years without an appraisement being made. The Senate adopted a resolution recently providing for the first appraisement to be made of the assets of these corporations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Many of these corporations have kept their affairs current, and not only have they not lost money, but have paid back to the Government more than they have acquired from the Government.

Mr. BYRD. The Commodities Credit Corporation has lost its capital stock twice. Its first capital stock was $100,000,000 paid direct by the Treasury Department. It lost $94,000,000 one year. The next year it lost $119,000,000, or 119 percent of its capital stock. That was repaid by direct Treasury appropriation.

The Senator does not contend that all the loans made by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are recoverable, does he?

Mr. BARKLEY. There are large losses due to default on the part of home owners who have been unable to keep up their payments, but in every case the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has possession of the property. Whether there will be an ultimate loss or not is dependent on whether the property may be sold for the amount of the loan.

Mr. BYRD. Even the most casual investigation will disclose that there are heavy losses resulting from those loans, because there are large numbers of properties which are now in default and have to be repossessed by the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the contrary, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, while it has had individual losses, on the whole has made sufficient profit that it now has a surplus of nearly two hundred and fifty million or two hundred and seventy million dollars. From that surplus there would be a reduction of probably $150,000,000, but even so, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has over $100,000,000 of net profit.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is it not true that the so-called profits that now exist in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are due to the fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation took advantage of the gold-clause legislation which we enacted here and derived the benefits of that devaluation?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; not to that extent. There may have been a small profit, but a part of the profit made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been made by reason of the fact that it was able to borrow money at lower rates than those charged by it in making loans. A part of the profit has been made in that way. I am not able to answer the Senator as to whether or not any of the profit which is credited to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was due to gold operations.

Mr. McCARRAN. I make the statement—and I hope the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation took advantage of a "preview" of the devaluation of the dollar, and thus credited itself with a profit due to that process as it passed through the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have never heard of such a thing; and, so far as I know, it has not been revealed in hearings before any of the committees of Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think if the Senator were to investigate that matter he would find that my statement is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall look into the subject, but I never heard of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose it be true; what is wrong about it?

Mr. McCARRAN. There is nothing wrong about it, except that if someone else did it, it would be very wrong.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not any more so than if anyone else speculated in silver, gold, wheat, cotton, or anything else.

Mr. McCARRAN. If someone else had a "preview" as to silver, or were advised as to what would be tomorrow's price on silver based upon the position of the Government, or what would be the price of gold based upon the position of the Government, I think it would be wrong. Such a thing has been condemned.

Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. BANKHEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think the able Senator was present when the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] asked Mr. Jones a question——

Mr. BARKLEY. Evidently I was not present at that time. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Jones' statement to the Senator from Colorado was that he would be ashamed to state what the losses would be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; I know. The Senator from Delaware and the newspapers played up that statement. Mr. Jones was talking about loans to small business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. All right. They are loans.

Mr. BARKLEY. Although he said he might be ashamed to undertake to predict the losses which would be incurred in connection with any further loans to small business, about which he was talking, the Senator will agree that, on the whole and throughout its entire operations, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation now has a profit to its credit of about $250,000,000 or $260,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is one of the best-managed institutions we have; but Mr. Jones said he would be ashamed to state what the losses would be from loans to small business. That statement was a part of the record.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was a more or less casual remark made in reply to a question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It was in reply to a question by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Jones was first asked whether or not he had had losses in connection with small-business loans, and he said he had. I think the Senator from Colorado asked him how much the losses were.

Mr. TOWNSEND. He asked him if they would run as high as 10 to 20 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Jones said he would be ashamed to say; and the newspaper articles played up the word "ashamed" and emphasized it, but said nothing about all the rest of the testimony which Mr. Jones gave.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield first to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it would be extremely unfortunate to have an erroneous and inaccurate record made on this occasion on the subject of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation trading in gold. I have been a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate practically all the time since the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized. I was a member of the subcommittee as well as of the full committee during the discussion of the gold devaluation bill, and during the course of the hearings on that question the whole history of gold from the time of the passage of the gold bill was gone into at that hearing. I assert, Mr. President, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did not at any time engage in any trading, speculation, purchase, or sale of gold following the gold devaluation.

The Senator from Nevada is evidently misinformed. I now call on any Member of the Senate who is under the belief, or who understands that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at any time engaged in gold speculation, to produce the evidence.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for the positiveness of his statement. I had never heard of such a thing. I think I have been present in the committee whenever Mr. Jones and others connected with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have testified on any legislation affecting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and I never heard of any such transaction until now. Certainly I think that if there had been any such activity on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in speculating in gold we should have heard something about it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. With reference to the statement of the Senator from Delaware, I recall the statement of Mr. Jones; and I know that thereafter it received considerable publicity in the press. I took the trouble to investigate the subject. In fairness to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation we should know that what Mr. Jones then stated was that he estimated certain losses in connection with so-called business loans. The total estimated losses to date of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are $125,000,000. When we investigate that subject we find that in some instances in which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made loans to businesses it has taken title to the plants. What the losses finally will be no one can tell. However, such loans have been estimated as losses to date. They have been estimated against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. However, at the same time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has a surplus of $250,000,000. Therefore, if it should finally lose every dollar it has included in the estimated loss, it would be left with a surplus of $125,000,000.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has paid the Treasury 3 percent interest, whereas the average interest paid by the Treasury during the borrowing activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been only 1½ percent. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has paid in interest to the Treasury more than $200,000,000. Therefore, when we analyze the statement we find, in fairness to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, that it has a surplus of $250,000,000, which is $125,000,000 more than all the losses which Mr. Jones stated before our committee were included in his estimate.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the $125,000,000 which has been chalked up to possible losses included losses to which Mr. Jones referred—as I thought casually in the committee—as some of those with respect to which he would be ashamed of the amount.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. For example, the loss in Chicago in the Dawes bank, about which we heard so much talk, had been carried as an estimated loss in a large amount, whereas today it is recognized that the total loss anyone could estimate in that loan is $5,000,000 instead of the $85,000,000 which was estimated at one time.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection I wish to say that in considering any institution, whether it be the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a building and loan association, or a bank, we do not judge the efficiency of its operations by some individual loss it may sustain, or by the aggregate of its losses. All lending institutions have losses. They lend money to people from whom they cannot collect entirely. When we consider the success or failure of any lending institution we take its operations in the aggregate, and not individually. We cannot judge them otherwise. All such losses, whether by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or the Federal Housing Administration—which do not make loans, but guarantees—or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any of them, in connection with which the Government has made direct loans, are losses necessarily incident to such activities. When Congress passed the law authorizing the loans we knew in advance that we were assuming some risk of loss, and that we might not be able to collect everything back that the Government had loaned. However, in the emergency which existed at the time it was felt that the Government could afford to take the risk and assume the possibility of losses in years to come.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. So far as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is concerned, if it were liquidated today it could return to the Treasury the $500,000,000 capital stock and have a surplus of $125,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. In addition it would have any amounts which might be recovered out of the $125,000,000 now estimated as loss.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. I was just about to suggest that not only is there a certain surplus of $125,000,000, but undoubtedly a substantial amount can be recovered out of the estimated loss of $125,000,000.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield. All this is leading me away from the trend of my talk; but I am glad to engage in debate.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to address a question, through the able leader, to the able Senator from Alabama. Is it contended that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did not receive a benefit from the devaluation of the dollar?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I made no statement on that subject. The only statement I made was that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did not buy or sell gold and thereby profit as a result of the devaluation of the dollar. I made no statement, and intended to make none, about the result upon the assets of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by virtue of the change in the value of the dollar.

Mr. McCARRAN. If I may use a very homely expression, I am very glad to have the Senator straighten himself out on that question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not straighten myself out. I straightened out the statement of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. No; I have been straight all the time. The Senator was misinformed, but he has now been informed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator left the impression on me, and I think he did on others here, that he asserted that the R. F. C. made a profit by buying gold and reselling it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Oh, no! I suppose the R. F. C. never bought anything. I hope it did not, because it would have violated the law if it did; but it took advantage of the devaluation of the dollar and gained that advantage through the Federal Reserve banks turning over to the R. F. C. a certain proportion of the devaluation profits.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no!

Mr. McCARRAN. Oh, yes!

Mr. BARKLEY. I got the same impression that the Senator from Alabama got from the Senator's question a while ago.

Mr. McCARRAN. My question was entirely correct. My question was based on facts, and I would not care whether the Senator from New York or anyone else contradicted it. The facts are the same, that the R. F. C. gained a paper profit by the devaluation of the dollar. I wonder if some Senator will deny that statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the R. F. C. the only institution in this country that did?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; wait a minute. Do not hedge around the corner.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not hedging around the corner.

Mr. McCARRAN. Answer the question, if ycu please. Did the R. F. C. gain a benefit by way of a paper profit from the devaluation of the dollar?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has brought up that matter. I am not able to tell whether that is the case or not.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am sorry. I thought the able leader was able to tell.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not know just what the Senator from Nevada has in mind. Was it in the automatic increase in the value of some securities they held?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; not any security at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. In what way is the Senator stating that the R. F. C., not by the purchase of anything and the sale of it at a higher price, but simply by the automatic act of the devaluation of the dollar, had a paper profit on any asset that it held?

Mr. McCARRAN. It gained that profit through the Federal Reserve bank turning over to the R. F. C. a division of its profits. Will the able Senator from New York deny that statement?

Mr. WAGNER. I deny it so far as my information goes, if the Senator will yield. I have been present, of course, at all of our meetings, having had to preside, and particularly at all of our investigations of the activities of the R. F. C., and I never heard of the R. F. C. making any profit as a result of a transaction with reference to gold.

What the Senator may have in mind is that part of the profits from devaluation, in addition to that which went into the stabilization fund were assigned to the Federal Reserve banks to permit them to make industrial loans; but out of the one-hundred-and-thirty-odd-million dollars so allocated, I understand the record shows that only about $20,000,000 has actually been loaned to industry. But, so far as I recall, unless the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] has other information, there has never been any evidence before the Committee on Banking and Currency that any part of that fund was ever transferred over to the R. F. C. for their use for the purpose of making loans. So far as I know, their money has come entirely from the issuance of their securities, debentures, and notes.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have not the floor, but the able junior Senator from California has propounded a question, and I should be glad to have the leader answer it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, is it not a fact that the total profits from the increased value of gold were about $2,800,000,000?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. DOWNEY. And of that $2,800,000,000, $2,000,000,000 went into the stabilization fund; and, while I have not the exact figures in my mind, I am very sure that a portion of the $800,000,000 was used as capital for some of the lending agencies of the R. F. C.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator upon investigation will find that he is in error, or I am. I never have heard of that. I know that there is now $500,000,000 of free gold, and of the $2,800,000,000, $139,000,000, I think, was transferred over to the Federal Reserve Banks to be utilized for the purpose of making loans to industry, and very little of it has been used for that purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is, $139,000,000 of the $2,800,000,000?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and the Treasury now has some $500,000,000 of free gold.

Mr. McCARRAN. And the balance went to the R. F. C. Am I right?

Mr. WAGNER. No; all of the profits from devaluation not a part of the stabilization fund remained entirely in the control of the Treasury.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not want my question to be obscured.

Mr. WAGNER. The R. F. C. has none of that fund. I am very positive of that.

Mr. McCARRAN. How much of that fund did the R. F. C. gain the benefit of?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know of any that it gained any direct benefit of, because it was not transferred to the R. F. C. I suppose the assets of the R. F. C. gained whatever benefit all of us gained who owned any property as a result of the increased prices and values which came as a result of the devaluation of the dollar. We had a long discussion before as to the effect of devaluation upon commodity prices in this country; and the only benefit that I know the R. F. C. would have gained is that its assets increased just as the assets all over the country increased.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me make this statement now, baldly, and then let the able leader refute it when he gets the facts. I say that the R. F. C. did gain by reason of the devaluation of the dollar.

Mr. WAGNER. How?

Mr. McCARRAN. I say that its gain was due to the fact that it knew the devaluation of the dollar was to take place.

Mr. BARKLEY. How did it take advantage of it?

Mr. McCARRAN. And it took advantage of it by deriving benefits by reason of the devaluation.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator states that the R. F. C. bought gold before the devaluation, and then sold it at a profit after the devaluation?

Mr. McCARRAN. Either directly or indirectly.

Mr. BARKLEY. How would it have done it indirectly?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot answer.

Mr. BARKLEY. How would it have done it at all under the law?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot answer that question, because I do not think it could have done it under the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of the profit growing out of the devaluation of the dollar, amounting to $2,800,000,000, $2,000,000,000 went into the stabilization fund, and part went to the Federal Reserve banks. In providing money for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans, or as a part of its capital stock, which originally was to be called when needed, as I recall now, it may be that some of this profit made by the Treasury was allocated to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but the only profit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could have made out of that was to loan the money to business at a higher rate than it paid the Treasury for the money. There was no automatic profit, and I do not understand how there could have been any automatic profit to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation growing out of the devaluation of the dollar.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. I only wish to say that while this discussion has been going on I have been looking at the financial statement of the R. F. C. from February 1932 until a few months ago. If the R. F. C. made any money out of buying gold and selling it, it certainly was not entered in their financial statement. I have taken the trouble to ask Mr. Schram over the telephone, and he said that he had never heard of any such transaction. I then told him that I wanted him to inquire, because he had not been with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from 1932, and he has stated to me that he will do so and will advise me what he ascertains, and I will give the Senator the information when I receive it.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the Senator from Kentucky will yield just one moment more, I should not expect that the R. F. C. would violate the law and admit it; neither should I expect them to violate the law at all; but I do say that out of the devaluation of the dollar, due to the acts of Congress, they gained a paper profit which is reflected in their statements. I wonder if the able Senator from South Carolina will deny that statement.

Mr. BYRNES. No; I only state that I understood the Senator from Nevada to say that the R. F. C., being in possession of——

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not asking the Senator from South Carolina for any statement. Will he deny my statement made on the floor?

Mr. BYRNES. I evidently did not know what the Senator's statement was.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will repeat it.

Mr. BYRNES. The RECORD will show it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Would the Senator like to have me repeat it?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I heard the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not think he would.

Mr. BYRNES. The RECORD will show the statement. If I am mistaken about it, I have wasted some time, and I will apologize to the Senator; but I understood the Senator to say that the R. F. C., knowing that gold was to be devalued, had some transactions out of which they made money. That was all I was interested in, because I did not see it in this statement; and if the R. F. C. issued a financial statement not showing a profit which had been made, I desired to know it. I was advised that there was no profit at that time, so far as the present chairman knows.

Mr. McCARRAN. Did the R. F. C. advise the able Senator from South Carolina that they made no profit out of the devaluation of the gold dollar?

Mr. BYRNES. That was what I asked, and the present chairman said he had no information to that effect, had never heard of it before, but that he is going to make an inquiry, since, if that is true, I want to advise the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say to the Senator, if the Senator from Kentucky will yield, that if the R. F. C. did not make a profit, then it is entirely different from many other concerns which did make a profit out of the devaluation of the dollar.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not understand that was the contention, that like everyone else they made some money. It may be so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to say to the able Senator from Kentucky that there was no desire on my part to criticize the R. F. C. I was trying to quote exactly what was said. I read from the record. We were talking about small loans, and I asked:

> Did not the survey that the Commerce Department made and which was placed in the record of the Mead hearings show that you had made loans to all who were in any way eligible?
> Mr. JONES. We think we have. We are not infallible. We make plenty of mistakes and plenty of bad loans. We will have a very substantial percentage of loss on our business loans.
>
> Senator GLASS. A practical answer to Senator BARKLEY's question is already in the record in the report of these experts from the Department of Commerce who examined the rejected loan applications.
>
> Mr. JONES. That is a very good answer; yes.
>
> Senator ADAMS. The liberality of the policy is going to show up in the losses you take?
> Mr. JONES. Yes. We are going to have plenty of losses.

What he actually said—and I am going to ask the chairman who changed it—was, "I am ashamed to tell you what the losses will be." I ask the chairman of the committee who was authorized to change the record.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. Just a moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to know exactly what was said.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was present at the time when Mr. Jones said he was ashamed to undertake to estimate how much the losses would be.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Who authorized——

Mr. BARKLEY. Just a moment. I still say that that was a casual remark made by Mr. Jones, on the spur of the moment, in response to a question. All witnesses before the committee have an opportunity to revise their remarks before they are printed, and no doubt Mr. Jones took advantage of that courtesy, and when the corrected hearings were printed, they showed that he said he was unable to estimate the number of losses, but that there would be plenty.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is mistaken. The hearings were printed with that statement in them, and they have been changed since.

Mr. BARKLEY. One copy of the hearings was printed, in which Mr. Jones evidently exercised his right to correct what he said, and I will read that to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have read it, "We are going to have plenty of losses," taking out the statement that he was ashamed to say what the losses would be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Originally the Senator emphasized the fact that he said he was ashamed to say how many there would be, but that there would be plenty.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is exactly what I stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator was reading from the original testimony, I suppose, which was used by the press in publicizing what Mr. Jones stated. No one denies now, and no one is attempting to deny, that there will be considerable losses in the small-business loans. We are not denying that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am sure of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I imagine that if the Senator, who is an experienced businessman, and a banker, I believe, were to go over the records of any active bank in the United States, he would find that there have been a good many losses on individual loans.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Exactly so; and there have been losses in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as Mr. Jones stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. We do not dispute the fact that there are losses.

Mr. TOWNSEND. All I was attempting to do was to state exactly what Mr. Jones said. I was not criticizing.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I contend is that we must judge this organization by its entire record and not by the individual losses which have occurred here and there.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I was led astray by all these questions——

Mr. TAFT. I will bring the Senator back.

Mr. BARKLEY. I really wanted to complete the basis of my remarks in order to get down to the bill. But I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator advanced the argument, as I understood it, that we need not fear the Government debt, because the total debt is not any larger, and he says that the debt now is only a little larger than in 1926. The private debt has apparently decreased by about $5,000,000,000, while the Government debt has more than doubled, from nineteen billion to forty billion. I do not understand the relevancy of the statement as to the private debt. It seems to me that what we are concerned about is raising taxes to pay the interest on the Government debt. Private debt largely pays for itself out of the earnings of the business which is covered by the debt. I do not understand the relevancy of these total debt figures in answer to criticism of the size of the Government debt.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is an able Senator and an able lawyer, and he is a student of finance and public matters. What I stated was that the total assets of all the people of the United States stood behind the total debt, whether it is a private debt or a public debt. Of course, there is one difference between private and public debt, that the one who owes the private debt cannot levy taxes in order to reimburse himself for the money loaned, while the Government can do so.

Mr. TAFT. There is also the difference that the Government cannot earn any money on any of its debt, and the private borrowers can earn money.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, but while the Senator is talking about interest, I will say to him that the interest charges for carrying the public debt of the United States, which is double what it was in 1929 and 1930, are less than they were in 1932.

Mr. TAFT. But it is also true that if there were the slightest return to prosperity those interest charges would mount very rapidly. We cannot hope to have interest at 1 percent for any extended time.

Mr. BARKLEY. They might mount on future borrowings, but they would not mount on the existing obligations, unless they were refunded at their maturity.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that about two-thirds of this debt is short-term debt, payable practically within 5 years?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; there was a limitation of $30,000,000,000, which was increased recently to $40,000,000,000, I believe.

Mr. TAFT. Because we have reached the $30,000,000,000 limit on short-term debt, which supports the statement I made.

Mr. BARKLEY. The long-term obligations, when they are completed, will absorb probably 80 or 90 percent of the total debt.

Mr. TAFT. The difficulty with the Government debt is that it is necessary to go out and raise taxes to pay it, and we have reached the point where no one, not even the able Senator from Kentucky, can devise a system, which will anything like raise the taxes to pay the present expenses of the Government, including anything on the principal of the debt or on the interest.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have made no effort in the last few years to change the tax structure in order to raise the taxes to pay the debt, or even to pay the interest on it, because it has not been thought necessary to revise the tax structure in order to do that.

Mr. TAFT. How long does the Senator think we can increase our regular debt at the rate of $4,000,000,000 each year, and our indirect debt at a rate of one or two billion more, and not reach the danger zone?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think there is a limit beyond which it would be unwise to go.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator state what that limit is?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the limit has as yet been reached. The limit will depend considerably on the annual income of the American people, and their ability to pay taxes and to retire by amortization the debt which is created by the Government of the United States.

Mr. TAFT. It will depend also on the courage of the Congress to levy the taxes which the people may be asked to pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the courage of Congress is always an element in any legislation which in any way inflicts on the people what they might regard as a burden, even a light one, and we have to assume that Congress is not irresponsible, that whatever the exigencies of the situation may require, Congress will do the thing necessary. I am not willing to say that Congress will not have the courage, when the time comes, to levy sufficient taxes to retire the debt and to pay the interest on the debt.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Reverting to the question asked by the Senator from Nevada—and I regret that I do not now see him on the floor—the Chairman of the R. F. C. advises me that upon inquiry he learns that before his connection with the R. F. C. the R. F. C. did have a transaction with reference to gold, issuing non-interest-bearing notes, taking gold for the notes, and that the gold was turned over to the Treasury at the net cost to the R. F. C. and without any profit at all to the R. F. C.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for that information.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. Merely from memory and without recourse to the records, it occurs to me that the profit from the devaluation was divided up as follows: Two billion of it is in the stabilization fund; $500,000,000 is free gold; a certain sum of it was used to retire Panama Canal bonds; another amount was used to call in national-bank notes, and that left $139,000,000, which was turned over to the Federal Reserve Board for industrial loans. Therefore, in the record as I see it, no allocation of profit from that device was turned over to the R. F. C.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank both Senators. I had never heard of any profit made by the R. F. C. out of the devaluation of the gold dollar, and for that reason I did not believe there had been any such profit.

Mr. President, I started out to draw a general picture of conditions which I though were necessary for Congress to deal with and upon which the pending legislation is based. I had hoped that before we adjourned or recessed for the day I might undertake to show how the bill in some measure attempts to deal with and respond to that situation. But it is evident that I cannot do so at this hour, and I shall move that the Senate recess until tomorrow, and I hope that tomorrow I may very briefly outline the provisions of the bill.

ELLEN HALE WILSON

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 152, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 152) submitted by Mr. BAILEY on June 26, 1939, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Ellen Hale Wilson, widow of Peter M. Wilson, late a clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

RAILROAD DEBT ADJUSTMENT AND MODIFICATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5407) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory and supplementary thereto, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 21 and 39.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 28, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37, and agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendments, strike out all matter in lines 23 to 25, inclusive, on page 3 of the House bill, strike out all matter in lines 1 to 13, inclusive, on page 4 of the House bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) Prepared a plan of adjustment and secured assurances satisfactory to the Commission of the acceptance of such plan from creditors holding at least 25 per centum of the aggregate amount of all claims affected by said plan of adjustment (including all such affected claims against said corporation, its parents and subsidiaries), and

"(2) Thereafter obtained an order of the Commission (but not of a division thereof), under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act authorizing the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by such plan of adjustment (other than securities held by, or to be issued to Reconstruction Finance Corporation), such order of the Commission to include also specific findings:

"(a) That such corporation is not in need of financial reorganization of the character provided for under section 77 of this act;

"(b) That such corporation's inability to meet its debts matured or about to mature is reasonably expected to be temporary only; and

"(c) That such plan of adjustment, after due consideration of the probable prospective earnings of the property in the light of its earnings experience and of such changes as may reasonably be expected—

"(i) is in the public interest and in the best interests of each class of creditors and stockholders;

"(ii) is feasible, financially advisable, and not likely to be followed by the insolvency of said corporation, or by need of financial reorganization or adjustment;

"(iii) does not provide for fixed charges (of whatsoever nature including fixed charges on debt, amortization of discount on debt, and rent for leased roads) in an amount in excess of what will be adequately covered by the probable earnings available for the payment thereof;

"(iv) leaves adequate means for such future financing as may be requisite;

"(v) is consistent with adequate maintenance of the property; and

"(vi) is consistent with the proper performance by such railroad corporation of service to the public as a common carrier, will not impair its ability to perform such service:

Provided, That in making the foregoing specific findings the Commission shall scrutinize the facts independently of the extent of acceptances of such plan and of any lack of opposition thereto: Provided further, That an order of the Commission (or of a division thereof) under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, made prior to April 1, 1939, authorizing the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by a plan of adjustment (other than securities held by, or to be issued to, Reconstruction Finance Corporation), shall be effective for the purpose of this subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, notwithstanding failure to include therein the foregoing specific findings, if such order did include the specific findings that such proposed issuance or modification of securities is compatible with the public interest, is consistent with the proper performance by the railroad corporation of service to the public as a common carrier, and will not impair its ability to perform such service, and".

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"If the court shall propose to modify the plan, then: (a) if such modification substantially alters the basis for the specific findings included in the order made by the Commission under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, the plan as so proposed to be modified shall be resubmitted to the Commission and shall not be finally approved by the court until the Commission (but not a division thereof) has authorized the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by the plan as so modified (other than securities held by, or to be issued to, Reconstruction Finance Corporation) making the findings required by clause (c) of subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, even in a case where the original order of the Commission under said section 20a was made prior to April 1, 1939; and (b) if such modification substantially or adversely affects the interests of any class or classes of creditors, such plan shall be resubmitted, in such manner as the court may direct, to those creditors so affected by such modification and shall not be finally approved until after (1) a hearing on such modification, to be held within such reasonable time as the court may fix, at which hearing any person in interest may object to such modification, and (2) a reasonable opportunity (within a period to be fixed by the court), following such hearing, within which such affected creditors who have assented to the plan may withdraw or cancel their assents to the plan, and failure by any such creditor to withdraw or cancel an assent within such period shall constitute an acceptance by such assenting creditor of the plan as so modified. After such authorization and finding by the Commission, where required hereby, and after such hearing and opportunity to withdraw or cancel, where required hereby, the court may make the proposed modification, and as provided in section 725 finally approve and confirm the plan as so modified."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following: "which does not provide for the payment thereof shall be approved by the court except upon the acceptance of a lesser amount or of a postponement by the Secretary of the Treasury certified to the courts: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall fail to accept or reject such lesser amount or such postponement for more than sixty days after receipt of written notice so to do from the court, accompanied by a certified copy of the plan, the consent of the United States insofar as its claims for taxes or customs duties are concerned shall be conclusively presumed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment and insert in line 1 on page 9 of the House bill after the word "or" and before the word "as" the following: ", if modified, then"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 25, 26, and 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 25, 26, and 27 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendments, strike out all matter in lines 6 through 12 inclusive on page 9 of the House bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) That the plan meets the requirements of clause (c), and the petitioner meets the requirements of clauses (a) and (b) of subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, and that the plan is fair and equitable as an adjustment, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders and fair consideration to each class thereof adversely affected, and will conform to the law of the land regarding the participation of the various classes of creditors and stockholders: Provided, That in making the findings required by this clause (3), the court shall scrutinize the facts independently of the extent of acceptances of such plan, and of any lack of opposition thereto, and of the fact that the Commission, under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, has authorized the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by such plan, and of the fact that the Commission has made such or similar findings;"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"(6) That, after hearings for the purpose, all amounts or considerations, directly or indirectly paid or to be paid by or for the petitioner for expenses, fees, reimbursement or compensation of any character whatsoever incurred in connection with the proceeding and plan, or preliminary thereto or in aid thereof, together with all the facts and circumstances relating to the incurring thereof, have been fully disclosed to the Court so far as such amounts or considerations can be ascertained at the time of such hearings, that all such amounts or consideration are fair and reasonable, and to the extent that any such amounts or considerations are not then ascertainable, the same are to be so disclosed to the Court when ascertained, and are to be subject to approval by the special court as fair and reasonable, and except with such approval no amounts or considerations covered by this clause (6) shall be paid."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"No plan shall be approved under this chapter unless the special court finds that with respect to the continuation of, or any change in, the voting rights in the petitioner, control of the petitioner, and the identity of, and the power and manner of selection of the persons who are to be directors, officers, or voting trustees, if any, upon the consummation of the plan and their respective successors, the plan makes full disclosure, is adequate, equitable, in the best interests of creditors and stockholders of each class, and consistent with public policy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"ARTICLE VII—INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

"SEC. 740. If, in any application filed with the Commission pursuant to section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act for authority to issue or modify securities, the applicant shall allege that the purpose in making such application is to enable it to file a petition under the provisions of this chapter, the Commission shall take final action on such application as promptly as possible, and in any event within one hundred and twenty days after the filing of such application, unless the Commission finds that a longer time, not exceeding sixty days is needed in the public interest."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40 and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 11 on page 14 of the House bill, after the word "made", insert the following: "by any person affected by the plan who deems himself aggrieved"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, strike out in line 22 on page 14 of the House bill the words "Saving Clause", and insert in lieu thereof the following: "IX—Filing record with Commission"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 42 and 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 42 and 43 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendments, strike out all matter in lines 23 through 25 inclusive on page 14 of the House bill, strike out all matter in lines 1 and 2 on page 15 of the House bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 750. The clerk of the court in which any proceedings under this chapter are pending, shall forthwith transmit to the Interstate Commerce Commission copies of all pleadings, petitions, motions, applications, orders, judgments, decrees and other papers in such proceedings filed with the court or entered therein, including copies of any transcripts of testimony, hearings or other proceedings that may be transcribed and filed in such proceedings together with copies of all exhibits, except to the extent that the court finds that compliance with this section would be impracticable."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by such amendment insert the following:

"ARTICLE X—TERMINATION OF JURISDICTION

"SEC. 755. The jurisdiction conferred upon any court by this chapter shall not be exercised by such court after July 31, 1940, except in respect of any proceeding initiated by filing a petition under section 710 hereof on or before July 31, 1940."

And the Senate agree to the same.

B. K. WHEELER,
WARREN R. AUSTIN,
H. T. BONE,
CHAS. W. TOBEY,
HARRY S. TRUMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WALTER CHANDLER,
EARL C. MICHENER,
CHARLES F. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. The conferees have met and concluded their work in regard to this bill. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

The report was considered and agreed to.

PROMOTION OF NAUTICAL EDUCATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5375) to promote nautical education, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. BARBOUR conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE AND SHIPPING ACTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6746) to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts, to further the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. BARBOUR conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION BY CONGRESS TO AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 10, which was read as follows:

Whereas this year marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the American Association of State Highway Officials, which is composed of officials of the highway departments of all the States, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia, and the United States Bureau of Public Roads; and

Whereas said association through its members represents the State and Federal governmental agencies which have constructed and maintained a vast system of highways throughout the Nation, which highways are becoming increasingly important in local and interstate transportation; and

Whereas said association has announced that it is planning to celebrate in a fitting manner this quarter century of road building at a national meeting to be held during the month of October 1939 in the cities of Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Va.: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the splendid results which have been accomplished in the vital development of our national highway transportation system merit an expression of public appreciation by the Congress.

SEC. 2. A special committee of the Congress is hereby established, to consist of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to convey to the members of the American Association of State Highway Officials at the national meeting of said association to be held in the cities of Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Va., during the month of October 1939 an expression of appreciation by the Congress of the praiseworthy accomplishments realized under their leadership and direction in the field of highway development.

Mr. MINTON. I move that the Senate concur in the concurrent resolution of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE SO-CALLED CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, last week in discussing the resolution with respect to the so-called Civil Liberties Committee, which resolution is in the hands of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the Senator from South Carolina indicated that the increased appropriation made to the Department of Justice might be used to provide in part for the needs of the committee. Attorney General Murphy in a press conference gave out a statement of his attitude toward that particular question, clearly indicating that he felt the necessity for the continuation of the work of the Civil Liberties Committee, and that he did not feel that the Department of Justice alone was in a position to handle the matter.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks a newspaper dispatch from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch outlining the position of the Attorney General in reference to the matter, and also an editorial in reference thereto, published in the same newspaper, under date of July 21, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch]

MURPHY FAVORS NEW FUND FOR LA FOLLETTE—NOTES "EDUCATIONAL VALUE" OF EXPOSURES OF CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Pointing out "the great educational value" of the exposures of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee during the past 3 years, Attorney General Murphy told reporters today that he would like to see the committee given additional funds so it could cooperate with the Department of Justice.

Murphy's statement was significant because Chairman BYRNES, of the Senate Audit and Control Committee, Monday opposed an additional grant to the La Follette committee, asserting that the Department of Justice had been given a $50,000 appropriation for the current fiscal year to investigate and prosecute infringements of the constitutional guarantees of civil liberty.

Pending before the Senate is the bill of Senators SCHWELLENBACH, of Washington, and DOWNEY, of California, both Democrats, to appropriate $100,000 for the continuation of the La Follette committee.

"COOPERATION GREAT HELP"

Murphy said that he would not be able to do as much with the $50,000 appropriation as he would like to do and that it would be a very great help to him to have the cooperation of the La Follette committee. He added that he had talked with several Senators about the work of the La Follette committee and that he would be glad to give the Audit and Control Committee his views if the proper procedure for this could be found.

"There is no conflict," he said, "between the work of the La Follette committee and the Department of Justice, and as I see it, the committee can be helpful to us and other public officials. I know that as Governor of Michigan I found the La Follette reports very significant, especially the disclosure that businessmen had spent more than $2,000,000 for private detectives and labor spies.

"During the automobile strike I took a copy of its record with me to a conference of the leaders of that industry and asked them if the disclosures were true. They said that the practice of hiring private detectives and labor spies was bad and that it had been abandoned. That was one of the results of the La Follette committee's investigation."

DIFFERENCE IN PROCEDURE

Murphy agreed that the Department and the committee proceeded along different lines. The Department, he explained, made its investigations to determine whether an existing Federal law had been violated, whereas the committee sought to determine whether additional laws were necessary in the public interest.

During the Senate debate yesterday SCHWELLENBACH and DOWNEY asserted that if the committee were given additional funds it could make a comprehensive investigation of the charges against the Associated Farmers of California for alleged violation of workers' civil rights. Murphy said today that his Department had made only a preliminary survey of the California situation, and that whether an investigation would be made would depend on whether the La Follette committee is given funds to carry out its proposed investigation in that State.

In reply to SCHWELLENBACH and DOWNEY, BYRNES asserted that when the La Follette committee was given $60,000 last year Chairman LA FOLLETTE told the Audit and Control Committee that it would be sufficient to complete the investigation. LA FOLLETTE answered that he had religiously lived up to his agreement by not asking for more funds, but added that a study of material already assembled by his committee would convince any person that the investigation should be continued.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch]

MURPHY ENDORSES THE LA FOLLETTE COMMITTEE

The idea has grown in Congress and over the country that the La Follette committee may as well be discontinued, now that a special civil liberties union has been set up in the Department of Justice by Attorney General Murphy. With both at work, there would be duplication, it is asserted, and the Justice Department should be given full charge of the field.

These arguments are demolished by Attorney General Murphy, who went on record yesterday as favoring continuance of the committee. He praised its "great educational value," asserted there was no conflict between the two groups and declared the committee's cooperation would be very valuable to his department and other agencies.

The public hearings held by the committee have been highly useful in exposing bad conditions and correcting them. The Department of Justice, on the other hand, makes its reports to grand juries in secret session, and so is restricted from turning the spotlight on dark places, as the committee has done so frequently. The La Follette group is far from completing its work; indeed, it has not yet touched certain important subjects, such as the repressive labor practices said to exist among California farm workers. It should be assured of getting the necessary funds from Congress for continuing its labors, now that Mr. Murphy has given his significant endorsement.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION—RATES OF PAY, AND SO FORTH

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, yesterday I offered an amendment to the spending and lending bill which is now before the Senate. I made reference to certain Executuve orders made pursuant to an investigation, and stated that the Works Progress Administration had promulgated regulations relating to hourly rates of pay, hours of work, payment for service and conduct of employment, all of which have to do with the question of the prevailing wage in the respective districts of this country. The amendment will come before the Senate as an adjunct to the bill that is now pending, and I propose to foster and advocate it as best I can, to the end that the workers of America who are now out of employment, and those who are threatened with being made a part of an agency to destroy the wage structure of the United States shall no longer be used for that purpose. In other words, if the labor organizations of the United States have during a half century built up a wage structure in America commensurate with the standard of living in the United States, then that structure should be maintained, and Congress should not be a party to a change that would tear it down.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks, title 45, Public Welfare, Works Progress Administration—Administrative Order No. 67—made by the President, as published in the Federal Register of Wednesday, April 19, 1939.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE 45—PUBLIC WELFARE

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

[Administrative Order No. 67]

REGULATIONS RELATING TO HOURLY RATES OF PAY, HOURS OF WORK, PAYMENT FOR SERVICES AND CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT

By virtue of and pursuant to the authority vested in the Works Progress Administration by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 approved June 21, 1938, I hereby prescribe the following rules and regulations:

PART I. DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. The term "projects" as used herein shall mean projects or portions of projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or by Public Resolution No. 1, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved February 4, 1939, except projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration for the National Youth Administration.

SEC. 2. The term "project employees" as used herein shall mean all employees engaged upon a project and paid by means of a pay-roll payment from funds authorized for the operation of the project.

(a) The term "project employees paid on an hourly basis" as used herein shall mean persons, including supervisory employees engaged upon a project, who are paid on an hourly basis by means of pay-roll payments from funds authorized for the operation of such project.

(b) The term "project supervisory employees" as used herein shall mean persons in supervisory positions engaged upon a project who are paid on a monthly basis by means of pay-roll payments from funds authorized for the operation of such project.

PART II. RATES OF PAY

SEC. 3. The rates of pay for project employees paid on an hourly basis shall be not less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality. When, in the judgment of the State administrator, it is necessary to revise hourly rates heretofore established or to determine new hourly rates, such rates of pay shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Works Progress Administrator or his authorized representative prior to their being placed in effect.

SEC. 4. In accordance with the provisions of administrative authorities granted to him, it shall be the responsibility of the States Works Progress administrator to issue State administrator's orders, which prescribe the schedule of appropriate rates of pay, hours to be worked, and monthly earnings by occupational titles for each county in the State in which projects are being operated. Where necessary, supplemental schedules shall be issued as State administrator's orders covering special determinations for particular projects within the county or for subdivisions of the county.

PART III. HOURS OF WORK

SEC. 5. The normal hours of work for project employees paid on an hourly basis shall be that number of hours required to earn the authorized monthly wage at the established rate of pay. The maximum hours of work, however, shall not exceed 8 hours per day, 40 hours per week, and 140 hours per month, except when, in the judgment of the State Works Progress administrator or his authorized representative, the above limitations are not practical in the following cases:

(a) An emergency involving the public welfare or to protect work already done on the project.

(b) When efficient project operations permit rescheduling hours of work for the purpose of making up time lost due to the following circumstances: Provided, That in no case shall any project employee be permitted to accumulate allowable lost time in excess of 50 percent of the employee's normal assigned hours per month.

(1) Temporary interruptions of projects beyond the control of the workers;

(2) Illness;

(3) Injuries sustained in the performance of duty;

(4) Military service;

(5) Exercise of voting privilege.

When making up time lost the maximum hours of work shall be 8 hours per day and 48 hours per week.

SEC. 6. The hours of work for project supervisory employees shall be established by the State administrator or his authorized representative in accordance with the requirements of the project to which the employee is assigned: Provided, That the minimum hours of work required shall be not less than 120 hours per pay-roll month. Deductions for voluntary time lost shall be made in accordance with section 10 of this order, without regard to the hours of work established pursuant to this section.

PART IV. MONTHLY EARNINGS AND PAYMENT FOR SERVICES

SEC. 7. The schedule of monthly earnings, as hereinafter established with adjustments heretofore effected as set forth in section 8 of this order, shall be applicable to at least 95 percent of the persons engaged upon a project and paid from project funds, except:

(a) Such projects, portions of projects, or activities as the Federal Works Progress Administrator or his authorized representative may hereafter exempt, including adjustments to the schedule of monthly earnings on the basis of contiguity of counties, redefinition of regions, and adjustments within the range of 10 percent.

(b) Such projects or portions of projects as the State Works Progress administrators may hereafter exempt, provided that the number of persons covered by such exemption, including project supervisory employees, shall not exceed 10 percent of the employees on a project and that at least 95 percent of the persons employed upon all projects within a State shall be persons who are paid in accordance with the schedule of monthly earnings as hereinafter provided.

(c) Such projects or portions of projects as the State Works Progress administrators may hereafter specifically exempt for a period of not to exceed one full pay-roll period, in order to permit the assignment of supervisory personnel for the purpose of planning and scheduling project operations, provided that such exemption authority shall not allow the assignment of project supervisory employees in excess of the normal needs of full-time project operation.

SCHEDULE OF MONTHLY EARNINGS

The schedule of monthly earnings applicable to any county shall be based upon the 1930 population of the largest municipality within the county in accordance with the following schedule:

UNSKILLED WORK

Region [1]	Over 100,000	50,000–100,000	25,000–50,000	5,000–25,000	Under 5,000
Region I	55	52	48	44	40
Region II	45	42	40	35	32
Region III	40	38	36	30	26

INTERMEDIATE WORK

Region I	65	60	55	50	45
Region II	58	54	50	44	38
Region III	57	53	47	40	33

SKILLED WORK

Region I	85	75	70	63	55
Region II	72	66	60	52	44
Region III	72	66	60	52	44

PROFESSIONAL AND TECHNICAL WORK

Region	Over 100,000	50,000–100,000	25,000–50,000	5,000–25,000	Under 5,000
Region I	94	83	77	69	61
Region II	79	73	66	57	48
Region III	79	73	66	57	48

[1] Regions include the following States:

Region I: Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Region II: Delaware, District of Columbia, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma, West Virginia.

Region III: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia.

SEC. 8. The several State Works Progress administrators are hereby authorized to continue adjustments to the schedule of monthly earnings heretofore authorized by the Federal Works Progress Administrator or by the several State Works Progress administrators on the basis of contiguity of counties, redefinition of regions, or adjustments within the range of 10 percent, provided such adjustments to the schedule of monthly earnings were in full force and effect prior to the effective date of this order and such adjustments have not been incorporated into the schedule of monthly earnings as herein provided.

SEC. 9. The several State Works Progress administrators are hereby authorized to make adjustments to the schedule of monthly earnings as herein established in order to allow the scheduling of monthly earnings which do not involve the computation of fractional payments of less than 1 cent or the assignment of hours of work which involve partial hours during any semimonthly pay period, provided this authority is limited to the fixing of monthly earnings which do not vary more than $1 above or below the established schedule of monthly earnings. Any adjustments to the schedule of monthly earnings for this purpose which exceed $1 above or below the established schedule shall be subject to prior authorization by the Federal Works Progress Administrator or his designated representative. Such adjustments to the schedule of monthly earnings shall be in addition to any adjustments heretofore authorized under the provisions of section 8 of this order.

SEC. 10. The several State Works Progress administrators are authorized and directed to establish monthly salaries for project supervisory employees in accordance with monthly wages customarily paid for work of a similar nature in the same locality. Deductions for voluntary absence from duty shall be made in the amount of one-thirtieth of the monthly salary for each day of voluntary absence. However, no deduction shall be made for any day or days upon which the employee is not required to work. Deductions for voluntary absence from duty for a portion of a day shall be made in an amount equal to one-fourth the deduction, or multiple thereof, made for absence during a full day.

SEC. 11. Project employees paid on an hourly basis shall be compensated only for time actually worked, except where a project employee is paid for the day upon which a compensable injury occurs. Project employees who are paid in accordance with the schedule of monthly earnings shall be allowed every reasonable opportunity consistent with efficient project operations to make up time lost as provided in section 5. Such time lost may be made up during the current or succeeding pay-roll months; however, every effort shall be made to reschedule project operations so as to allow project employees to make up time lost during the current pay-roll period. Payments in excess of the schedule of monthly earnings are permitted for this purpose.

SEC. 12. Project employees if injured in the performance of duty and unable to work as a result thereof shall be entitled to receive payment of compensation under the provisions of the act of February 15, 1934 (48 Stat. 351) as amended.

SEC. 13. Where project employees are quartered in camps, the several State Works Progress administrators are authorized to fix an appropriate charge for lodging, food, proper sanitation, water and bathing facilities, and medical and dental care, and to make such deductions at the end of each pay-roll period from the earnings of project employees quartered in such camps.

PART V. CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 14. It shall be the responsibility of the State works progress administration to assure the maintenance of standards of eligibility for certification. Need and employability shall be the only requirements in determining eligibility provided persons are otherwise eligible as prescribed by law and by these regulations. For the purpose of certification need shall be said to exist when the resources of the family or of the unattached individual are insufficient to provide a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health. At least 95 percent of the employees on a project shall be persons who have been certified as in need by a public relief agency approved by the Works Progress Administration or in lieu thereof by the Works Progress Administration, except:

(a) Persons on such projects or portions of projects as the Federal Works Progress Administrator or his authorized representative may hereafter exempt;

(b) Such projects or portions of projects as the State Works Progress administrator may hereafter exempt, provided that the number of persons covered by such exemptions, including project supervisory employees shall not exceed 10 percent of the employees on a project and that at least 95 percent of the persons employed on all projects within the State shall be persons certified as in need; and

(c) Such projects or portions of projects as the State Works Progress administrators may hereafter specifically exempt for a period of not to exceed one full pay-roll period, in order to permit the assignment of supervisory personnel for the purpose of planning and scheduling project operations, provided that such exemption authority shall not allow the assignment of project supervisory employees in excess of the normal needs of full-time project operation.

SEC. 15. Persons in need whose names have not heretofore been placed upon relief rolls shall be eligible for employment and shall be certified as in need in the same manner as persons whose names have heretofore appeared on relief rolls.

SEC. 16. Persons 65 years of age or over and women with dependent children shall be eligible for employment, if certified as to need and otherwise eligible, provided:

(a) Such persons are not receiving public assistance benefits under the Social Security Act; or

(b) Such persons do not relinquish public assistance benefits under the Social Security Act with the intent to establish eligibility for employment.

SEC. 17. Farmers in rural areas who are in need and who need employment to supplement their farm income shall be eligible for certification and for employment, provided that:

(a) Such farmers are not active standard loan clients of the Farm Security Administration, and

(b) Such farmers are not currently receiving emergency grants from the Farm Security Administration.

SEC. 18. No person under the age of 18 years, and no person whose age or physical condition is such as to make his employment dangerous to his health or safety, or to the health or safety of others may be employed on a project. This section shall not be construed to operate against the employment of physically handicapped persons otherwise employable, where such persons may be safely assigned to work which they can perform.

SEC. 19. Only one member of a family group may be employed on projects as defined herein. This provision shall not be construed to interfere with the part-time employment of a youth member of the family by the National Youth Administration or the enrollment of a member of the family in the Civilian Conservation Corps.

SEC. 20. The fact that a person is entitled to or has received either adjusted-service bonds or a Treasury check in payment of an adjusted-compensation certificate shall not be considered in determining actual need of such employment.

SEC. 21. No alien shall knowingly be given employment or continued in employment on any project even though such alien may have filed a declaration of intention to become an American citizen. Effective March 6, 1939, and thereafter, no person shall be employed on projects until such person has executed an affidavit as to his citizenship status.

SEC. 22. Preference in employment on projects shall be given in the following order:

(a) Veterans of the World War and the Spanish War and veterans of any campaign or expedition in which the United States has engaged who are in need and are American citizens.

(b) Other American citizens, Indians, and other persons owing allegiance to the United States who are in need.

SEC. 23. No person certified as in need shall be eligible for employment on any project financed from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration who has refused to accept employment on any other Federal or non-Federal project at an hourly wage rate comparable to or higher than the hourly wage rate established for similar work on projects financed from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration. However, any certified person who has been engaged on any Federal or non-Federal project and whose service has been regularly terminated through no fault of his own shall not lose his eligibility for reemployment on any project financed from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration or on any other Federal or non-Federal project on account of such previous employment.

SEC. 24. Project employees and unassigned certified persons shall be expected to accept bona fide offers of private employment, whether of a permanent or temporary nature, provided that:

(a) The project employee is capable of performing such work;

(b) The wage for such employment is not less than the prevailing wage for such work in the community;

(c) Such employment is not in conflict with established union relationships;

(d) Such employment provides reasonable working conditions.

A certified person who takes such private employment shall at the expiration thereof be entitled to reemployment on a project if he is still in need and otherwise eligible and if he has lost the private employment through no fault of his own. However, project employees and certified persons awaiting assignment who refuse to accept such private employment shall be ineligible for employment on any project for the period such private employment would be available.

SEC. 25. As a condition to their continued employment on projects project employees paid on an hourly basis who are certified as in need shall be required to file quarterly a statement as to the amount of their earnings from outside employment while they were assigned on such projects. The quarterly statements of outside earnings shall be taken into consideration in continuing such certified persons in employment on projects.

SEC. 26. Persons certified as in need, including project supervisory employees, who are authorized to work on projects at monthly earnings which are in excess of $100 per month shall have their certification of need canceled and shall be considered as noncertified persons, provided that this requirement shall not be construed as prohibiting certified workers from receiving monthly earnings in excess of $100 per month when making up lost time or in an emergency as provided in section 5.

SEC. 27. Persons who are qualified for assignment to projects and who are eligible as specifically provided by law and by these regulations shall not be discriminated against because of membership or nonmembership in a labor organization.

SEC. 28. All persons paid from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration shall observe the following rules relating to political activities:

(a) No person, directly or indirectly, shall promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided under the program of the Works Progress Administration to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

(b) No person shall deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided under the program of the Works Progress Administration on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

(c) No person shall knowingly solicit or knowingly be in any manner concerned in soliciting any assessment, subscription, or contribution for the campaign expenses of any individual or political party from any person entitled to or receiving compensation or employment provided for by the program of the Works Progress Administration.

(d) No person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government whose compensation is paid from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. While such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on any political subjects, they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns. Any persons in an administrative or supervisory capacity who violate the provisions of this section shall be subject to immediate discharge and thereafter such persons shall not be eligible for any employment which is compensated from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration.

SEC. 29. Every person who works for the Works Progress Administration, whatever his job, has a right to vote in any election, for any candidate he chooses. When the hours during which polling places are open or any other conditions prevent employees from freely exercising their voting privileges, scheduled hours of work may be adjusted to provide the necessary time for this purpose. Project employees shall not be paid for time allowed during which to vote, but they shall be permitted through a rescheduling of working hours to work their full quota of hours during the pay-roll month for which the time off is granted.

SEC. 30. All projects shall be conducted in accordance with safe working conditions and every effort shall be made for the prevention of accidents.

SEC. 31. Wages to be paid by the Federal Government may not be pledged or assigned, and any purported pledge or assignment shall be null and void.

SEC. 32. Project employees on an hourly basis shall be required to show evidence of registration and occupational classification by a designated office of the United States Employment Service before assignment to work on projects.

PART VI. ASSIGNMENT, CLASSIFICATION, AND EMPLOYMENT RECORDS

SEC. 33. The assignment and reassignment of project employees and the classification and reclassification by occupational title of project employees paid on an hourly basis shall be the responsibility of the State works progress administration. The several State Works Progress administrators are hereby authorized and directed to continue:

(a) To analyze occupational work experience and training of persons certified for project employment for the purpose of classifying them according to occupational characteristics;

(b) To make every reasonable effort, consistent with prompt employment to assign such persons to work on projects at their usual or related occupations; and

(c) To maintain individual occupational classification records showing work experience, qualifications, primary and secondary occupational classifications, and other related information.

PART VII. EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 34. These rules and regulations shall become effective at the beginning of pay-roll periods on and after April 20, 1939, and shall supersede administrative orders Nos. 62 and 65 of the Works Progress Administration, which are hereby rescinded.

[SEAL] F. G. HARRINGTON, Administrator.

[F. R. Doc. 39-1324; Filed April 18, 1939; 10:19 a. m.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me so that I may ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will state to the Senator from Nevada that there is prevalent in the city of Washington a rumor that there are many persons connected with the Congress who believe that within the next few days so many Members of the Congress will be tired of this session that they will leave and that the Congress will not be able to get a quorum after the next 2 or 3 days.

In view of the statement submitted by the Senator from Nevada does he not believe that those who are so anxious to return home, and who may thus compel Congress to adjourn by reason of failure to obtain a quorum, will by such action cause the failure of adoption of the Senator's proposal? And will they not by their action in going home, or to some place else, cause a continuation of this very cruel policy which was put into the Works Progress legislation?

Mr. McCARRAN. If I may answer in the time of the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say that, so far as I am personally concerned and I believe so far as a majority of the Senate is concerned, I and they are entirely content to remain here to the end that those who are interested and those who need proper consideration shall not be neglected and that the wage structure of the country shall never be torn down because of the absence of Members of Congress, or by any action of Congress. I hope I have answered the question of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the rumor to which the Senator from Washington made reference, that by the end of this week a sufficient number of Members of Congress, particularly of the Senate, would leave the city permanently, thus making it impossible to obtain a quorum during the rest of the session, has been brought to my attention.

It would be so incredible for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives individually to leave the city in sufficient numbers to make it impossible to obtain a quorum to transact the further business of Congress, including not only the proposal of the Senator from Nevada, but other proposals, that I do not believe any such thing will happen. I realize how anxious we all are to go to our homes, but——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. In a moment. I think I am within the bounds of reason when I say that by hard work we can conclude the session not later than a week from next Saturday. Certainly Senators and Representatives are willing to stay in Washington another week, or even longer if necessary, in order that vital business may be transacted. I do not believe that the rumor to which reference has been made has any foundation. I certainly hope not.

In that connection, Mr. President, I should like to say that I shall ask the Senate to continue in session tomorrow night, and to hold night sessions during the remainder of this week, in order that we may facilitate the consideration and disposition of business.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator has said about the apparently unanimous desire of Members of Congress to leave Washington, I want it understood that, speaking for myself, that is not my desire. My desire is to remain here until Congress shall have discharged whatever duties it may have to perform, and the Senator will find me ready to remain beside him until every single measure upon the calendar or in committee which should be considered is considered. From what I gather from talking with other Members of the Senate, I believe that is the attitude of a great many Members of this body.

I think attention should be called to the fact that suggestions for the adjournment of Congress frequently proceed from the mouths of persons who are not Members of Congress, and who desire to get Congress out of Washington. It is my belief that a majority of the Members of the Senate and of the House are willing to do their duty under the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. I entirely agree with the Senator from Wyoming; and for that reason I have not at all credited the rumors and statements which have been brought to my attention. We all know that as soon as Congress meets in January, persons inside and outside the Congress begin to speculate about when we are going to adjourn. We all make such a desperate effort to become and remain Members of Congress that I do not think we ought to make a desperate effort to get away before we have performed our duty. I think the Senator from Wyoming speaks the sentiments of the overwhelming majority of Members of this body when he says that we will stay here until we have performed our public duty.

It so happens that individual Senators, because of illness and perhaps for other legitimate reasons, are compelled temporarily to absent themselves. One Senator came to me today and advised me that he had to leave tonight, on the advice of his physician, because of personal illness. Of course, in such a case no one could insist that a Senator stay in Washington and jeopardize his health or his life in the performance of his duty. However, taking the Senate by and large, I think it is willing and ready to stay here and perform its duty.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I expect to remain in Washington until the final adjournment of Congress, as I always do. However, if the Senator means that we are to stay here until we shall have disposed of all the bills on the calendar, and all the bills in committee, I should like to know it, so that I may make my plans accordingly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no such idea. I said that I thought we could wind up the necessary business next week. I still entertain that hope. However, that certainly does not include cleaning the calendar of all the bills on it, and disposing of all the bills now before committees. I have no such view as that. I hope the Senator did not think I meant any such thing.

Mr. BYRNES. No.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

THE JUDICIARY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 26, 1939, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 25, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of mercies, in Thy holy Word what endless glory shines; we pray Thee to teach us to love it and find our Saviour there. Nothing can lessen the dignity and the value of humanity so long as loving devotion to it endures; let it be our light and strength. We beseech Thee to incline the hearts of employers and of those whom they employ to mutual forbearance, fairness, and good will. Blessed Lord God, we pray for the aged, for the young, and for those who are overtasked because of poverty and forgotten. May our love be as fresh as the dawn and as sure as the path of Thy law. Wherever the morning light falls on human faces may it cheer, make homes happy and true, men and women good, and little children joyous; in the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2150) entitled "An act to amend section 8 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act."

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 272

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives, to wit:

Military Affairs: William D. Byron, Maryland.
District of Columbia: Thomas D'Alesandro, Jr., Maryland.
War Claims: Matthew A. Dunn, Pennsylvania; A. Leonard Allen, Louisiana; David J. Ward, Maryland.
Coinage, Weights, and Measures: David J. Ward, Maryland.
Mines and Mining: David J. Ward, Maryland.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAUTICAL EDUCATION

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5375) to promote nautical education, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, request a conference with the Senate, and appoint conferees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BLAND, SIROVICH, RAMSPECK, WELCH, and CULKIN.

DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6746) to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts, to further the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, request a conference with the Senate, and appoint conferees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BLAND, SIROVICH, RAMSPECK, WELCH, and CULKIN.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on career men in the Government service and to include therein a brief article from the Federal Employee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief table of statistics.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

APPROPRIATIONS AND THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, at the last session of Congress the total appropriations, direct, reappropriations, and permanent appropriations, were $13,371,000,000. This year so far they are $13,836,000,000, an increase of $465,000,000.

Our expenditures last year exceeded receipts by $3,600,000,000. Our debt increased $3,264,000,000. The debt of Government corporations increased $4,415,000,000. The total increase in the debt of the Government direct and of Government corporations was $7,680,000,000. This is the worst record of all time and it behooves Congress to stop the so-called spending bill that is coming in designed to wreck completely the financial structure of America and to throw more people out of work.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCRUGHAM asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an analysis by the Veterans' Administration relating to the bill (H. R. 2296) with reference to correction of misconduct restrictions, and H. R. 5452, with reference to additional care for disabled veterans and their dependents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement prepared by the War Department in explanation of the bill, H. R. 7328, with reference to the problem created by increasing superannuation of officers in the field grades of the Regular Army, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the body of the RECORD in 8-point type for the benefit of the membership of the House who want to get the information in respect to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to follows:

SUPERANNUATION OF ARMY OFFICERS

H. R. 7328 is the result of long-continuing study in the War Department to find a solution to the problem created by increasing superannuation of officers in the field grades of the Regular Army. The situation is a result of the very large number of officers who were taken into the Regular Army immediately following the World War and the exceedingly low annual attrition rate. This group now numbers some 4,288 officers, ranging in age from 38 to 63, with an average age of 46. They occupy the lower files of the grade of lieutenant colonel, the entire 2,750 files of the grade of major, and the top 1,400 files of the grade of captain. Failure of normal annual attrition to weed out this group has stagnated promotion, not only of these officers themselves but of those who have been commissioned since the World War. When it is realized that there are nearly 1,400 officers of World War service who are still in the grade of captain, it can be seen there is most obviously a problem which must be solved in the near future if a large portion of the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army is not to become completely superannuated.

Officers of this World War hump are gradually moving up into and through the field grades of major and lieutenant colonel, and the younger among them will eventually reach the grade of colonel. Prior to that time a considerable number will be retired on account of reaching statutory age 64. In this category are a number of captains and majors. The average age, which is now 46, will increase from year to year and eventually we will have the result that the entire grade of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major will be filled with officers approaching an average age of 60 or more—entirely too old for either the demands of peace or war service. A more serious effect is that the presence of superannuated officers in the grade of colonel, lieutenant colonel, major, and captain is blocking the proper development of younger officers, not only in the World War group but in the groups which have been commissioned since the World War.

H. R. 7328 proposes to attain an annual attrition of 4.35 percent by supplementing annual attrition, to the extent necessary to reach that percentage, by the forced retirement of overage in grade officers. These age limitations are set at 62 for brigadier generals, 60 for colonels, 58 for lieutenant colonels, 55 for majors, and 50 for other officers. Officers forced to retire receive three-fourths of their active pay in the grade held at the time of retirement, and those with war service below the grade of colonel would be advanced one grade upon the retired list, without further increase in their retired pay by reason of such increase in grade. The minimum retirement pay which an officer would receive would be $253.12 per month; the maximum would be $375 per month.

The bill grants the option to any officer less than 58 years of age who is scheduled for retirement to elect to be carried as surplus in grade until he reaches the age of 58 years, when he will be retired as provided for officers of that age. Officers who elect to be carried as surplus in grade will be starred on the promotion list and will be entitled to pay and promotion in the same manner as other officers on that list, but in time of peace will not be assigned to the command of troops. This provision permits the utilization of the services of majors and captains, who would otherwise be retired as overage, with the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the Organized Reserve, the National Guard, and on other duties not directly concerned with the command and training of Regular Army troops, since it is one of the purposes of this legislation to provide opportunities for training and advancement to the younger officers.

As I have stated, in the event that no steps are taken to remedy this situation, eventually all of the field officers and upper files of the grade of captain will be too old to properly command units appropriate to their grades in war. In about 15 years these officers will begin to retire in very large numbers by reason of reaching the statutory retirement age of 64. At that time the attrition rate will run far above 4.35 percent, with a consequent influx of new officers in those years so large as to re-create the problem of the hump for a succeeding generation to solve.

H. R. 7328 separates these overage officers from the active list gradually. They do not go out all at once. For example, during the first year of the operation of the act 225 officers would be retired, none of whom would be less than 60 years of age. In the next year 269 officers would be retired or placed on the surplus-in-grade list, and none would be less than 56 years of age. The following year 259 officers, which would include all brigadier generals at age 62; all colonels, age 60; all lieutenant colonels, age 58; all majors, age 55; and all captains, age 50. In the next 3 years 177, 191, and 198, respectively, would be retired or placed surplus in grade within those age limitations. This is a total of 1,319 officers of all grades who might be retired for age in grade in the first 6 years of the operation of this measure, of whom 579 would be eligible to elect being carried surplus in grade to age 58. Let me point out that if these officers are not retired for age in grade but are allowed to continue on the active list to statutory age 64, they will then be retired anyway, most of them at a higher retirement pay than they would receive if retired for age in grade. Eventually they are going to die or be on the retired list. The cost of that list is certainly not the factor which is to determine the efficiency of the national defense.

It has been represented to certain Members of the Congress, either in anonymous communications or by interested individuals, that this measure is aimed at the World War group and is in favor of West Pointers. Nothing can be further from the truth. This measure will separate overage officers from the active list regardless of their source of appointment. Since it is a continuing measure, eventually it will operate to eliminate overage officers in the post-war group as the older officers in that group reach field grades and become overage in those grades. Enactment of this measure will benefit all of the younger officers in the World War hump as well as all the younger officers in the Army. The enactment of this measure will guarantee a suitable career to officers who are now entering the service, in that they may be assured of reaching the various commissioned grades to include that of colonel at ages which will insure proper experience within each grade, which is essential in the development of an officer in meeting the responsibilities of higher rank both in the command and administrative field. If not done the present stagnation in promotion will continue, and officers entering the service must expect to spend at least 25 years in the company grades and reach the higher field grades only when they are superannuated for the commands appropriate to those grades.

Opponents of this measure have also stated that officers have an implied contract with the Government which, barring retirement for physical disability or death, permits them to continue in the service drawing active-duty pay until they reach statutory age 64. I believe it should be made plain that a commission in the Army is not to be regarded as a life job for an individual at the expense of the good of the service. We have recently made provision for augmentation of the Air Corps and for increases in the Panama Canal garrison as well as for improved weapons; yet the Army cannot be considered an effective war machine if it has in its commissioned personnel an excessively large number of officers who are over age in grade. Let me emphasize that captains of 50, majors of 55, lieutenant colonels of 58, and colonels of 60 are too old for active command in time of war. In fact, they are much too old, and those who are approaching those ages will have to be used upon mobilization on training and administrative duties, leaving to the younger officers in those grades the active command of troops in war. Today the average age of our field officers is 13 years greater than that of the field officers who commanded combat units in France. The assumption, made by anonymous opponents, that these officers would be promoted two grades in event of war is erroneous. The conditions existing during the World War in that regard no longer apply since there is a body of over 100,000 Reserve officers to fill vacancies in all grades upon mobilization.

It has further been asserted that to force officers to retire for over age in grade will cause the loss of the services of an experienced and capable officer who has cost the Government a large sum of money in pay and cost of training. The bill provides for the retention in active services of such officers below age 58 who so elect, until they reach that age; these officers will be utilized on duties not in command of troops. The retirement or carrying surplus in grade of an over-age officer is not a loss; it is an imperative vitalization proceeding for the good of the Army. Admitting his capability and experience he is none the less as much out of place to lead troops in a war army as an over-age baseball player on a baseball team. When an over-age officer is retired or placed surplus in grade a new second lieutenant comes into the service—true; not as experienced and capable as the one who goes out, but young and energetic, and in a few years' time an officer capable of leading our troops into battle, while if you keep the over-age officer on the active list for that period you have just an older officer, still far more out of line with the requirements of the war machine. His services may be used upon mobilization for training and administrative duties in rear of the combat zone.

It has been suggested that instead of retiring these officers, all might be placed on some type of a limited-service list and continued on such duty as might be appropriate for them. This would mean that these over-age officers would have to be assigned to duty with the Organized Reserves, to duty with the National Guard, and to duty with the R. O. T. C. All of these activities at the present time are reluctant to accept colonels, lieutenant colonels, and majors unless they are young and vigorous. They are definitely opposed to the assignment of old colonels or other old field officers to these duties. Aside from the difficulty of finding appropriate assignments for these officers, the cost of such a system would be excessive, reaching a figure of $3,000,000 over the cost of this present vitalization measure in the fifth year of its operation, and increasing at a rate of $350,000 to $400,000 annually until an annual cost of $6,000,000 would be reached, at which time it would probably stabilize at that figure. The compromise in this bill, limiting the officers to be carried surplus in grade to those under 58, is one which will permit the utilization of the lower limit overage officers in administrative capacities and with the civilian components, until they reach the age of 58.

The United States is the only one of the great powers which does not have a method of keeping its officer personnel young and vital. Great Britain has recently adopted a forced retirement measure which is far more drastic than that proposed in H. R. 7328. Great Britain retires her general officers at the age of 60, her colonels at age 55—5 years younger than the age of 60 provided in H. R. 7328; her lieutenant colonels at 50, 8 years younger than this measure; her majors and other officers at 47. France, Italy, Japan, and Soviet Russia have similar age in grade retirement systems. Germany has a drastic selection system.

During the World War Gen. John J. Pershing sent two cables to the War Department urging that only young and vigorous officers be sent to France. These cables appear in full on pages 23 and 24 of the printed hearings on this measure. I desire to quote part of the one dated June 28, 1918:

"Personal considerations, of course, cannot be taken into account. Individual desires and records of long and faithful service are not sufficient to warrant our overlooking the stern requirements of war. We must profit by the experience and advice of our Allies, who are quite as fully concerned as ourselves in the issue. We cannot listen to theory or take into consideration the few isolated exceptions where old men have commanded in past wars. The spirit of the Nation requires youth and vigor in commanders. The fine personnel in the ranks demand the best leadership we can find."

War Department studies show that unless a vitalization measure such as is proposed in H. R. 7328 is enacted into law, second lieutenants who entered the Army in 1920 will not reach the grade of colonel until after 38 years' service, or at an average age of 62, and even this prediction is based on a 40-percent ratio of field officers and the assumption that the commissioned strength will be augmented annually for 10 years to reach the increased strength recently authorized in connection with the Air Corps and Panama Canal Department augmentation program. Obviously the present situation of stagnation will not correct itself. Congressional action is essential to avoid a chronic condition of superannuation in the officer corps of our Army.

We hear of opposition to this measure on the grounds that officers of World War experience will be eliminated. This is not a valid argument, for it is only through the elimination of overage officers that the Army will be able to advance the young officer of World War experience, thus utilizing that experience in close connection with modern trends in tactics and organization made necessary by improved weapons and means of communication and transportation. These advances in aviation, weapons, motorization, and mechanization, and the consequent necessity of dealing with new weapons, faster vehicles, changed organizations, clearly indicate that the next war will not be fought as was the World War. It therefore follows that we do not need the superannuated officer even of World War experience, but we do need the man of World War experience young enough to be developed, and the men who have followed him into the service and who must be developed to eventually take his place.

The test of the value of our Regular officers is not whether or not they are performing satisfactorily routine duties of peace but is What will we have if war comes? The really valuable element must be younger officers of zeal and ability whose interest and efficiency has been maintained by reasonable advancements during their service in peace when preparing themselves and the Nation for the use of its armed forces in war. They become qualified for service in war by virtue of experience gained during service in peace.

The experience of all nations indicates that removals from the active list must accomplish two distinct things: First, remove all officers who fall below the standards, physical or otherwise, that are essential for service in war; and second, insure opportunity for advancement and training of younger officers. Removals from the active list for the second purpose are always necessary to some extent. In our present situation, with a large hump of some 4,300 officers of about the same age and length of service, such removals are absolutely vital to establish an efficient officer corps for war.

The vitalization measure, H. R. 7328, in addition to providing this opportunity for younger officers, both in the World War hump and in the post-war group, insures economical maintenance and is in full accord with the established principle that officers whose maximum possible return in future service is not commensurate with the cost of carrying them along in active service to eventual retirement with a high rate of retired pay should be eliminated from the active list.

No system which will vitalize the promotion list of the Regular Army will not create some dissatisfaction and opposition among officers affected. Your committee believes that this measure is the fairest one that can be devised and one which will cause the least disorganization and dissatisfaction in the service. A poll conducted by the Army and Navy Journal reveals an over 2-to-1 proposition in favor of this particular measure. I have received the assurance of the President that he is strongly in favor of this measure and that he urgently recommends its enactment by this session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an essay by the daughter of Captain Judd.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a brief article on Government spending.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]?

There was no objection.

CAMPAIGN PROMISES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, after the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] just a few minutes ago, may I read an excerpt from a speech made in Pittsburgh on October 19, 1932, by Mr. Roosevelt?

> The credit of the family depends chiefly upon whether that family is living within its income. And that is equally true of the Nation. If the Nation is living within its income, its credit is good.
> If, in some crises, it lives beyond its income for a year or two, it can usually borrow temporarily at reasonable rates. But if, like a spendthrift, it throws discretion to the winds and is willing to make no sacrifice at all in spending; if it extends its taxing to the limit of the people's power to pay and continues to pile up deficits, then it is on the road to bankruptcy.

Mr. Roosevelt must have changed since October 1932, for he is doing now to our Government what he then condemned. Why the change? Why is he now wrecking our Government and taking us over the brink of solid financing to bankruptcy?

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include Accumulative Statement of the Unemployed Citizens' League, Unit No. 239, Santa Monica, J. H. Harney, Auditor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LELAND M. FORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

HELL-RAISING

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I am about to make and to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, General Motors operating 70 plants in 40 cities with jobs for 150,000 workers, at times employing as many as 220,000 men and women, has been attempting to turn the Nation back on the road to recovery. But as it was in 1937 more than 2 years and 6 months ago, so it is now, John L. Lewis and his affiliated organizations are retarding business recovery, depriving men of their jobs, adding to the relief rolls and to the burden of the taxpayers.

In '37 Lewis, his C. I. O. and associated Communists, defying all laws, brought on the sit-down strikes and cost the State of Michigan and its workers almost $100,000,000.

Today strikes are spreading in the plants of General Motors, which is caught in the fight between the affiliates of the A. F. of L. and the affiliates of the C. I. O., with Homer Martin representing one group of unions, Thomas another group, and the independent worker, the man who does not want to join either union, unrepresented, General Motors is caught in a jam. Held helpless while women and men go jobless because the N. L. R. B. has never called an election so that the 150,000 employees of General Motors could decide whether they wished to bargain collectively and if they did, who should represent them in such collective bargaining.

Here we sit in Congress while Lewis, backed by the administration, by the Department of Labor, using the N. L. R. B. to aid his strikes and force employers and employees into a contract with his unions, seeks to levy tribute upon every citizen who would work. He is demanding a closed shop in the packing industry in Chicago. He intends to extend his rule to include not only every industrial worker but every agricultural worker. Lewis lives in luxury. He has a salary of $25,000 a year. He collects millions of dollars each year from out of the pocketbooks of the man who toils, while those who join his unions live on what he terms an insufficient wage.

No tyrant in the olden days levied tribute more successfully than does he. We in Congress do nothing to break his rule. [Applause.]

FEDERAL FARM BOARD

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, history has a rather irritating way of moving in parallels. Prior to 1932 we had a Federal Farm Board which once held $208,000,000 worth of cotton and 247,000,000 bushels of wheat. When we closed that agency out we lost $371,000,000.

I noticed on yesterday there was practically an all-time low in the prices of grain. Prices have declined 11 cents since the 1st of July. The Liverpool price of wheat is the lowest since the days of Queen Elizabeth, more than 300 years ago. I was advised through the newspapers of my district that the Secretary of Agriculture is contracting for from 25,000 to 50,000 steel bins in which to store the surplus in the ever-normal granary in the Middle West. I wonder if we are going to see a repetition of the days when Alexander Legge administered the Federal Farm Board, which Board was criticized by the President in 1932.

In the Democratic platform of 1932 there was embodied a plan which assailed the extravagances of the Federal Farm Board. In the address made by Mr. Roosevelt at Topeka, Kans., on September 14, 1932, he railed at the Farm Board and referred to the cruel joke of permitting our fertile acres to lie idle.

How paradoxical then that the very things which were so vociferously condemned then are embraced now as a part of the administration's program.

More acreage is being diverted today than at any time in the history of the Nation. Supplies are at a record level. Prices are on the toboggan. The market is making new lows. This morning's newspaper quotes July lard at 5½ cents per pound. A record pig crop was produced for the year 1939, almost equal to the all-time record of 1937. It is safe to say that pork and lard prices have not yet touched bottom. A huge corn crop is in prospect and growing conditions are ideal. To the administration, the prodigality of Nature must be almost regrettable.

Meanwhile, the Commodity Credit Corporation is carrying huge loans and storage facilities are being erected or provided at Government expense. But all this fails to solve the problem because the surpluses remain on hand and a part of the visible supply, whether stored in Federal facilities or in private elevators. It will continue to overhang the market and have a depressant effect on prices. When the time comes to liquidate and take the loss, the operations of the Federal Farm Board will appear as so much small change and we can nurse our economic aches, secure in the conviction that you cannot repeal the fertility of the soil, the prodigality of Nature, or the law of supply and demand.

FEDERAL CREDIT

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, this Nation today depends for its supply of its circulating medium on the creation of demand bank deposits by the banks for the making of loans. In other words, the volume of our debt is the measure of our having a circulating medium at all. This is wrong and is due to the failure of Congress to exercise its constitutional duty of creating the money of the Nation.

In the twenties private debt increased about $70,000,000,000. Until 1933 the local governments' debt was increasing by about a billion dollars a year, which means there was that much expansion taking place in check-book money in the country. Since 1933 the local governmental debt has been declining. Private debt has declined. Federal Government debt is only a substitution for the failure of those other forms of debt to increase. If you want to get rid of debt you have to establish a system for the creation of money by the Government, which is the only agency in the country that has a constitutional or moral right to create money. When you do that you can get rid of debt. Until that time, increasing Federal debt will have to be used to make up for the failure of private debt to increase rapidly enough to make up for the withdrawal of hoarded savings from the stream of current buying power of the people. Our choice is between constitutional creation of money by Congress on the one hand and increasing debt, either public or private, on the other.

INTERNAL REVENUE TAX PAID ON SPIRITS

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 1648) to provide for the refund or credit of the internal-revenue tax paid on spirits lost or rendered unmarketable by reason of the floods of 1936 and 1937 where such spirits were in the possession of the original taxpayer or rectifier for bottling or use in rectification under Government supervision as provided by law and regulations.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana explain this bill?

Mr. BOEHNE. The explanation of this bill, Mr. Speaker, lies entirely in the provision which states that it seeks to make a refund or give a credit, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may elect to do, of the internal-revenue tax paid on spirits lost or rendered unmarketable as a result of the Ohio River floods of 1936 and 1937. The spirits were in the possession of the original taxpayer but were in complete control and custody of the United States Government; therefore the amount can be determined actually by Government records.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The Seagram Co. is the only company that will benefit from this act?

Mr. BOEHNE. I believe that is true.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much money is involved?

Mr. BOEHNE. Approximately $400,000, or less than 4 days' taxes which that company pays to the Federal Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. For what reason is the Treasury opposed to the bill?

Mr. BOEHNE. The gentleman will have to read the report to find that out. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Seagram Co. was the only such company affected by the flood; is not that correct?

Mr. BOEHNE. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I asked why the Treasury is opposed to the bill?

Mr. BOEHNE. I cannot answer the gentleman's question. He will have to refer to the report. I could not, and neither could the Committee on Ways and Means, fathom the reasons why the Treasury Department is opposed to the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman think they are a little dumb down there in the Treasury Department? Is that what the gentleman is trying to tell us?

Mr. BOEHNE. I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts would expect me to answer that question.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to my distinguished floor leader—not that I am here defending the Treasury, because the Treasury does not need me to defend it—that it is true, as my good friend from Indiana has said, that this report from the Treasury is hardly up to the standard one might expect from the Secretary of the Treasury who is supposed to be the equal of Alexander Hamilton.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, did I correctly understand that the Treasury Department has opposed this particular bill?

Mr. BOEHNE. They have.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe they have a right to do so and that they should oppose any refunds that are not in accordance with what they believe to be the law? When you look at the Treasury statement issued by Mr. Morgenthau you will find that since July 1 for 20 days we have gone in the red $391,000,000. This means over $19,590,000 a day since July 1. How in the world is Mr. Morgenthau going to conduct the affairs of this Government if you come in here and ask for a refund of $400,000? Does he not need this money? Surely he does. Why are you now trying to bring in a bill prohibiting him from getting this amount of money he so urgently needs?

Mr. BOEHNE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania agree to double the taxation on the very same thing?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not want to double the taxation; but why are you asking for the passage of a bill that the Treasury Department does not approve?

Mr. BOEHNE. Because I believe and the Committee on Ways and Means believes that the Treasury Department was wrong in this instance.

Mr. RICH. Is this a unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. BOEHNE. There was a single objection in the committee.

Mr. RICH. Why does not that single objector come here now and object to this unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BOEHNE. The minority views are in the report.

Mr. RICH. Is seems to me this bill ought to be given more consideration than being brought up under unanimous consent.

Mr. KNUTSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I believe at this point the RECORD should show that the bill was considered by a subcommitee of the Committee on Ways and Means and by the full committee, and that the full committee went very exhaustively into the objections made by the Treasury Department and found several statements in the letter of the Treasury Department that were in conflict with each other.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized and directed to make refund, or in lieu thereof, if he so elects, allow credit in the amount of the internal-revenue tax paid on spirits previously withdrawn and lost or rendered unmarketable or useless by reason of the floods of 1936 and 1937 while such spirits were in the possession of the person originally paying the said tax on such spirits, or while such spirits were in the possession of a rectifier for rectification or for bottling, or which have been used in the process of rectification, under Government supervision as provided by law and regulations. A claim for such tax shall be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within 30 days from the effective date of this act in which proof shall be furnished to his satisfaction that (1) the internal-revenue tax on such spirits was fully paid; (2) that the same were in the possession of the claimant as above set forth at the time of such loss; (3) that such spirits were lost or rendered unmarketable or useless by reason of damage sustained as the result of the aforesaid flood conditions; (4) that such spirits so rendered unmarketable or useless have been destroyed; and (5) that claimant was not indemnified against such loss by any valid claim of insurance or otherwise.

(b) Where credit is allowed for the internal-revenue tax previously paid aforesaid, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized and directed to provide for the issuance of stamps to cover the spirits subsequently withdrawn to the extent of the credit so allowed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Commissioner of Customs.

(c) The Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Commissioner of Customs, with the approval of the Secretary, are authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "paid", insert the word "as."

Line 22, after "Revenue", strike out "and the Commissioner of Customs."

Line 23, after "Revenue", strike out "and the Commissioner of Customs."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title of the bill just passed may be changed so that the word "of" may read "or."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a Fourth of July address delivered to the Legion of my State by Hon. Edgar B. Dunlap, of Gainesville, Ga.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE RETIREMENT ACT OF APRIL 23, 1904

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 839) to amend the Retirement Act of April 23, 1904, with a House amendment thereto, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON of Texas, and Mr. ANDREWS of New York.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BENDER and Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a short article from the Washington Star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Ed O'Neal, president of the Farm Bureau Federation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 2009, with Mr. JONES of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES OF STATE COMMISSIONERS; COOPERATION WITH STATE AUTHORITIES

SEC. 10. (a) Paragraph (2) of section 13 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "Representatives of State commissions sitting with the Commission, under the provisions of this section, in cases pending before the Commission, shall receive such allowances for travel and subsistence expense as the Commission shall provide."

(b) The last two sentences of paragraph (3) of section 13 are amended by striking out the words "this part" where they appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof "this part or part III."

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 15

SEC. 11. Section 15 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended—

(1) by striking out in paragraph (1) thereof the following: "(or, in the case of a through route where one of the carriers is a water line, the maximum rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto)";

(2) by striking out in paragraph (3) thereof the following: "(or, in the case of a through route where one of the carriers is a water line, the maximum rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto)" and by striking out in such paragraph the following: "; nor shall the Commission have the right to establish any route, classification, or practice, or any rate, fare, or charge when the transportation is wholly by water, and any transportation by water affected by this part shall be subject to the laws and regulations applicable to transportation by water."

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 16

SEC. 12. Section 16 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended—

(1) by striking out in paragraph (2) thereof the word "circuit" before "court" wherever it appears and substituting in lieu thereof the word "district"; by striking out the word "petition" in the first sentence and substituting in lieu thereof the word "complaint"; by striking out the word "petitioner" in the second and third sentences and substituting in lieu thereof the word "plaintiff";

(2) by striking out in paragraph (3) (a) the words "three years" and substituting in lieu thereof the words "two years";

(3) by striking out in paragraph (3) (c) thereof the words "three years" and substituting in lieu thereof the words "two years", and by striking out the word "three-year" and substituting in lieu thereof the word "two-year";

(4) by striking out in paragraph (3) (d) thereof the word "three-year" and substituting in lieu thereof the word "two-year";

(5) by striking out in paragraph (3) (f) thereof the word "petition" and substituting in lieu thereof the word "complaint"; and

(6) by striking out in paragraph (12) thereof the words "the Commerce Court" and substituting in lieu thereof the words "any district court of the United States of competent jurisdiction" and by striking out the words "that Court" and the words "the Court" in the second sentence and substituting in lieu thereof the words "such court."

COMMISSION PROCEDURE; DELEGATION OF DUTIES; REHEARINGS

SEC. 13. Section 16a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is hereby repealed, and section 17 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. (1) The Commission is hereby authorized by its order to divide the members thereof into as many divisions (each to consist of not less than three members) as it may deem necessary, which may be changed from time to time. Such divisions shall be designated, respectively, division one, division two, etc., or by a term descriptive of the principal subject, work, business, or function assigned or referred to such divisions. The Commission may designate one or more of its divisions as appellate divisions. Any Commissioner may be assigned to such division or divisions as the Commission may direct, and the senior in service of the Commissioners constituting a division shall act as chairman thereof unless otherwise directed by the Commission. When a vacancy occurs in any division or when a Commissioner because of absence, or other cause, is unable to serve thereon, the Chairman of the Commission or any Commissioner designated by him for that purpose may serve temporarily on such division until the Commission otherwise orders.

"(2) The Commission may by order direct that any of its work, business, or functions under any provision of law (except matters required to be referred to joint boards by sec. 205), or any matter which has been or may be referred to it by Congress or by either branch thereof, be assigned or referred to any division, to an individual Commissioner, or to an examiner or a board composed of examiners of the Commission, for action thereon, and may by order at any time amend, modify, supplement, or rescind any such assignment or reference. The assignment or reference, to divisions, of work, business, or functions relating to rates, fares, or charges shall be made according to the character of regulation to be exercised and not according to the kind or class of the carriers involved or to the form or mode of transportation in which such carriers may be engaged. When any individual Commissioner, or any examiner, is unable to act upon any matter so assigned or referred because of absence or other cause, the Chairman of the Commission may designate another Commissioner or examiner, as the case may be, to serve temporarily until the Commission otherwise orders.

"(3) The Commission shall conduct its proceedings under any provision of law in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. The Commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. Any member of the Commission or examiner may administer oaths and affirmations, and any member of the Commission (or any examiner in connection with the performance of any work, business, or functions referred under this section to him or to a board upon which he serves) may sign subpenas. A majority of the Commission, of a division, or of a board of examiners shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The Commission may, from time to time, make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of proceedings before it, or before any division, individual Commissioner, examiner, or board of examiners, including forms of notices and the service thereof, which shall conform, as nearly as may be, to those in use in the courts of the United States. Any party may appear before the Commission or any division, individual Commissioner, examiner, or board of examiners and be heard in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the Commission, or of any division, individual Commissioner, examiner, or board of examiners, shall be entered of record, and such record shall be made public upon the request of any party interested. All hearings before the Commission, a division, individual Commissioner, examiner, or board of examiners shall be public upon the request of any party interested. No Commissioner or examiner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest.

"(4) A division, an individual Commissioner, an examiner, or a board of examiners shall have authority to hear and determine, order, certify, report, or otherwise act as to any work, business, or functions assigned or referred thereto under the provisions of this section, and with respect thereto shall have all the jurisdiction and powers conferred by law upon the Commission, and be subject to the same duties and obligations. Except as otherwise provided in this section, any order, decision, requirement, or other action of a division, an individual Commissioner, or an examiner or board of examiners, with respect to any matter so assigned or referred, shall have the same force and effect, and may be made, evidenced, and enforced in the same manner as if made or taken by the Commission. Any finding, report, or requirement of an individual Commissioner, examiner, or board of examiners, with respect to any matter so assigned or referred as to which a hearing is held, shall be accompanied by a statement in writing of the reasons therefor, together with a recommended order, which shall be filed with the Commission. Copies thereof shall be served upon interested parties (including, in proceedings under part II, persons specified in sec. 205 (e)), who may file exceptions thereto, but if no exceptions are filed within 20 days after service upon such persons, or within such further period as the Commission may authorize, such recommended order shall become the order of the Commission and become effective unless within such period the order is stayed or postponed by the Commission. The Commission upon its own motion may, and where exceptions are filed it shall, reconsider the matter either upon the same record or after further hearing, and such recommended order shall thereupon be stayed or postponed pending final determination thereof.

"(5) After a decision, order, or requirement has been made by the Commission, a division, an individual Commissioner, an examiner, or a board of examiners, or after an order recommended by an individual Commissioner, an examiner, or a board of examiners has become the order of the Commission as provided in paragraph (4), any party thereto may at any time, subject to such limitations as may be established by the general rules or orders of the Commission, make application for rehearing of the same, or of any matter determined therein. Applications for rehearing shall be governed by such general rules as the Commission may establish. No such application shall excuse any person from complying with or obeying any such decision, order, or requirement or operate in any manner to stay or postpone the enforcement thereof, except as otherwise provided in this section, without the special order of the Commission. Any application for rehearing of a decision, order, or requirement of a division shall be considered and acted upon by the Commission or referred to an appropriate division for consideration and action; but the Commission may, from time to time, make or amend general rules or orders establishing limitations upon the right to rehearing of a decision, order, or requirement of the Commission or of a division so as to confine such right to proceedings, or classes of proceedings, involving issues of general transportation importance. Such rehearing may be granted if sufficient reason therefor be made to appear. Any application for rehearing or reconsideration of a matter assigned or referred to an individual Commissioner, examiner, or a board of examiners, under the provisions of paragraph (2), if such application is filed within 20 days after the recommended order in the proceeding has become the order of the Commission as provided in paragraph (4), and if such matter shall not have been reconsidered or reheard as provided in such paragraph, shall be referred to an appropriate division of the Commission and such division shall reconsider the matter either upon the same record or after a further hearing. If the application is made after the expiration of such period, the Commission or division may reconsider the matter as aforesaid if good cause appears therefor. In either case the order shall be stayed or postponed pending denial of the application, or, if allowed, pending the final determination of the matter. If after reconsideration (or after further hearing and the consideration of all facts, including those arising since the former hearing) it shall appear that the original decision, order, or requirement is in any respect unjust or unwarranted, the Commission or division may reverse, change, or modify the same accordingly. Any decision, order, or requirement made after reconsideration or rehearing, reversing, changing, or modifying the original determination shall be subject to the same provisions as an original order.

"(6) Representatives of employees of a carrier, duly designated as such, may intervene and be heard in any proceeding arising under this part affecting such employees."

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 13.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KITCHENS: On page 222, line 19, after the word "and", strike out the word "not."

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, the Interstate Commerce Commission is divided up into divisions so as to take care of truck transportation and railroad transportation, but this bill specifically prevents the creation of a division in the Interstate Commerce Commission for the consideration of matters pertaining to water transportation.

Section 13, page 222, of the bill would require the same division of the Commission which regulates the rates and charges of railroads to regulate also the rates and charges of both common and contract water carriers. The conditions of transportation and the various factors necessary to determine proper charges for water carriers, and particularly contract water carriers, are so totally different from those pertaining to railroad transportation that the law should provide for the Commission to set up a special division to deal with the water carriers in order that they might better acquaint themselves with the problems of this type of transportation.

This is what the Commission did in 1935, when the Motor Carrier Act was enacted. It would have been physically impossible for them to have established regulatory service as well as they have if they had been required to mix all of the motor carrier matters up with those relating to rail carriers.

Furthermore, the declaration of policy in section 1 of the bill declares that regulation shall be so administered "as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each" mode of transportation.

Section 320 provides that the officers and employees of the Maritime Commission engaged in administering the regulatory provisions of water transportation shall be transferred without reduction in classification or compensation to the Interstate Commerce Commission. This staff should certainly be under the direction of some division which is equipped to deal specially with problems of water transportation. At present there is no member of the Interstate Commerce Commission who has had experience in dealing with water transportation.

My amendment will authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to select a committee or a division. Someone has said that some of those fostering this bill are railroad conscious or railroad minded. I cannot understand why they do not want a division of the Interstate Commerce Commission to consider water transportation. It may be the water transportation is so insignificant that it will not be deemed worthy of it, but it appears to me it is so important that if you are going to have a division of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the consideration of matters pertaining to motor carriers and also a division pertaining to railroad carriers, the Commission should be authorized at least to create a division for the consideration of matters pertaining to water carriers, but this act prevents it.

I have asked to amend the bill by striking out the word "not," which will enable a division to be established in the Interstate Commerce Commission for the consideration of matters pertaining to water carriers.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The committee deliberately placed this language in the bill as it is, and we have what we think is a good reason for doing it. The committee is aware of the fact that this provision proposes that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have jurisdiction over the fixing of rates of motors, water, and rail. We thought it desirable not to have special groups acting upon any one of these subjects, but, on the contrary, provide that every division should have jurisdiction to take care of either water, rail, or motor-vehicle cases. We would not have the Commission a group of little separate commissions, one over water, one over motors, and one over rails, each one, perhaps, developing an antagonism or jealousy to the other.

So in order that in the administration of the Interstate Commerce Commission we may have a Commission giving equal rights and recognition to all these activities, we have placed this language in the bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. In other words, you provide a centralized agency for the control of all transportation facilities instead of having a lot of separate bureaus, which is something we have been trying to get away from in these reorganization bills.

Mr. LEA. Yes; we want them all treated alike. We do not want to specialize with one set of men working contrary to others. I believe it is a wholesome change in the set-up of the activities of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHORT TITLE FOR PART I

SEC. 14. Section 27 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 27. This part may be cited as part I of the Interstate Commerce Act."

SHORT TITLE FOR PART II

SEC. 15. Section 201 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 201. This part may be cited as part II of the Interstate Commerce Act."

REFERENCES TO POLICY DECLARED IN PART II

SEC. 16. Part II of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the following wherever appearing therein: "the policy declared in section 202 (a) of this part", and "the policy of Congress enunciated in section 202", and by inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the national transportation policy declared in this act", and by striking out in subsection (b) of section 218 the words "said section" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "this act."

REPEAL OF DECLARATION OF POLICY IN PART II

SEC. 17. Section 202 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended—

(1) by striking out the heading thereof, "Declaration of policy and delegation of jurisdiction", and inserting in lieu thereof a new heading as follows: "Application of provisions"; and

(2) by repealing subsection (a) of such section, by striking out "(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a)", and by striking out "(c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(b)."

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 203

SEC. 18. Paragraphs (14) and (15) of section 203 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"(14) The term 'common carrier by motor vehicle' means any person which holds itself out to the general public to engage in the transportation by motor vehicle in interstate or foreign commerce of passengers or property or any class or classes thereof for compensation, whether over regular or irregular routes, except—

"(a) transportation by motor vehicle by an express company to the extent that such transportation has heretofore been subject to part I, to which extent such transportation shall continue to be considered to be and shall be regulated as transportation subject to part I, and

"(b) transportation by motor vehicle by a carrier by railroad subject to part I or by a common carrier by water subject to part III, incidental to transportation subject to such parts, in the performance within terminal areas of transfer, collection, or delivery services, which shall be considered to be transportation subject to part I when performed by such carrier by railroad, and transportation subject to part III when performed by such carrier by water.

"The performance within terminal areas of transfer, collection, or delivery services, by motor vehicle, by any person (whether as agent or under a contractual arrangement) for a common carrier by railroad subject to part I, an express company subject to part I, a common carrier by motor vehicle subject to this part, or a common carrier by water subject to part III, shall not be considered to be transportation by such person within the meaning of this paragraph; but such services shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be performed by such common carrier or express company as part of, and shall be regulated in the same manner as the transportation by railroads, express, motor vehicle, or water to which such services are incidental.

"(15) The term 'contract carrier by motor vehicle' means any person which, under individual contracts or agreements, engages in the transportation (other than transportation referred to in paragraph (14) and the exceptions therein) by motor vehicle of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce for compensation, except transportation by motor vehicle by a contract carrier by water subject to part III, incidental to transportation subject to such part, in the performance within terminal areas of transfer, collection, or delivery services, which shall be considered to be transportation subject to part III.

"The performance within terminal areas of transfer, collection, or delivery services, by motor vehicle, by any person (whether as agent or under a contractual arrangement) for a common carrier by railroad subject to part I, an express company subject to part I, a common carrier by motor vehicle subject to this part, or a common carrier by water subject to part III, shall not be considered to be transportation by such person within the meaning of this paragraph; but such services shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be performed by such common carrier or express company as part of, and shall be regulated in the same manner as, the transportation by railroad, express, motor vehicle, or water to which such services are incidental."

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LEA:
Page 229, line 4, after the word "of" insert the following: "subsection (a) of".

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to correct a clerical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Under date of July 17, 1939, a letter was sent by Mr. E. A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, to Members of Congress, endorsing the principles of the Transportation Act, S. 2009, as passed by the Senate. In the letter there is quoted as the basis of approval of the principles of that proposed legislation in full a resolution adopted by the American Farm Bureau Federation at its annual meeting in New Orleans in December 1938.

The endorsement in principle of the proposed transportation legislation is, therefore, not action by the executive committee of the bureau but by the full convention of that federation, where were assembled representatives of farm bureaus from all parts of the country. It constitutes an approval not alone by the president and not alone by the executive committee, but by the constituent membership of that great agricultural association. Any suggestion, therefore, by anyone, for the purpose of casting doubt upon the position taken by this great farm organization is, therefore, without foundation. The basis of the action is the resolution adopted in open convention at the annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau Federation last year.

Mr. O'Neal needs no defense either in this body, where his long and effective battle for the American farmer is so well known. His statement to Members of Congress follows:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., July 17, 1939.

To the House of Representatives:

There is transmitted herewith a statement of the executive committee of the American Farm Bureau Federation on the bill entitled "The Transportation Act of 1939." It is hoped the principles and recommendations embodied in the statement may be covered by the proposed legislation.

Respectfully yours,

EDWARD A. O'NEAL, President.

STATEMENT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION ON THE TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1939

The representative delegate body of the American Farm Bureau Federation, at its annual meeting in 1938, recognized the acute problems of the railroads and, after the most careful consideration, adopted the following resolution:

"American farmers are vitally interested in the maintenance of a highly efficient transportation system. We reaffirm the comprehensive resolution on transportation adopted at the annual meeting in 1936.

"We recognize that American railroads constitute an essential transportation agency and believe their continued operation under private ownership will best assure the highest degree of efficient and improved service to the public.

"Rules and regulations causing enforced costs entering railroad operations and transportation rates of the railroads should be adjusted to the extent necessary under efficient operations to permit improvement of services and a reasonable return on prudent investment.

"On the other hand, the railroads must continue under such reasonable regulation as will assure the public fair and reasonable rates and adequate service; but the underlying purposes of such regulation should be to foster and encourage, rather than to restrict, sound and orderly development and operation of an efficient and economical railroad system. Reasonable freedom and flexibility should be left to railroad management in fixing rates and in exploring all avenues to economy, including consolidation and elimination, all improvements in service, and every advancement in methods."

The American Farm Bureau Federation recognizes that if the Nation is to avoid Government ownership and operation of railroads, certain changes in present national policies providing for their regulation must be made. The provisions of the Transportation Act of 1939 as passed by a very substantial majority in the Senate, appears to be directed to this end and, in general, seems to be in accord with the policy pronouncement of our organization.

This act is in large part a codification of the Interstate Commerce Act, originally enacted into law more than 40 years ago and passed in a period when railroads virtually had a monopoly upon transportation. Such a monopolistic position does not now exist. Motor vehicles, improved waterways, pipe lines, and air transports are now aggressive competitors of rails and will, with limited and reasonable regulation, competitively keep in line, in the national interest, the railroads.

The act appears to preserve to the different types of transportation subjected to regulation the natural and inherent advantages of the respective types and this protection of their natural interests, should be maintained to the full extent that such natural advantage is reflected to the shipper. Some greater freedom and flexibility of action on the part of the railroads seems to be recognized in the proposed act. This is commendable but it is believed could be extended so as to afford greater initiative and determination by the railroads without adversely affecting public interest.

It is believed that possibilities along these lines for the relief of the railroads should be explored more fully and greater stress placed thereon. In the event of the passage of the act, substantially in its present form, it should specifically direct the Board of Research and Investigation, provided for in the act, to give its immediate attention to the possibilities of giving greater freedom of action to the railroads in solving their competitive problems and require such Board to report with recommendations to the next session of the Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE OPERATIONS OF MOTOR CARRIERS

SEC. 19. Section 204 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding after subparagraph (4) thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(4a) To determine, upon its own motion, or upon application by a motor carrier, a State board, or any other party in interest, whether the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce performed by any motor carrier or group of motor carriers lawfully engaged in operation solely within a single State is in fact of such nature, character, or quantity as not substantially to affect or impair uniform regulation by the Commission of transportation by motor carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce in effectuating the national transportation policy declared in this act. Upon so finding, the Commission shall issue a certificate of exemption to such motor carrier or group thereof which, during the period such certificate shall remain effective and unrevoked, shall exempt such carrier or group thereof from compliance with such of the provisions of this part as shall be designated in such certificate, and shall attach to such certificate such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations as the public interest may require. At any time after the issuance of any such certificate of exemption, the Commission may by order revoke all or any part thereof, if it shall find that the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce performed by the carrier or group of carriers designated in such certificate shall be, or shall have become, or is reasonably likely to become, of such nature, character, or quantity as in fact substantially to affect or impair uniform regulation by the Commission of interstate or foreign transportation by motor carriers in effectuating the national policy declared in this act. Upon revocation of any such certificate, the Commission shall restore to the carrier or carriers affected thereby, without further proceedings, the authority, if any, to operate in interstate or foreign commerce held by such carrier or carriers at the time the certificate of exemption pertaining to such carrier or carriers became effective. No certificate of exemption shall be denied, and no order of revocation shall be issued, under this subparagraph, except after reasonable opportunity for hearing to interested parties. The filing of an application for the exemption of a motor carrier under this subparagraph, accompanied by a certificate of the State board of the State in which the operations of such carrier are carried on stating that in the opinion of such board such carrier is entitled to a certificate of exemption under this subparagraph, shall exempt such carrier from the provisions of this part until final disposition has been made of such application."

AMENDMENTS TO SECTIONS 204 AND 205

SEC. 20. (a) Section 204 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is further amended—

(1) by repealing subsection (e) thereof; and

(2) by striking out "(f)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(e)."

(b) Section 205 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended—

(1) by repealing subsection (a) thereof;

(2) by striking out in the remaining paragraphs thereof the letters "(b)", "(c)", "(d)", "(e)", "(f)", "(g)", "(h)", "(i)", "(j)", and "(k)", and inserting in lieu thereof "(a)", "(b)", "(c)", "(d)", "(e)", "(f)", "(g)", "(h)", "(i)", and "(j)".

(3) by striking out in the relettered paragraph (a) thereof the words "paragraph (a) of this section" in the first proviso and substituting in lieu thereof the following: "section 17";

(4) by striking out in the relettered paragraph (a) thereof the words "this section" in the third proviso and substituting in lieu thereof the following: "section 17";

(5) by striking out in the relettered paragraph (b) thereof the words "paragraph (a) of this section" in the second sentence and substituting in lieu thereof the following: "section 17";

AMENDMENTS RELATING TO POWER OF COMMISSION TO LIMIT SCOPE OF MOTOR CARRIER OPERATIONS

SEC. 21. (a) Subsection (a) of section 208 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Commission shall not impose any terms, conditions, or limitations which shall have the effect of preventing a carrier entitled to a certificate under the first proviso of section 206 (a) authorizing it to engage in transportation of property either in whole or in part over irregular routes or within a territory, from transporting any commodity or class of commodities transported by it on or prior to June 1, 1935, or from engaging in the transportation thereof from or to any point to or from which it transported such commodity or class of commodities on or prior to said date."

(b) Subsection (b) of section 209 of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Commission shall not impose any terms, conditions, or limitations which shall have the effect of preventing a carrier entitled to a permit under the first proviso of subsection (a) from transporting any commodity or class of commodities transported by it on or prior to July 1, 1935, or from engaging in the transportation thereof from or to any point to or from which it transported such commodity or class of commodities on or prior to said date."

REPEAL OF MOTOR CARRIER PROVISIONS RELATING TO CONSOLIDATIONS, MERGERS, AND ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL

SEC. 22. Section 213 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is hereby repealed.

NEW SECTION ADDED TO PART II

SEC. 23. Part II of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding after section 212 the following new section:

"ALLOWANCES TO SHIPPERS FOR TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

"SEC. 213. If the owner of property transported under this part directly or indirectly renders any service connected with such transportation, or furnishes any instrumentality used therein, the charge and allowance therefor shall be no more than is just and reasonable, and the Commission may, after hearing on a complaint or on its own initiative, determine what is a reasonable charge as the maximum to be paid by the carrier or carriers for the services so rendered or for the use of the instrumentality so furnished, and fix the same by appropriate order."

PUBLICATION OF INFORMATION CONTAINED IN CONTRACTS

SEC. 24. Subsection (a) of section 218 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended—

(1) by striking out in the first sentence the words "or, in the discretion of the Commission, copies of contracts";

(2) by adding after the words "such carrier" in the first sentence the words "actually maintained and charged"; and

(3) by adding immediately following the first sentence the following: "The Commission, in its discretion, may require any such carrier to file with it, in lieu of such schedules, copies of contracts containing the minimum charges of such carrier for such service and any rule, regulation, or practices affecting such charges and the value of the service; such carrier shall not be required to publish and keep open for public inspection copies of contracts so filed but the minimum rates or charges contained therein for transportation of commodities, or classes thereof, or for specified services, may be made public by the Commission. The names of the person or persons for whom property is transported under such contracts and other terms thereof shall not be made public by the Commission, except that the Commission may make the contract, or any part thereof, available as a part of the record in a formal proceeding where it considers such action consistent with the public interest."

INVESTIGATION OF NEED FOR REGULATING SIZES AND WEIGHT OF MOTOR VEHICLES

SEC. 25. The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized and directed to expedite the investigation of the need for Federal regulation of the sizes and weight of motor vehicles, authorized by section 225 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and to report to Congress thereon at the earliest practicable date.

REPEAL OF SECTION 3 (E) OF INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION ACT

SEC. 26. (a) Subsection (e) of section 3 of the Inland Waterways Corporation Act of June 7, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 153 (e)), is hereby repealed as of January 1, 1940.

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section—

(1) Any certificate of public convenience and necessity granted to any carrier pursuant to the provisions of such subsection (e) shall continue in effect as though issued under the provisions of section 309 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

(2) Through routes and joint rates and rules, regulations, and practices relating thereto, put into effect pursuant to the provisions of such subsection (e) shall, after the repeal of such subsection (e), be held and considered to have been put into effect pursuant to the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, we have now come to title II, part 3, of this bill, which extends from page 238 to 289. After a casual examination of the numbering of this part, I have come to the conclusion that instead of many sections, title II, part 3, is in fact only one section. Will the Chair inform us now on that phase of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there are two sections. One section extends from page 238 over to line 21, page 288. There is a separate section beginning on line 22, on page 288, at the bottom of the page and extending down to and including line 7, page 289.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, in view of that expression by the Chair, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], I ask unanimous consent that the reading of that title, which is section 322, page 288, be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LEA. I would be very glad to have that course taken, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Why not include the entire part.

Mr. WARREN. Very well, I so amend my unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the reading of part 3, beginning on page 238 and ending on line 17, page 289, be dispensed with, and that amendments be in order at any point in the section? Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, to ask the chairman of the committee whether he proposes to offer some committee amendments and whether he will offer them first?

Mr. LEA. We have no committee amendments to offer to this portion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The title referred to is as follows:

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 302. For the purposes of this part—

"(a) The term 'person' includes any individual, firm, copartnership, corporation, company, association, joint-stock association, and any trustee, receiver, assignee, or personal representative thereof.

"(b) The term 'Commission' means the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"(c) The term 'water carrier' means a common carrier by water or a contract carrier by water.

"(d) The term 'common carrier by water' means any person which holds itself out to the general public to engage in the transportation by water in interstate or foreign commerce of passengers or property or any class or classes thereof for compensation, except transportation by water by a carrier by railroad subject to part I or by a common carrier by motor vehicle subject to part II, incidental to transportation subject to such parts, in the performance within terminal areas of transfer, collection, or delivery services, or in the performance of floatage, lighterage, or towage, which shall be considered to be transportation subject to part I when performed by such carrier by railroad, and transportation subject to part II when performed by such common carrier by motor vehicle.

The performance within terminal areas of transfer, collection, or delivery services, by water, by any person (whether as agent or under a contractual arrangement) for a common carrier by railroad subject to part I, an express company subject to part I, a common carrier by motor vehicle subject to part II, or a common carrier by water subject to this part, shall not be considered to be transportation by such person within the meaning of this paragraph; but such services shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be performed by such common carrier or express company as part of, and shall be regulated in the same manner as, the transportation by railroad, express, motor vehicle, or water to which such services are incidental.

"(e) The term 'contract carrier by water' means any person which, under individual contracts or agreements, engages in the transportation (other than transportation referred to in paragraph (d) and the exceptions therein) by water of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce for compensation, except transportation by water by a contract carrier by motor vehicle subject to part II, incidental to transportation subject to such part, in the performance within terminal areas of transfer, collection, or delivery services, or in the performance of floatage, lighterage, or towage, which shall be considered to be transportation subject to part II.

For the purposes of this paragraph a person which, under a charter, lease, or other agreement, furnishes a vessel to another person, for compensation, for use in the transportation of property of such other person, shall itself be considered to be engaged in the transportation of such property as a contract carrier by water. The performance within terminal areas of transfer, collection, or delivery services, by water, by any person (whether as agent or under a contractual arrangement) for a common carrier by railroad subject to part I, an express company subject to part I, a common carrier by motor vehicle subject to part II, or a common carrier by water subject to this part, shall not be considered to be transportation by such person within the meaning of this paragraph; but such services shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be performed by such common carrier or express company as part of, and shall be regulated in the same manner as, the transportation by railroad, express, motor vehicle, or water to which such services are incidental.

"(f) The term 'vessel' means any water craft or other artificial contrivance of whatever description which is used, or is capable of being, or is intended to be, used as a means of transportation by water.

"(g) The term 'transportation facility' includes any vessel, warehouse, wharf, pier, dock, yard, grounds, or any other instrumentality or equipment of any kind, used in or in connection with transportation.

"(h) The term 'transportation' includes the use of any transportation facility (irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for such use), and includes any and all services in or in connection with transportation, including the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, refrigeration or icing, ventilation, storage, and handling of property transported or the interchange thereof with any other agency of transportation.

"(i) The term 'interstate or foreign transportation' or 'transportation in interstate or foreign commerce,' as used in this part, means transportation of persons or property—

"(1) wholly by water from a place in a State to a place in any other State, whether or not such transportation takes place wholly in the United States;

"(2) partly by water and partly by railroad or motor vehicle, from a place in a State to a place in any other State; except that with respect to such transportation taking place partly in the United States and partly outside thereof, such terms shall include transportation by railroad or motor vehicle only insofar as it takes place within the United States, and shall include transportation by water only insofar as it takes place from a place in the United States to another place in the United States;

"(3) wholly by water, or partly by water and partly by railroad or motor vehicle, from or to a place in the United States to or from a place outside the United States, but only (A) insofar as such transportation by rail or by motor vehicle takes place within the United States, and (B) in the case of a movement to a place outside the United States, only insofar as such transportation by water takes place from any place in the United States to any other place therein prior to transshipment at a place within the United States for movement to a place outside thereof, and, in the case of a movement from a place outside the United States, only insofar as such transportation by water takes place from any place in the United States to any other place therein after transshipment at a place within the United States in a movement from a place outside thereof.

"(j) The term 'United States' means the States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

"(k) The term 'State' means a State of the United States or the District of Columbia.

"(l) The term 'common carrier by railroad' means a common carrier by railroad subject to the provisions of part I.

"(m) The term 'common carrier by motor vehicle' means a common carrier by motor vehicle subject to the provisions of part II.

"APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS; EXEMPTIONS

"SEC. 303. (a) In the case of transportation which is subject both to this part and part I, the provisions of part I shall apply only to the extent that part I imposes, with respect to such transportation, requirements not imposed by the provisions of this part.

"(b) Nothing in this part shall apply to the transportation by a contract carrier by water of commodities in bulk in a vessel the cargo space of which is used for the carrying of not more than three such commodities at any given time. This subsection shall apply only in the case of commodities in bulk which are (in accordance with the existing custom of the trade in handling and transportation of such commodities as of June 1, 1939) loaded and carried without wrappers or containers and received and delivered by the carrier without mark or count. For the purposes of this subsection two or more vessels while navigated as a unit shall be considered to be a single vessel. This subsection shall not apply to transportation subject, at the time this part takes effect, to the provisions of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended.

"(c) Nothing in this part shall apply to transportation by a contract carrier by water of commodities in bulk in a non-oceangoing vessel on a normal voyage during which (1) the cargo space of such vessel is used for the carrying of not more than three such commodities, and (2) such vessel passes within or through waters which are made international for navigation purposes by any treaty to which the United States is a party.

"(d) Nothing in this part shall apply to the transportation by water of liquid cargoes in bulk in tank vessels designed for use exclusively in such service and certified under regulations approved by the Secretary of Commerce pursuant to the provisions of section 4417a of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 391a).

"(e) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to exclude from the provisions of this part, in addition to the transportation otherwise excluded under this section, transportation by contract carriers by water which, by reason of the inherent nature of the commodities transported, their requirement of special equipment, or their shipment in bulk, is not actually and substantially competitive with transportation by any common carrier subject to this part or part I or part II. Upon application of a carrier, made in such manner and form as the Commission may by regulations prescribe, the Commission shall, subject to such reasonable conditions and limitations as the Commission may prescribe, by order exempt from the provisions of this part such of the transportation engaged in by such carrier as it finds necessary to carry out the policy above declared. A carrier (other than a carrier subject, at the time this part takes effect, to the provisions of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended) making such application prior to October 1, 1939, shall be exempt from the provisions of this part until a final determination has been made upon such application if such carrier or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide operation as a contract carrier by water on June 1, 1939, over the route or routes or in the trade or trades with respect to which application is made and has so operated since that time (or, if engaged in furnishing seasonal service only, was in bona fide operation during the seasonal period, prior to or including such date, for operations of the character in question) except, in either event, for interruptions of service over which such carrier or its predecessor in interest had no control.

"(f) Nothing in this part shall be construed to affect any law of navigation, the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, liabilities of vessels and their owners for loss or damage, or laws respecting seamen, or any other statute or maritime law, regulation, or custom not in conflict with the provisions of this part.

"(g) Except to the extent that the Commission shall from time to time find, and by order declare, that such application is necessary to carry out the national transportation policy declared in this act, the provisions of this part shall not apply (1) to transportation in interstate commerce by water solely within the limits of a single harbor or between places in contiguous harbors, when such transportation is not a part of a continuous through movement under a common control, management, or arrangement to or from a place without the limits of any such harbor or harbors, or (2) to transportation by ferry, or by small craft of not more than 50 tons carrying capacity, or to vessels carrying passengers only and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers.

"(h) The Commission shall have the power to determine, upon its own motion or upon application of any party in interest, whether any water carrier is engaged solely in transporting the property of a person which owns all or substantially all of the voting stock of such carrier. Upon so finding the Commission shall issue a certificate of exemption to such carrier, and such carrier shall not be subject to the provisions of this part during the period such certificate shall remain in effect. At any time after the issuance of such certificate the Commission may by order revoke such certificate if it finds that such carrier is no longer entitled to the exemption under the foregoing provisions of this subsection. Upon revocation of any such certificate the Commission shall restore to such carrier, without further proceedings, the authority, if any, to engage in transportation subject to the provisions of this part held by such carrier at the time the certificate of exemption pertaining to such carrier became effective. No certificate of exemption shall be denied and no order of revocation shall be issued, under this subsection, except after reasonable opportunity for hearing.

"(i) In the application of the provisions of this part to any carrier owned or controlled by the United States, no different policy, rule of rate making, system of accounting, or method of determining costs of service, value of property, or rate of return shall be applied than is applied in the case of carriers not so owned or controlled.

"(j) Nothing in this part shall be construed to interfere with the exclusive exercise by each State of the power to regulate intrastate commerce by water carriers within the jurisdiction of such State.

"(k) Nothing in this part shall authorize the Commission to prescribe or regulate any rate, fare, or charge for intrastate transportation, or for any service connected therewith, for the purpose of removing discrimination against interstate commerce or for any other purpose.

"GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 304. (a) It shall be the duty of the Commission to administer the provisions of this part, and to that end the Commission shall have authority to make and amend such general or special rules and regulations and to issue such orders as may be necessary to carry out such provisions.

"(b) The Commission shall have authority, for purposes of the administration of the provisions of this part, to inquire into and report on the organization of water carriers and the management of their business, and to keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and to transmit to Congress, from time to time, such recommendations as the Commission may deem necessary.

"(c) The Commission may establish from time to time such just and reasonable classifications of groups of carriers included in the terms 'common carrier by water', or 'contract carrier by water', as the special nature of the services performed by such carriers shall require; and such just and reasonable rules, regulations, and requirements consistent with the provisions of this part to be observed by the carriers so classified or grouped, as the Commission, after hearing, finds necessary or desirable in the public interest.

"(d) Whenever it shall appear from complaint made to the Commission or otherwise that the rates, fares, regulations, or practices of persons engaged in transportation by water to or from a port or ports of any foreign country in competition with common carriers by water or contract carriers by water, cause undue disadvantage to such carriers by reason of such competition, the Commission may relieve such carriers from the provisions of this part to such extent, and for such time, and in such manner as in its judgment may be necessary to avoid or lessen such undue disadvantage, consistently with the public interest and the national transportation policy declared in this act.

"(e) Upon complaint in writing to the Commission by any person, or upon its own initiative without complaint, the Commission may investigate whether any water carrier has failed to comply with any provision of this part or with any requirement established pursuant thereto, and if, after notice of and hearing upon any such investigation, the Commission finds that any such carrier has failed to comply with any such provision or requirement, it shall issue an appropriate order to compel such carrier to comply therewith. Whenever the Commission is of opinion that any complaint does not state reasonable grounds for action on its part, it may dismiss such complaint.

"RATES, FARES, CHARGES, AND PRACTICES; THROUGH ROUTES

"SEC. 305. (a) It shall be the duty of every common carrier by water, with respect to transportation subject to this part which it undertakes or holds itself out to perform, or which it is required by or under authority of this part to perform, to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor, to provide safe and adequate service and transportation facilities, and to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rates, fares, charges, and classifications, and just and reasonable regulations and practices, relating thereto and to the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, receipts, bills of lading, and manifests, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, the facilities for transportation, and all other matters relating to or connected with such transportation in interstate or foreign commerce.

"(b) It shall be the duty of common carriers by water to establish, with respect to transportation subject to this act, through routes with other such carriers and with common carriers by railroad, and to provide reasonable facilities for operating such through routes, and to make reasonable rules and regulations with respect to their operation and providing for reasonable compensation to those entitled thereto. Common carriers by water may establish reasonable through routes and rates, charges, and classifications applicable thereto with common carriers by motor vehicle. In the case of joint rates, fares, or charges it shall be the duty of the carriers parties thereto to establish just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof, which shall not unduly prefer or prejudice any of such carriers.

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any common carrier by water to make, give, or cause any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any person, port, port district, gateway, transit point, locality, or description of traffic in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any person, port, port district, gateway, transit point, locality, or description of traffic to any unjust discrimination or any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever: Provided, That this subsection shall not be construed to apply to discriminations, prejudice, or disadvantage to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever description.

"(d) All common carriers by water shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines and connecting lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers or property to and from connecting lines; and shall not discriminate in their rates, fares, and charges between connecting lines, or unduly prejudice any connecting line in the distribution of traffic that is not specifically routed by the shipper. As used in this paragraph the term 'connecting line' means the connecting line of any common carrier by water or any common carrier subject to part I.

"TARIFFS AND SCHEDULES

"SEC. 306. (a) Every common carrier by water shall file with the Commission, and print, and keep open to public inspection tariffs showing all rates, fares, charges, classifications, rules, regulations, and practices for the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of passengers and property between places on its own route, and between such places and places on the route of any other such carrier or on the route of any common carrier by railroad or by motor vehicle, when a through route and joint rate shall have been established. Such tariffs shall plainly state the places between which property or passengers will be carried, the classification of property or passengers and, separately, all terminal charges, or other charges which the Commission shall require to be so stated, all privileges or facilities granted or allowed, and any rules or regulations which in anywise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such rates, fares, or charges, or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, shipper, or consignee.

"(b) All charges of common carriers by water shall be stated in lawful money of the United States. The Commission shall by regulations prescribe the form and manner in which the tariffs required by this section shall be published, filed, and posted; and the Commission is authorized to reject any tariff filed with it which is not in accordance with this section and with such regulations. Any tariff so rejected by the Commission shall be void and its use shall be unlawful.

"(c) No common carrier by water shall charge or demand or collect or receive a greater or less or different compensation for transportation subject to this part or for any service in connection therewith than the rates, fares, or charges specified for such transportation or such service in the tariffs lawfully in effect; and no such carrier shall refund or remit in any manner or by any device any portion of the rates, fares, or charges so specified, or extend to any person any privileges or facilities for transportation affecting the value thereof except such as are specified in its tariff: Provided, That the provisions of sections 1 (7) and 22 (1) of part I (relating to transportation free and at reduced rates), together with such other provisions of such part (including penalties) as may be necessary for the enforcement of such provisions, shall apply to common carriers by water.

"(d) No change shall be made in any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice specified in any effective tariff of a common carrier by water except after 30 days' notice of the proposed change filed and posted in accordance with this section. Such notice shall plainly state the change proposed to be made and the time when such change will take effect. The Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow changes upon notice less than that herein specified, or modify the requirements of this section with respect to posting and filing of tariffs, either in particular instances or by general order applicable to special circumstances or conditions.

"(e) It shall be the duty of every contract carrier by water to file with the Commission, post, and keep open for public inspection, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, schedules of minimum rates or charges actually maintained and charged for interstate and foreign transportation to which it is a party, and any rule, regulation, or practice affecting such charges and the value of the service thereunder. The Commission, in its discretion, may require any such carrier to file with it, in lieu of such schedules, copies (or, if oral, true and complete memoranda) of every contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking containing the charges of such carrier for such transportation and any rule, regulation, or practices affecting such charges and the value of the service. Such carrier shall not be required to publish and keep open for public inspection copies of contracts, charters, agreements, or undertakings so filed, but the rates or charges contained therein with respect to commodities, or classes thereof, or for specified services, may be made public by the Commission. The names of the person or persons for whom property is transported under such contracts, charters, agreements, or undertakings and other terms thereof shall not be made public by the Commission, except that the Commission may make the contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking, or any part thereof, available as a part of the record in a formal proceeding where it considers such action consistent with the public interest. It shall be unlawful for any such carrier to transport passengers or property or to furnish facilities or services in connection therewith for a less compensation, either directly or by means of a change in the terms and conditions of any contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking, than the rates or charges so filed with the Commission: Provided, That the Commission, in its discretion and for good cause shown, either upon application of any such carrier or carriers, or any class or group thereof, or upon its own intiative may, after hearing, grant relief from the provisions of this subsection to such extent, and for such time, and in such manner as, in its judgment, is consistent with the public interest and the national transportation policy declared in this act.

"COMMISSION'S AUTHORITY OVER RATES, ETC.

"SEC. 307. (a) Any person may make complaint in writing to the Commission that any individual or joint rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any common carrier by water or any contract carrier by water is or will be in violation of this part. Every complaint shall state fully the facts complained of and the reasons for such complaint and shall be made under oath.

"(b) Whenever, after hearing, upon complaint or in an investigation on its own initiative, the Commission shall be of opinion that any individual or joint rate, fare, or charge demanded, charged, or collected by any common carrier or carriers by water for transportation subject to this part, or any regulation or practice of such carrier or carriers relating to such transportation, is or will be unjust or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any provision of this part, it may determine and prescribe the lawful rate, fare, or charge or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum rate, fare, or charge thereafter to be observed, or the lawful regulation or practice thereafter to be made effective.

"(c) In any proceeding to determine the justness or reasonableness of any rate, fare, or charge of any common carrier by water there shall not be taken into consideration or allowed as evidence or elements of value of the property of such carrier either goodwill, earning power, or the certificate under which such carrier is operating; and in applying for and receiving a certificate under this part any such carrier shall be deemed to have agreed to the provisions of this paragraph on its own behalf and on behalf of all transferees of such certificate.

"(d) The Commission may, and it shall whenever deemed by it to be necessary or desirable in the public interest, after full hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative without a complaint, establish through routes, joint classifications, and joint rates, fares, or charges, applicable to the transportation of passengers or property by common carriers by water, or by such carriers and carriers by railroad, or the maxima or minima, or maxima and minima, to be charged, and the divisions of such rates, fares, or charges as hereinafter provided, and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated. In the case of a through route, where one of the carriers is a common carrier by water, the Commission may prescribe such reasonable differentials, if any, as it may find to be justified between all-rail rates and the joint rates in connection with such common carrier by water. The Commission shall not, however, establish any through route, classification, or practice, or any rate, fare, or charge, between street electric passenger railways not engaged in the general business of transporting freight in addition to their passenger and express business, and common carriers by water.

"(e) Whenever, after hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative, the Commission is of opinion that the divisions of joint rates, fares, or charges, applicable to the transportation of passengers or property by common carriers by water, or by such carriers and common carriers by railroad or by motor vehicle, are or will be unjust, unreasonable, inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial as between the carriers parties thereto, the Commission shall by order prescribe the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers. The order of the Commission may require the adjustment of divisions between such carriers in accordance with the order, from the date of filing the complaint or entry of order of investigation or such other dates subsequent thereto as the Commission finds justified.

"(f) In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices, the Commission shall give due consideration, among other factors, to the effect of rates upon the movement of traffic; to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient water transportation service at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable water carriers, under honest, economical, and efficient management, to provide such service.

"(g) Whenever there shall be filed with the Commission any schedule (except a schedule referred to in section 321) stating a new rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice for the interstate or foreign transportation of passengers or property by a common carrier or carriers by water, the Commission may upon protest of interested parties or upon its own initiative at once, and, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by such carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, enter upon an investigation concerning the lawfulness of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, and pending such hearing and the decision thereon, the Commission, by filing with such schedule and delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may from time to time suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, but not for a longer period than 7 months beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after hearing, whether completed before or after the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the Commission may make such order with reference thereto, as would be proper in a proceeding instituted after such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice had become effective. If the proceeding shall not have been concluded and an order made within the period of suspension, the proposed rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period: Provided, however, That this paragraph shall not apply to a schedule referred to in section 321, or to any initial schedule or schedules filed prior to January 1, 1941, by any such carrier (other than a carrier subject, at the time this part takes effect, to the provisions of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended, or the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended).

"(h) Whenever, after hearing, upon complaint or its own initiative, the Commission finds that any rate, charge, rule, regulation, or practice of any contract carrier by water, or the form or provisions of any charter, contract, agreement, or undertaking used by any such carrier, contravenes the national transportation policy declared in this act, the Commission may prescribe such minimum rate or charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice, or such form or provisions of any such charter, contract, agreement, or undertaking as in its judgment may be necessary or desirable in the public interest and to promote such policy. Such minimum rate or charge or such rule, regulation, or practice, or the form, terms, or conditions of any such contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking affecting such minimum charge or the value of the service rendered, so prescribed by the Commission, shall give no advantage or preference to any such contract carrier in competition with any common carrier subject to this part, which the Commission shall find to be undue or inconsistent with the public interest and the national transportation policy declared in this act, and the Commission shall give due consideration to the cost of the services rendered by such contract carriers and to the effect of such minimum charge or such rule, regulation, or practice on the movement of traffic by such carriers.

"(i) Whenever there shall be filed with the Commission by any such contract carrier any schedule, contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking, stating a charge for a new service or a reduced charge, directly or by means of any rule, regulation, or practice, for transportation in interstate or foreign commerce, the Commission may upon complaint of interested parties or upon its own initiative at once and, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested party, but upon reasonable notice, enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice, and pending such hearing and the decision thereon the Commission, by filing with such schedule, contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking, and delivering to the carrier affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedule, contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking, and defer the use of such charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice, for a period of 90 days, and if the proceeding has not been concluded and a final order made within such period the Commission may, from time to time, extend the period of suspension, but not for a longer period in the aggregate than 180 days beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after hearing, whether completed before or after the charge, or rule, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the Commission may make such order with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding instituted after it had become effective. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made within the period of suspension, the proposed change in any charge or rule, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to a schedule referred to in section 321, or to any initial schedule, contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking, filed prior to January 1, 1941, by any such carrier (other than a carrier subject, at the time this part takes effect, to the provisions of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended, or the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended).

"REPARATION AWARDS; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

"SEC. 308. (a) For the purposes of this section the term 'carrier' means a water carrier engaged in transportation subject to this part (1) by way of the Panama Canal, or (2) as a common carrier by water on the high seas or the Great Lakes on regular routes from port to port.

"(b) In case any carrier shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this part prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing in this part required to be done, such carrier shall be liable to the person or persons injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation, together with a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court in every case of recovery, which attorney's fee shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in the case.

"(c) Any person or persons claiming to be damaged by any carrier may either make complaint to the Commission or may bring suit in his or their own behalf for the recovery of the damages for which such carrier may be liable under the provisions of paragraph (b), in any district court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; but such person or persons shall not have the right to pursue both of said remedies.

"(d) If, after hearing on a complaint, the Commission shall determine that any party complainant is entitled to an award of damages under the provisions of this part for a violation thereof by any carrier, the Commission shall make an order directing the carrier to pay to the complainant the sum to which he is entitled on or before a day named.

"(e) If such carrier does not comply with an order for the payment of money within the time limit in such order, the complainant, or any person for whose benefit such order was made, may file with the district court of the United States for the district in which he or it resides or in which is located the principal operating office of such carrier or in which is located any port of call on a route operated by such carrier, or in any State court of general jurisdiction having jurisdiction of the parties, a complaint setting forth briefly the causes for which he claims damages, and the order of the Commission in the premises. Such suit in the district court of the United States shall proceed in all respects like other civil suits for damages, except that on the trial of such suit the findings and order of the Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and except that the plaintiff shall not be liable for costs in the district court nor for costs at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless they accrue upon his appeal. If the plaintiff shall finally prevail, he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed and collected as a part of the costs of the suit.

"(f) (1) All complaints against carriers for the recovery of damages or overcharges shall be filed with the Commission within 2 years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after.

"(2) The cause of action in respect of a shipment of property shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to accrue upon delivery or tender of delivery thereof by the carrier and not after.

"(3) A complaint for the enforcement of an order of the Commission for the payment of money shall be filed in the district court or the State court within 1 year from the date of the order, and not after.

"(4) The term 'overcharges' as used in this section means charges for transportation services in excess of those applicable thereto under the tariffs lawfully on file with the Commission.

"(5) The provisions of this paragraph (f) shall take effect 6 months after this section becomes effective and extend to and embrace cases in which the cause of action has heretofore accrued.

"(g) In such suits all parties in whose favor the Commission may have made an award of damages by a single order may be joined as plaintiffs, and all of the carriers parties to such order awarding such damages may be joined as defendants, and such suit may be maintained by such joint plaintiffs and against such joint defendants in any district where any one of such joint plaintiffs could maintain such suit against any one of such joint defendants; and service of process against any one of such defendants as may not be found in the district where the suit is brought may be made in any district where such defendant has his or its principal operating office. In case of such joint suit the recovery, if any, may be by judgment in favor of any one of such plaintiffs, against the defendant found to be liable to such plaintiff.

"CERTIFICATES OF PUBLIC CONVENIENCE AND NECESSITY AND PERMITS

"SEC. 309. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section and section 311, no common carrier by water shall engage in transportation subject to this part unless it holds a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by the Commission: Provided, however, That if any such carrier or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide operation as a common carrier by water on June 1, 1939, over the route or routes or in the trade or trades for which application is made and has so operated since that time (or, if engaged in furnishing seasonal service only, was in bona fide operation during the seasonal period, prior to or including such date, for operations of the character in question) except, in either event, as to interruptions of service over which the applicant or its predecessor in interest had no control, the Commission shall issue such certificate without requiring further proof that public convenience and necessity will be served by such operation, and without further proceedings, if application for such certificate is made to the Commission as provided in paragraph (b) of this section and prior to the expiration of 120 days after this section takes effect. Otherwise the application for such certificate shall be decided in accordance with the procedure provided for in paragraph (c) of this section and such certificate shall be issued or denied accordingly. Pending the determination of any such application the continuance of such operation shall be lawful. Whenever any common carrier conditionally exempted pursuant to the provisions of section 303 shall, by order of the Commission, become subject to regulation as provided in this part, the Commission shall, upon application and without further proceedings, issue a certificate to such carrier in operation at the time of its order.

"(b) Application for a certificate shall be made in writing to the Commission, be verified under oath, and shall be in such form and contain such information and be accompanied by proof of service upon such interested parties as the Commission shall, by regulations, require.

"(c) Subject to section 310, upon application as provided in this section the Commission shall issue a certificate to any qualified applicant therefor, authorizing the whole or any part of the operations covered by the application, if the Commission finds that the applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service proposed and to conform to the provisions of this part and the requirements, rules, and regulations of the Commission thereunder, and that the proposed service, to the extent authorized by the certificate, is or will be required by the present or future public convenience and necessity; otherwise such application shall be denied.

"(d) Such certificate shall specify the route or routes over which, and the ports to and from which, or the trade or trades in which, such carrier is authorized to operate, and, at the time of issuance and from time to time thereafter, there shall be attached to the exercise of the privileges granted by such certificate such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations as the public convenience and necessity may from time to time require, including terms, conditions, and limitations as to the extension of the route or routes of the carrier, and such other terms, and conditions, and limitations as are necessary to carry out, with respect to the operations of the carrier, the requirements of this part or those established by the Commission pursuant thereto: Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to add to his or its equipment, facilities, or service within the scope of such certificate, as the development of the business and the demands of the public shall require.

"(e) No certificate issued under this part shall confer any proprietary or exclusive right or rights in the use of public waterways.

"(f) Except as otherwise provided in this section and section 311, no person shall engage in the business of a contract carrier by water unless he or it holds an effective permit, issued by the Commission authorizing such operation: Provided, That if any such carrier or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide operation as a contract carrier by water on June 1, 1939, in the trade or service for which application is made, and has so operated since that time (or, if engaged in furnishing seasonal service only, was in bona fide operation during the seasonal period, prior to or including such date, for operations of the character in question) except, in either event, as to interruptions of service over which the applicant or its predecessor in interest had no control, the Commission shall issue such permit, without further proceedings, if application for such permit is made to the Commission as provided in paragraph (g) of this section and prior to the expiration of 120 days after this section takes effect. Otherwise the application for such permit shall be decided in accordance with the procedure provided for in paragraph (g) of this section and such permit shall be issued or denied accordingly. Pending determination of any such application the continuance of such operation shall be lawful. Whenever any contract carrier by water conditionally exempted by the provisions of section 303 shall, by order of the Commission, be made subject to regulation as provided in this part, the Commission shall, upon application and without further proceedings, issue a permit to such carrier in operation at the time of its order.

"(g) Application for such permit shall be made to the Commission in writing, be verified under oath, and shall be in such form and contain such information and be accompanied by proof of service upon such interested parties as the Commission shall, by regulations, require. Subject to section 310, upon application the Commission shall issue such permit if it finds that the applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service proposed and to conform to the provisions of this part and the requirements, rules, and regulations of the Commission thereunder, and that such operation will be consistent with the public interest and the national transportation policy declared in this act. The business of the carrier and the scope thereof shall be specified in such permit and there shall be attached thereto at time of issuance and from time to time thereafter such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations, consistent with the character of the holder as a contract carrier by water, as are necessary to carry out the requirements of this part or those lawfully established by the Commission pursuant thereto: Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to substitute or add contracts within the scope of the permit, or to add to his equipment, facilities, or service, within the scope of the permit, as the development of the business and the demands of the carrier's patrons shall require.

"DUAL OPERATION UNDER CERTIFICATES AND PERMITS

"SEC. 310. The Commission, upon application, may issue to a water carrier more than one of the forms of operating authority specified in section 309 if the Commission is of opinion that the granting of such application will be consistent with the public interest and with the national transportation policy declared in this act.

"TEMPORARY OPERATIONS

"SEC. 311. (a) To enable the provision of service for which there is an immediate and urgent need to a point or points or within a territory having no carrier service capable of meeting such need, the Commission may, in its discretion and without hearings or other proceedings, grant temporary authority for such service by a common carrier by water or a contract carrier by water, as the case may be. Such temporary authority shall be valid for such time as the Commission shall specify but not for more than an aggregate of 180 days, and shall create no presumption that corresponding permanent authority will be granted thereafter.

"(b) Pending the determination of an application filed with the Commission under this act for approval of a consolidation or merger of the properties of two or more water carriers, or of a purchase, lease, or contract to operate the properties of one or more water carriers, the Commission may, in its discretion, for good cause shown, and without hearings or other proceedings, grant temporary approval, for a period not exceeding 180 days, of operation of the properties of such carriers by water by the person proposing to acquire them, as aforesaid.

"TRANSFER OF CERTIFICATES AND PERMITS

"SEC. 312. Except as provided in this part, any such certificate or permit may be transferred in accordance with such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe for the protection of the public interest.

"ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND REPORTS

"SEC. 313. (a) The Commission is hereby authorized to require annual, periodical, or special reports from water carriers, and to prescribe the manner and form in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such carriers specific answers to all questions upon which the Commission may deem information to be necessary. Such reports shall be under oath whenever the Commission so requires. The Commission may also require any such carrier to file with it a true copy of any contract, charter, or agreement between such carrier and any other carrier or person in relation to transportation facilities, service, or traffic affected by the provisions of this part.

"(b) The Commission may, in its discretion, prescribe the forms of any and all accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by water carriers, and the length of time such accounts, records, and memoranda shall be preserved, including the accounts, records, and memoranda of the movement of traffic, as well as of the receipts and expenditures of money. The Commission or its duly authorized agents shall at all times have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept, or required to be kept by such carriers. The special agents or examiners of the Commission shall have authority under its order to inspect and examine any and all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by such carriers. This section shall apply to receivers of such carriers and to operating trustees thereof and, to the extent deemed necessary by the Commission for purposes of the administration of the provisions of this part, to persons having direct or indirect control of, or affiliated with, any such carrier.

"ALLOWANCES TO SHIPPERS FOR TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

"SEC. 314. If the owner of property transported under this part directly or indirectly renders any service connected with such transportation, or furnishes any instrumentality used therein, the charge and allowance therefor shall be no more than is just and reasonable, and the Commission may, after hearing on a complaint or on its own initiative, determine what is a reasonable charge as the maximum to be paid by the carrier or carriers for the services so rendered or for the use of the instrumentality so furnished, and fix the same by appropriate order.

"NOTICES, ORDERS, AND SERVICE OF PROCESS

"SEC. 315. (a) It shall be the duty of every water carrier to file with the Commission a designation in writing of the name and post-office address of an agent upon whom or which service of notices or orders may be made under this part. Such designation may from time to time be changed by like writing similarly filed. Service of notices or orders in proceedings under this part may be made upon such carrier by personal service upon it or upon an agent so designated by it, or by registered mail addressed to it or to such agent at the address filed. In default of such designation, service of any notice or order may be made by posting in the office of the secretary of the Commission. Whenever notice or order is served by mail, as provided herein, the date of mailing shall be considered as the time of service.

"(b) No order relating to a violation of this part by any water carrier shall be made by the Commission except after hearing upon complaint or after an investigation upon its own initiative.

"(c) The Commission may suspend, modify, or set aside its orders upon such notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper.

"(d) Except as otherwise provided in this part, all orders of the Commission, other than orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than 30 days, as the Commission may prescribe and shall continue in force until its further order, or for a specified period of time, according as shall be prescribed in the order.

"(e) It shall be the duty of every water carrier, its agents and employees, to observe and comply with such orders so long as the same shall remain in effect.

"ENFORCEMENT AND PROCEDURE

"SEC. 316. (a) The provisions of section 12 and section 17 of part I, and the Compulsory Testimony Act (27 Stat. 443), and the Immunity of Witnesses Act (34 Stat. 798; 32 Stat. 904, ch. 755, sec. 1), shall apply with full force and effect in the administration and enforcement of this part.

"(b) If any water carrier fails to comply with or operate in violation of any provision of this part, or any rule, regulation, requirement, or order thereunder (except an order for the payment of money), or of any term or condition of any certificate or permit, the Commission or the Attorney General of the United States (or, in case of such an order, any party injured by the failure to comply therewith or by the violation thereof) may apply to any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties for the enforcement of such provision of this part or of such rule, regulation, requirement, order, term, or condition; and such court shall have jurisdiction to enforce obedience thereto by a writ or writs of injunction or other process, mandatory or otherwise, restraining such carrier and any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof from further violation of such provision of this part or of such rule, regulation, requirement, order, term, or condition and enjoining obedience thereto.

"(c) The Commission shall enter of record a written report of hearings conducted upon complaint, or upon its own initiative without complaint, stating its conclusions, decision, and order and, if reparation is awarded, the findings of fact upon which the award is made; and shall furnish a copy of such report to all parties of record. The Commission shall publish such reports in the form best adapted for public information and use, and such authorized publications shall, without further proof or authentication, be received as competent evidence of such reports in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"(d) The copies of schedules, and classifications and tariffs of rates, fares, and charges, and of all contracts, agreements, and arrangements of water carriers filed with the Commission as herein provided, and the statistics, tables, and figures contained in the annual or other reports of carriers made to the Commission as required, under the provisions of this part shall be preserved as public records in the custody of the secretary of the Commission, and shall be received as prima facie evidence of what they purport to be for the purpose of investigations by the Commission and in all judicial proceedings; and copies of and extracts from any of said schedules, classifications, tariffs, contracts, agreements, arrangements, or reports, made public records as aforesaid, certified by the secretary, under the Commission's seal, shall be received in evidence with like effect as the originals.

"UNLAWFUL ACTS AND PENALTIES

"SEC. 317. (a) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates any provision of this part, or any rule, regulation, requirement, or order thereunder, or any term or condition of any certificate or permit, for which no penalty is otherwise provided, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district in which such offense was in whole or in part committed shall be subject for each offense to a fine not exceeding $500. Each day of such violation shall constitute a separate offense.

"(b) Any water carrier or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof, who shall knowingly and willfully offer, grant, or give, or cause to be offered, granted, or given any rebate, deferred rebate, or other concession, in violation of the provisions of this part, or who, by any device or means, shall knowingly and willfuly assist, or shall willingly suffer or permit, any person to obtain transportation subject to this part at less than the rates, fares, or charges lawfully in effect, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was wholly or in part committed shall be subject for each offense to a fine of not more than $5,000.

"(c) Any person who shall knowingly and willfully solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, deferred rebate, or other concession in violation of the provisions of this part, or who shall by any device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of any water carrier or his or its officer, agent, employee, or representative, knowingly and willfully obtain transportation subject to this part at less than the rates, fares, or charges lawfully in effect, or shall knowingly and willfully, directly or indirectly, by false claim, false billing, false representation, or other device or means, obtain or attempt to obtain any allowance, refund, or repayment in connection with or growing out of such transportation, whether with or without the consent or connivance of such carrier or his or its officer, agent, employee, or representative, whereby the compensation of such carrier for such transportation or service, either before or after payment, shall be less than the rates, fares, or charges lawfully in effect, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was in whole or in part committed, be subject for each offense to a fine of not more than $5,000.

"(d) Any water carrier or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof, who shall willfully fail or refuse to make a report to the Commission as required by this part, or to keep accounts, records, and memoranda in the form and manner prescribed or approved by the Commission, or shall knowingly and willfully falsify, destroy, mutilate, or alter any such report, account, record, or memorandum, or shall knowingly and willfully file any false report, account, record, or memorandum, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was in whole or in part committed, be subject for each offense to a fine of not more than $5,000.

"(e) Any special agent or examiner of the Commission who knowingly and willfully divulges any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of the examination of the accounts, records, and memoranda of any water carrier, made under authority of this part, except as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court of competent jurisdiction or judge thereof, shall be subject, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years, or both.

"(f) It shall be unlawful for any common carrier by water, or any officer, receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or employee of such carrier, or for any other person authorized by such carrier or person to receive information, knowingly and willfully to disclose to or permit to be acquired by any person other than the shipper or consignee, without the consent of such shipper or consignee, any information concerning the nature, kind, quantity, destination, consignee, or routing of any property tendered or delivered to such carrier for transportation subject to this part, which information may be used to the detriment or prejudice of such shipper or consignee, or which may improperly disclose his business transactions to a competitor; and it shall also be unlawful for any person to solicit or knowingly and willfully receive any such information which may be so used. Any person violating any provisions of this subsection shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was in whole or in part committed shall be subject to a fine of not more than $2,000. Nothing in this part shall be construed to prevent the giving of such information in response to any legal process issued under the authority of any court, or to any officer or agent of the Government of the United States or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, in the exercise of his powers, or to any officer or other duly authorized person seeking such information for the prosecution of persons charged with or suspected of crimes, or to another carrier, or its duly authorized agent, for the purpose of adjusting mutual traffic accounts in the ordinary course of business of such carriers.

"COLLECTION OF RATES AND CHARGES

"SEC. 318. No common carrier by water shall deliver or relinquish possession at destination of any freight transported by it until all tariff rates and charges thereon have been paid, except under such rules and regulations as the Commission may from time to time prescribe to govern the settlement of all such rates and charges and to prevent unjust discrimination or undue preference or prejudice: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not be construed to prohibit any such carrier from extending credit in connection with rates and charges on freight transported for the United States, for any department, bureau, or agency thereof, or for any State or Territory or political subdivision thereof, or for the District of Columbia. Where such carrier is instructed by a shipper or consignor to deliver property transported by such carrier to a consignee other than the shipper or consignor, such consignee shall not be legally liable for transportation charges in respect of the transportation of such property (beyond those billed against him at the time of delivery for which he is otherwise liable) which may be found to be due after the property has been delivered to him, if the consignee (1) is an agent only and had no beneficial title in the property, and (2) prior to delivery of the property has notified the delivering carrier in writing of the fact of such agency and absence of beneficial title, and, in the case of a shipment reconsigned or diverted to a point other than that specified in the original bill of lading, has notified the delivering carrier in writing of the name and address of the beneficial owner of the property. In such cases the shipper or consignor or in the case of a shipment so reconsigned or diverted, the beneficial owner shall be liable for such additional charges irrespective of any provisions to the contrary in the bill of lading or in the contract under which the shipment was made or handled. If the consignee has given to the carrier erroneous information as to who is the beneficial owner, such consignee shall himself be liable for such additional charges, notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph. On shipments reconsigned or diverted by an agent who has furnished the carrier with a notice of agency and the proper name and address of the beneficial owner, and where such shipments are refused or abandoned at ultimate destination, the said beneficial owner shall be liable for all legally applicable charges in connection therewith.

"EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 319. The Commission is authorized to employ such experts, assistants, special agents, examiners, attorneys, and other employees as in its judgment may be necessary or advisable for the convenience of the public and for the efficient administration of this part.

"REPEALS; TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES, RECORDS, PROPERTY, AND APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 320. (a) The following acts are hereby repealed insofar as they provide for the regulation of transportation in interstate or foreign commerce (as defined in this part) and for the regulation of persons to the extent that they are engaged in such transportation: The Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933; the Shipping Act, 1916; the Merchant Marine Act, 1920; and the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (except sec. 205 thereof).

"(b) Such officers and employees of the United States Maritime Commission as the President shall determine to have been employed in the administration of the provisions of law repealed by subsection (a), and whose retention by the United States Maritime Commission is not necessary, in the opinion of the President, for the performance of other duties, are transferred to the Interstate Commerce Commission upon such date or dates as the President shall specify by Executive order. Such transfer of such personnel shall be without reduction in classification or compensation, except that this requirement shall not operate after the end of the fiscal year during which such transfer is made to prevent the adjustment of classification or compensation to conform to the duties to which such transferred personnel may be assigned.

"(c) All files, reports, records, tariff schedules, and all property (including office furniture and equipment), contracts, agreements, documents, or papers kept or used by, made to, or filed with the United States Maritime Commission under or in the administration of any provision of law repealed by this part, are hereby transferred to the jurisdiction and control of the Commission, and may be used for such purposes as the Commission may deem necessary in the administration of this part.

"(d) All appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the United States Maritime Commission in the administration of any provision of law repealed by this part shall be available for expenditure by the Commission for any objects of expenditure authorized by this part, in the discretion of the Commission, without regard to the requirement of apportionment under the Anti-Deficiency Act of February 27, 1906.

"EXISTING ORDERS, RULES, TARIFFS, ETC.; PENDING MATTERS

"SEC. 321. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, tariffs (including rates, fares, charges, classifications, rules, and regulations relating thereto), contracts, or agreements, to the extent that they were issued, authorized, approved, entered into, or filed under any provision of law repealed by this part, and are still in effect, shall continue in effect as though issued, authorized, or approved by the Commission under this part, or entered into or filed under this part, until suspended, modified, set aside, or rescinded either by the Commission or otherwise in accordance with the provisions of this part.

"(b) Any proceeding, hearing, or investigation commenced or pending before the United States Maritime Commission at the time this section takes effect, to the extent that it relates to the administration of any provision of law repealed by this part, shall be continued or otherwise acted upon by the Commission as though such proceeding, hearing, or investigation had been instituted under the provisions of this part.

"(c) Any judicial proceeding arising under any provision of law repealed by the provisions of this part shall be continued, heard, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this part had not been enacted; except that in the case of any such proceeding to which the United States Maritime Commission is a party, the court, upon motion or supplemental petition, may direct that the Commission be substituted for the United States Maritime Commission as a party to the proceeding or made an additional party thereto.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 322. If any provision of this part or the application thereof to any person, or commerce, or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the part and the application of such provision to other persons, or commerce, or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

TIME EFFECTIVE

SEC. 202. Part III of the Interstate Commerce Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this act, except that sections 304 (c), 305 to 308, inclusive, 309 (a) and (f), 313 to 318, inclusive, 320, and 321 shall take effect on the 1st day of January 1940: Provided, however, That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, if found by it necessary or desirable in the public interest, by general or special order postpone the taking effect of any of the provisions above enumerated to such time, but not beyond the 1st day of July 1941, as the Commission shall prescribe.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: Page 260, line 14, after the period, insert: "In order that the public at large may enjoy the benefit and economy afforded by each type of transportation, the Commission shall permit each type of carrier or carriers to reduce rates so long as such rates maintain a compensatory return to the carrier or carriers, after taking into consideration the overhead and all other elements entering into the cost to the carrier or carriers for the service rendered."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment must be perfectly plain to all those who have heard it read by the Clerk. We have all been concerned as to the ultimate effect of this legislation if it is passed, on the rates to be paid by the public in one form of transportation or another, especially in the rates paid by the public for water transportation. It has been hinted, and that is a mild expression, from many sources, that the enactment of title II, part 3, which places all water-borne commerce under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission will result in raising the water-borne rates. It has been hinted, and that also is a very mild expression, that there are certain elements in transportation who hope that result will be achieved. I am not competent to read the future with sufficient accuracy to form on this occasion a definite and final conclusion on that point, but that suspicion or dread exists cannot be denied. My amendment seeks to place all three methods of transportation on the same basis with respect to minimum rates. I shall read it again:

In order that the public at large may enjoy the benefit and economy afforded by each type of transportation, the Commission shall permit each type of carrier or carriers to reduce rates so long as such rates maintain a compensatory return to the carrier or carriers, after taking into consideration the overhead and all other elements entering into the cost to the carrier or carriers for the service rendered.

It is proposed to add that sentence at the end of paragraph (f) of line 14, page 260, and it is to be noted that paragraph (f) is the mandatory provision of this law which charges the Commission in making its rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices to give due consideration, among other factors, to the effect of rates upon the movement of traffic, and so forth. This amendment, which I presume to offer to be added to paragraph (f), adds this direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to the enforcement of its regulations.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Would the effect of the gentleman's amendment be that a railroad could establish its own rates, so long as it makes a profit?

Mr. WADSWORTH. So long as the rate is compensatory, after taking into consideration overhead and all the other elements entering into cost to the railroad.

Mr. McCORMACK. Under the present law does not the Commission establish a rate which has regard for the ability of other railroads, or the financial capacity of other railroads? I am just inquiring. My main inquiry is whether or not the effect of the gentleman's amendment would be to permit a railroad itself or a water-transportation line to establish its own rates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It applies to all three.

Mr. McCORMACK. But they could establish their own rates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Provided they were compensatory.

Mr. McCORMACK. What does the gentleman mean by "compensatory," if I might ask?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That the carrier does not perform that service at a loss.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, each individual carrier, so long as it does not carry the service at a loss, could establish its own rates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This amendment in effect will assure to the shipping public whatever advantage accrues from cheap transportation. If it can be found that a certain carrier or a class of carriers can perform the service more cheaply than heretofore, and can show that it can do it without loss, and that the rate proposed is compensatory, then the Commission shall allow them to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended 5 minutes. I think the gentleman is discussing a very important amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At the same time, by requiring that the rate be compensatory, we eliminate what we have all tried to eliminate in the past—outright cutthroat competition; deliberate cutthroat competition.

Mr. SIROVICH. Where all sides lose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Where all sides lose.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HALLECK. Did I understand the gentleman to say that his idea would be to fix rates at such a point as that the carrier would not carry the traffic at a loss?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He shall be adequately compensated for doing so.

Mr. HALLECK. May that not go so far as to include or mean that operation which we refer to as out-of-pocket costs?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Include it?

Mr. HALLECK. In other words, that freight in certain instances might be moved at a price just sufficiently high to pay the out-of-pocket cost involved?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under this amendment a carrier may not reduce a rate to such an extent that it is no longer compensatory; but if he does reduce it, and can show that it is compensatory, the public is entitled to the benefit of that reduction.

Mr. HALLECK. My question is prompted by my understanding that the term "compensatory" is frequently interpreted to mean the out-of-pocket costs, and of course if the rate reflected the out-of-pocket cost, then the operation would not be at a loss, but the railroads have been continuously attacked by their competitors because they have sought, on occasion, to carry freight at the out-of-pocket cost, and it is pointed out in Mr. Secretary Wallace's letter that that is unfair competitive practice, and is destructive of the competitors of the railroads; that they should not be permitted to carry freight at that low rate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, that under this amendment the compensatory return is estimated after taking into consideration overhead and all other elements. It is not merely out-of-pocket cost. It is the general cost.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Would not your amendment have the effect of completely repealing the long-and-short-haul clause provision of section 4?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I think it would not, because that is a specific statutory prohibition existing in the law, which the Commission cannot ignore.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. But if your amendment is agreed to at this time and is in conflict with the long-and-short-haul provision, then certainly it takes precedence over that, and would have the effect of outright repeal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot reach any such conclusion.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That is the conclusion that I reach.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The long-and-short-haul clause stands in the law today. It is specific and applies to a certain type of commerce, and unless you amend that basic law, I do not think it can be touched by the Commission.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. But if we say to the railroads that "as long as your rates are compensatory you can reduce them to suit yourselves," they certainly could disregard the long-and-short-haul clause.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot agree with the gentleman on that—not with that law still in existence.

Mr. THOMASON. What effect will the gentleman's amendment have upon the indefensible differentials that now exist? Would it have any bearing on the differential in rates that are now set up?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The rest of paragraph (f) treats with that.

Mr. THOMASON. It would do away with the differential rate situation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is up to the Commission to decide whether there is a differential.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Is the gentleman's amendment not the same as the one that was adopted in the Senate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. And would not the adoption of this amendment obviate any chance of the elimination of that provision in conference?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I should say to the Members of the Committee that this amendment was introduced and adopted on the floor of the Senate under the name of Senator MILLER and is contained in the Senate bill. If it is restored in the House bill, then, at least, if this bill should pass, this particular matter would not be in conference.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. Referring to the question asked by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], I am unable to see, if the measure is altered by the adoption of this amendment, how the question is merely one of whether the rate is compensatory or not, how it can be reconciled with the long-and-short-haul clause that is already in the law. How would you operate under it and still have due regard for the long-and-short-haul clause? How would that work? How could it possibly operate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not a member of the legal profession. I would have a good deal of difficulty in expressing a lawyer's opinion upon that; but I very sincerely believe that the long-and-short-haul clause is established in the law; it is specific; and I do not believe a rule of rate making, taken of and by itself, could have the effect of repealing it.

Mr. PATRICK. Suppose it comes down to a matter of bookkeeping—and that is what will be the case in the last analysis—how would you operate in case of conflict between the provisions of the long-and-short-haul clause and the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. This is going to cure the very evil of the long-and-short-haul provision, is it not?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. By wiping it out.

Mr. RANKIN. By wiping out the discriminations and permitting a carrier to base his rates on cost of transportation. So, instead of injuring it, the amendment would help it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 additional minutes. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the gentleman has, I am sure, heard the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission say how difficult it is to determine whether any given rate is compensatory or not. It is difficult if not impossible for the Commission to determine whether a specific rate for the shipment of a carload of wheat, for example, from one point to another is compensatory or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I remember the difficulty expressed by the representatives of the Commission.

Mr. MAPES. Does not the gentleman think that the adoption of his amendment would hamstring the Commission and make it almost impossible for it to function efficiently? This amendment applies not only to rates on water but to rates of motor carriers and railroads as well. Does not the gentleman think it would unduly hamper the work of the Commission if this amendment were adopted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not; and I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that the Commission has already embarked upon this effort and uses its estimates in the regulation of minimum rates.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Does not the Commission frankly say that it cannot find the compensatory rate for any given shipment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have heard witnesses from the Commission state that it was exceedingly difficult to find the exact cost of transportation on a certain article, especially when that article may be mingled with other articles in the same car. I have heard that enlarged upon and emphasized; but is it not a fact that the Commission is required, either directly or indirectly, to endeavor to ascertain the compensatory rate? The Commission is authorized to fix minimum rates already in the motor-vehicle field.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. DARDEN. Is it not true that minimum rate in the case of carriers is limited by the carrier's ability to show that it covers its cost?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. DARDEN. The Interstate Commerce Commission does not take the initiative.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it does not.

Mr. DARDEN. It is initiated by the carrier; the carrier starts it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The carrier must demonstrate that his rate is compensatory, including overhead.

Mr. DARDEN. And having done that, he is entitled to set the minimum rate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the public is entitled to have the advantage. [Applause.]

Mr. DARDEN. Exactly.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. If the formula provided for in the gentleman's amendment can be put into effect and is put into effect, in 99 out of 100 cases it will put the railroads out of business so far as competition with waterways and trucks is concerned, will it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no such fear.

Mr. MICHENER. If the railroads are not reorganized, they will have to be compensated for their overhead, including equipment, fixed charges, and all of those things, and your water carriers and trucks have subsidies in the form of Government aid in harbors and highways facilities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman is embarking on another argument.

Mr. MICHENER. It is all germane to this whole thing, so far as the controversy is concerned. Take away from the water carriers its subsidies, take away from the truck lines their subsidized highways, and then you would be on a fair basis. But if the railroad is compelled to be fully compensated for all costs and the truck has no such overhead because of the subsidies, how can the railroads compete? The compensation provided for in the amendment will eliminate the railroads as competitors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, the gentleman from Michigan must remember that this amendment which I propose exerts no compulsion on the railroad nor any compulsion on any carrier.

Mr. MICHENER. It is the formula.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, during the consideration of this bill the subcommittee seriously considered whether or not we should not adopt an amendment equivalent to this. We desired that some fixed standard be established at which the low-cost carrier would not be encroached upon by the higher-cost carrier in fixing a rate. We tried our hand at drawing an amendment, particularly the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] and I. After spending a couple of days with the problem we concluded it was better to leave the provisions in the bill as they are than to experiment. This committee did not expect to inject into this question repeal of the fourth section. The adoption of this amendment throws doubt upon the question whether or not it would not in effect amount to repeal of the fourth section.

This amendment provides that the carrier can initiate its rate if it will maintain a compensatory return. There is one elementary feature of rate making that must not be lost sight of, and that is that a transportation company fixes its rates or charges very much the same as a merchant does for his merchandise. For instance, a groceryman may sell a $5 sack of sugar at a profit of 25 cents. His overhead charge may be 30 percent, yet he handles sugar without a loss. If he is a general merchant, he may sell a hat at a profit of 50 percent of the cost. That is a rule of rate making the world over. Rates are not uniform according to value, weight, or space occupied.

Bear in mind that the carrier hauls much at a very small profit and more at a good profit. There is much difficulty in fixing an arbitrary rule that will work out satisfactorily to the different types of haulage. If you consider this as an out-of-pocket cost, then it is a destructive rate. It is the means by which railroads have driven boats off the rivers in times gone by. It is not legitimate competition if you permit one carrier to carry it without profit in order to prevent the other fellow from making something out of carrying it.

If this question relates purely to the cost of carrying a specific item, then it does not bear an average return which is necessary to the carrier. If you figure the carrier's full expense, including overhead, it is an entirely different matter from simply providing the cost to the carrier for carrying a specific item.

The gentleman who just spoke said that the burden would be on the Commission in determining the question to find out what it cost the carrier for a specific item. That is the old destructive method of figuring costs that has been used to put a competitor out of business.

The only way out for the carrier on this basis is to have unduly high rates in noncompetitive territory. If we permit a carrier to use this destructive rate with large volume cheap commerce, then it means in noncompetitive territory you have an unduly high rate. That is one of the great troubles in this country at the present time.

On the other hand, suppose this means the average cost of all expenses to the carrier. The language says, "so long as such rates maintain a compensatory return to the carrier or carriers after taking into consideration overhead and all other elements entering into the cost to the carrier or carriers for the service rendered." For what service? For the service of that specific article, and that tends to put it on the destructive out-of-pocket cost basis. If it applies to the whole expense of operating the water or rail carrier, then that involves going up to the average of all rates, so that each rate shall carry its proportion of the whole cost to the carrier. In that event the objection to it, a very serious one, is the administrative difficulty. If that is the meaning of this language, the Commission is to take into consideraton the full cost of carriage. Every little rate case involving a 10-cent reduction in rate would cast upon the Commission the burden of determining the full cost of carriage on an average basis, including the high-cost freight and the low-cost traffic.

That is the reason why this amendment is objectionable from an administrative standpoint and from the standpoint of the carrier or shipper, because when the shipper goes to prove his case he will have this burden of providing the cost of carriage of that specific article or of the average cost of the carrier's whole business.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The effect of this amendment would be to permit water carriers to charge rates which would preserve for the benefit of the public and the shipper the inherent advantage of water transportation. It would prohibit the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the determination of water rates, from using the cost of transportation by rail as a yardstick. As a friend of water transportation and development of inland waterways I have not shared with many other friends of water transportation the view that water transportation should not be subject to any regulation. I have taken the position that inasmuch as other forms of transportation are regulated, there is no valid or logical reason why water transportation should not be regulated, provided the regulation of water transportation is fair regulation. The fear of the friends of water transportation is that if the Interstate Commerce Commission is given the power to regulate water-transportation rates, that Commission will regulate water rates on the basis of the cost of rail transportation and thus in effect destroy water transportation.

The advocates and proponents of the bill now under consideration have repeatedly stated that it is not their intention that this legislation shall produce such a result. On the contrary they have expressed their assurance that they desire this bill to bring about only fair regulation of water carriers, and that the regulation which this bill will authorize will result in the establishment of water rates which will be based on the cost of water transportation. They state that this assurance is borne out in section 1 of the act which expresses the policy of the act under the caption "National transportation policy." This section provides, on page 198 of the bill, as follows:

> It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each.

And further—

> To encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices * * * all to the end of developing, coordinating, and preserving a national transportation system by water, highway, and rail, etc., to meet the needs of the commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of national defense.

The amendment now proposed merely carries out the declaration of policy contained in the bill at its very outset. No advocate of this bill can logically object to this amendment for the simple reason that this amendment merely constitutes a specific, realistic, and practical legislative application of the policy which is declared at the outset of the bill to be the binding principle of the legislation.

This amendment merely carries out and makes effective the declared policy of the bill. As one who believes in fair regulation of water carriers, I shall support this legislation if this amendment is made a part of this bill because this amendment will insure fair regulation of water carriers. I shall not support the legislation if this amendment or a similar amendment is not made a part of the bill, because in that event, in my opinion, there will not be definite and certain assurance in the bill that the regulation of water carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission will be such as to preserve to the public and to the shipper inherent advantages of water transportation in accordance with the declared policy of the act. The amendment should be adopted.

Transportation is a matter of the highest public concern, and its effect is so far-reaching that it touches economically the welfare of every section of the country and of every citizen of the country. The railroads have been a tremendous factor in the upbuilding of our Nation. The truck and the bus have added greatly to the transportation facilities both as to passenger and freight traffic. The airplane in a relatively short time has attained an important position. River development has resulted in a system of inland waterways upon which a large volume of traffic has been moved.

While transportation is important to all parts of the Nation it can be fairly said that it is of utmost importance to the great middle western section of the United States because that section, as a producer of raw materials, is dependent upon transportation to carry its products to the consumer. As a processor of these raw materials the Middle West must likewise rely upon transportation to convey the finished product to the great centers of population where it is consumed or used.

The railroads have been one of the chief factors in the settlement and expansion of the Middle West. The State of Nebraska, of which I am a native and one of whose districts I have the honor to represent in the Congress, has relied upon railroads for its settlement and for its development as have all other sections in the Missouri Valley. That territory must continue to rely upon the railroads in order that it may carry on its agricultural and commercial activities. It cannot be fairly said that the Nation and the people stand on one side and the railroads stand on the other. The railroads are definitely a part of the Nation. Railroad employees and their families constitute a very substantial proportion of the citizenship of the United States, and are as deeply interested in its welfare and prosperity as any other group of citizens within its borders. The enormous amount of money expended by the railroads in salaries and wages, and in the purchases of materials and supplies, is an important addition to our national buying power.

The bill before the House today will have the effect, among other things, of placing the regulation of rates for transportation by water carriers in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Water transportation is of utmost interest to the Nation and of particular importance to the Middle West. The opening of the Panama Canal had the effect of diverting transcontinental rail traffic to the cheaper coast and Canal-water route. Population decreased in the Middle West as it increased along the developed waterways. Industries moved away. Representation of the Midwest in the Congress of the United States was reduced. The lack of the advantage of water transportation placed the Midwest at the mercy of these sections which enjoyed that advantage. Realizing this situation the Congress of the United States some years ago made provision by appropriation for the development of the inland waterways system, including development of the Missouri River. This development has taken place under the competent supervision of the Army engineers. The city of Omaha, Nebr., which is my home, and which is located in the district which I have the honor to represent, is intensely interested in the development of waterways. That city, like the other middle western cities, has felt the adverse effects of the lack of water transportation facilities, and has suffered as a result of the advantage which other communities enjoyed because of their location at places where they might enjoy and have the advantage of water transportation and water rates. Throughout my service in the Congress I have devoted my energies each year to assisting in the securing of adequate appropriations for the carrying on of the development of the Missouri River in order that Omaha and Nebraska and the Middle West might have the advantage of water transportation at the earliest possible moment. This year I appeared before the Appropriations Committee and, together with other witnesses, urged adequate appropriations to complete the development of the Missouri River for transportation purposes from Kansas City to Sioux City. The following figures indicate the total cost of completion of the Missouri River work from Kansas City to Sioux City, the estimated expenditures to date, the percentage of completion and the additional allotment required for the present fiscal year, in order that navigation may be certified.

Missouri River	Estimated total cost of completion	Estimated expenditures (costs) to date	Appropriation percent complete	Additional allotment required (fiscal year 1940) that navigation may be certified
Kansas City district, Kansas City to mouth	$80,000,000	$69,125,000	87	$3,000,000
Kansas City to Sioux City:
Kansas City district, Kansas City to Rulo	27,316,000	23,000,000	82	1,000,000
Omaha district, Rulo to Omaha	33,184,000	26,240,000	79	1,200,000
Omaha to Sioux City	31,500,000	15,704,000	50	5,000,000
Subtotal, Rulo to Sioux City	64,684,000	41,944,000	65	6,200,000
Total, Kansas City to Sioux City	92,000,000	64,944,000	70	7,200,000
Grand total, Sioux City to mouth	172,000,000	133,529,000	77	10,200,000

Appropriations have been allotted to this work which will enable the development to be carried on satisfactorily.

The Missouri River has been developed and is already open for barge transportation as far north as Omaha. Facilities have been set up in Omaha for terminal purposes. These facilities will be expanded as river development goes on to completion and as the river traffic increases in extent.

My position, as often stated, with respect to water transportation has been that I am heartily in favor of the development of the inland waterways of this country and that I consider it in the public interest that these waterways be made available in a practical way for transportation purposes. My attitude in this direction is well indicated by the activities above cited in connection with appropriations for Missouri River development.

It is contended in some quarters that the development of the rivers is antagonistic to the interests of the rail carriers. In this I cannot agree. In my opinion, anything which goes to develop a territory economically has the effect of adding a benefit to every economic interest in that territory. The lack of water transportation has reduced population in the Middle West and has caused the loss of industries in that section. This has not benefited the railroads. On the contrary, it has definitely injured them. A reversal of that situation by the development of water transportation which would result in an increase in population and a return of industries could not do otherwise than benefit the rail carriers who would enjoy a larger volume of business as a result thereof. So, to my mind, there is nothing inconsistent in the sponsorship of water transportation and in an effort to work justice to the railroads. Experience in other sections where water transportation exists demonstrates that there is no real reason why water-transportation and rail-transportation facilities cannot be coordinated to the mutual benefit of both forms of transportation.

The railroads of the United States have been under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission since the establishment of that body. The bill under consideration would place water carriers under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Much has been said to the effect that the imposition of this regulation upon water carriers will completely destroy the inland-waterways system in this country. Certainly no friend of water transportation would favor such a thing. However, I do not share that view. I have stated repeatedly that I see no sound objection to fair regulation of water carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a matter of common knowledge that prior to the days when the railroads were regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission evil practices obtained in the way of rebates and secret agreements by which the small shipper was imposed upon and often driven out of business. The public recognizes that regulation of railroad rates in the interest of the public is sound regulation. I have never been able to agree that fair regulation of water rates is unsound. However, I have taken the position and continue to do so that I will favor no form of regulation of water transportation which would have the effect of permitting the Interstate Commerce Commission, the regulatory body, to fix water rates upon the basis of the cost of rail transportation. In other words, I have always stated that I would oppose any form of regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of water carriers which would not allow the shipper to have the full benefit of the savings and economies inherent in water transportation.

My attitude on the present bill, S. 2009, is that so far as concerns the provisions which would allow regulation of water rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission, I am not opposed to such provisions provided the bill carries in it a specific provision safeguarding shippers on water routes against the hazard of the imposition of rail rates for water transportation, or against the authorization of rates in which the natural and inherent savings of water transportation are not preserved for the benefit of the individual shipper.

Objection has been made through the course of development of the Missouri River that the Government money should not have been expended for this purpose. However, today we are concerned with a situation in which these expenditures have already been made and in which millions of dollars have been spent for the development of the Missouri River as a transportation facility. Certainly it would be unwise to provide by legislation that rates might be imposed on water transportation upon a basis which would make these rates so high as to destroy any possibility of transportation on the river and thus in practice waste the investment which has been made in the development of the river to the present point.

As passed by the Senate, S. 2009 contained a sentence which was inserted as an amendment to section 30 of the Senate bill. That amendment, known as the Miller amendment, had the effect of protecting the public against the possibility of the use by the Interstate Commerce Commission of rail transportation costs as a basis for the fixing of rates for water carriers in the event that the Congress enacts this legislation placing the regulation of water carriers under the Interstate Commerce Commission. That sentence does not appear in S. 2009 as reported favorably by the House Interstate Commerce Committee and as now before us. The amendment reads as follows:

> In order that the public at large may enjoy the benefit and economy afforded by each type of transportation, the Commission shall permit each type of carrier of materials to reduce rates so long as such rates maintain a compensatory return to the carrier or carriers after taking into consideration overhead and all other elements entering into the cost to the carrier or carriers for the services rendered.

I have announced my intention of supporting S. 2009 provided the bill in its final form safeguards the interest of the shippers and makes possible the preservation of the right of the shippers to enjoy the savings and economies which are inherent in water transportation. I have taken the position that while I favor regulation of water carriers I do not favor any system of regulation which will have the effect in practice of making possible the use of rail-transportation costs as a basis for water-transportation charges. I am opposed to legislation which will authorize the fixing of water-transportation charges which are so high as to have the effect of destroying water transportation.

I shall support S. 2009 in its final form if it contains the sentence above quoted or any other similar provision which will have the same effect as the provision in the bill passed by the Senate. I shall vote against S. 2009 if it does not contain such a sentence.

Members of the committee reporting legislation have preference over the other Members in securing recognition for the purpose of proposing amendments. It was my intention to propose the foregoing amendment. However, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, has now proposed the amendment and I heartily favor the adoption of the Wadsworth amendment.

If this amendment is agreed to it will bring the bill in line with the bill as it passed the Senate so that water carriers may be allowed to base their rates upon the cost of water transportation and not be required to base their rates upon the cost of rail transportation or any other form of transportation whose costs are higher than the cost of water transportation. If this amendment or a similar amendment is agreed to, I shall support the measure, otherwise I shall not. It is to be hoped that this bill will not be passed in such form as to make possible the destruction of water transportation, but on the contrary that it will be so passed as to provide for fair regulation of water transportation.

This amendment will have the effect of insuring equitable regulation and I trust that it will be incorporated in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to oppose the esteemed gentleman from New York in his amendment to this section of the bill, but I should like to call your attention to a few things that I believe some of you do not recognize.

The making of rates by any commission on transportation is one of the most difficult and one of the most complex tasks that can possibly be conceived of. We in our committee have tried to devise some better kind of formula for rate making, but have utterly failed. We have had the best possible advice in the world and we find that it can hardly be done.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that the compensatory cost of transportation by rail or by any other means, as proposed to be introduced by the gentleman from New York as a rule for rate making, is bound up also in the loading, the unloading, the switching, and many other costs in connection with transportation. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], who believes that this amendment would repeal in effect the provisions of the fourth section. I believe so because I know, as he knows, that switching charges and loading and unloading charges are a very large part of the cost of transportation, and that it actually costs less per mile if you have a long-line haul of freight than if you have short distances over which to transport the merchandise.

I believe also that the gentlemen here engaged in protecting water transportation would find this to be a very difficult rule. I do not share the gentlemen's fear that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be prejudiced against water or that it will be prejudiced in favor of the rails. That argument was advanced several years ago in connection with putting the motortruck rates under the Interstate Commerce Act, and that fear has been since found to be entirely unfounded. The Interstate Commerce Commission is acting in the interest of the people of the United States, and of the people of the United States as a whole, and not in the interest of any particular group or section. I believe you will find that while its decisions are necessarily very difficult to make, it has done its utmost to do a good job for all the people.

In further connection with these so-called compensatory rates, would you want to have that clause apply to the transportation of silk from Seattle to Passaic, N. J., or to some railroad station in the South? If you base the rates solely on the cost of that transportation, you will find that the rates on silk will be very materially reduced. Rates are made not only in accordance with the cost of the service but may take into consideration the value and perhaps seasonal character of the product moved in addition to the cost of the service.

A compensatory rate as proposed depends upon whether or not there can be a loaded back-haul of the vehicle. It depends upon the volume of traffic over the route, the number of barges per towboat, or the number of cars per train that are to be moved in the operation being examined. It depends upon the section of the United States through which the traffic moves. It costs more to send trucks or trains over mountains than it does on the open plains. It depends upon how. It depends upon the season of the year. The compensatory cost is so absolutely undeterminable that the Commission could not possibly determine what the term means in figures in any given case.

I believe further that if this rule is applied it will give just cause on the part of all transportation agencies that are now showing a deficit to ask for an increase in rates. I, therefore, believe that this amendment is very unwise and ask that it be voted down. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CULKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I believe each Member who speaks on this amendment should be given 5 minutes. I have no objection otherwise.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request to 40 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, this matter is of such importance that if we are going to be given only 2 or 3 minutes apiece it will hardly be worth while.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have counted 20 Members on their feet.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I again modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] to have 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour. Is there objection?

Mr. CULKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how many Members desire to speak? Does the Chair have a record of that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has listed the following Members, although I do not know whether anyone is on this list who does not want to speak: Mr. SOUTH, Mr. DIRKSEN, Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. CULKIN, Mr. MAPES, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, Mr. WARREN, Mr. EBERHARTER, Mr. KLEBERG, Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. THORKELSON, Mr. RANKIN, Mr. BULWINKLE, and Mr. MURDOCK of Utah.

Mr. CULKIN. How many Members is that, if I may inquire, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirteen.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And Mr. PATRICK.

The CHAIRMAN. That makes 14.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, does this request apply to the amendment and amendments to this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The request applies to the pending amendment and amendments to the amendment.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] does not want time, the Chair is advised.

Mr. CULKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, I suggest that the gentleman modify his request and ask for an hour and 10 minutes of debate.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I again modify my request and ask that debate be limited to an hour and 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California modifies his request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour and 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, from the day that debate started upon this measure, it has been charged, and successfully so, that this is a railroad bill, favored by the railroad executives, aided and abetted by a powerful lobby to force through the Congress of the United States a measure of favoritism to a small minority group.

It has been charged, and successfully so, that not in one line or sentence or paragraph of this bill has there been anything for the protection of the American people. In every section of it they have been completely ignored. With the exception of certain amendments forced into this bill yesterday by a determined group of Members on both sides of this House, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is the first thing that has been proposed in behalf of the American people. They are seeking here to build up a transportation monopoly in this country to raise the carrying charges throughout the country at the expense of the people.

This amendment offered by the gentleman from New York was passed unanimously by the Senate of the United States. It was accepted by the author of the Senate bill, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I think all you have to do is to ask any Member of the Senate, regardless of how he stood on this measure, and he will tell you that unless this amendment that is now proposed had been accepted this bill would not have stood a Chinaman's chance in that body.

The Senate author of the bill is the foremost opponent in the United States of the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause. They have tried to inject here, and the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] on the minority side has tried to inject, the proposition that the language might have the effect of repealing that clause.

Mr. LEAVY and Mr. MURDOCK of Utah rose.

Mr. WARREN. I yield first to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman has in part answered the question I had in mind. The amendment itself seems to me to be sound and to lay down a formula or a rule, but in the gentleman's judgment could it possibly change the substantive law that now is written into our act?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] that the long-and-short-haul provisions are a part of the substantive law of the land, and this is merely a further injunction upon the rate-making structure.

Mr. LEAVY. That is the conclusion I reached.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. If this bill passes, it will have just as much dignity, be just as solemn and just as much a part of the law as the present law. I want to go along with this bill and I want to go along with this amendment, and if the amendment and the bill that is now before us has nothing to do with the long-and-short-haul clause, then why should the gentleman from North Carolina or anyone else object to a simple amendment that would contain the provision that nothing in this paragraph, including the Wadsworth amendment, shall be construed in any way to affect the long-and-short-haul clause? If that simple, clarifying amendment goes into the bill, then I believe none of the Members from my section of the country who are opposed to the repeal of the fourth section would have any objection to this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman has misunderstood me. I have not objected to that. This is the first time I have heard it presented. I am not in charge, however, of the amendment and that must be determined by those in charge.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Would the gentleman have any objection to it?

Mr. WARREN. As has been stated, if the declaration of policy is to mean anything, what possible objection can there be to writing this amendment into the law? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOXEY). The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK], a member of the committee, is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Wadsworth amendment.

Let us get back to the amendment just a second and consider the very thing that was uppermost in the gentleman's mind as he discussed the amendment. Remember that he is the author of the amendment and he laid special emphasis on this part of it, "taking into consideration overhead and all other elements entering into the cost to the carrier or carriers of the services rendered."

No law, no matter how idealistically it may be drafted, and no law, no matter what purpose we may have in mind in getting it passed, is any better than its application. No law is any better than what it can or will do when applied. Many a law has been passed, the purpose of which was splendid, but it could not do what was intended or what it purported to do and it failed because of its natural weakness.

This, in a very great measure, applies in this case. Let us see what will happen in the instance of this bill if some violator is hailed before the Commission and put to the test as to what he is charged with doing.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who offered the amendment, took that position, when questioned; and I think he is right about it, and it would not apply to a mere specific case standing alone. The gentleman from California [Mr. HALLECK] questioned him on that; and he said, No; it would not apply merely to a transaction or some point or area of trade alone when presented to a commission or a court, but that the whole matter would be taken into consideration. Let us see how that would work out. This is a plain and practical thing; this is not a miasmic or a hazy proposition. It is not hard to get at. Whenever you haul somebody in for a violation and get him on the carpet, what will he do? He will open up his whole book. He will do just exactly what the gentleman from New York says; he will manage so as to take into consideration the overhead and all other elements entering into the cost to the carrier or carriers for the service rendered, in the exact words of the amendment, and then the specific point of violation alone will not be in, but you will have to look at the whole matter, take the whole works, and carry the whole institutional activity of his company, and he will beat down the thing that you are trying to do; and all in the world he will have to do is to cite the words of this amendment, and you cannot get away from it. If we come up here and pass laws on the basis of what we wish, we will be demagogic, and the man who serves the district is not the man who does that, no matter how many letters he may receive from this or that group. The people want him to educate himself, they want him to know, and if he does not know and he follows along on the first wind that blows east or west on some popular action, they will be the first ones to pop his head off when the true situation is realized and when election day comes. So we have to get down to the sound bedrock and vote for things as they are, and not vote them as we wish they were. Therefore, when these things are all in and the facts are fully known, no matter how idealistic we may be nor how much like statesmen we think we stand, we have to get down to the facts. I am gaining more respect for the politician and less for the statesman the longer I am here. I think the politician is the man who delivers what the statesman promises. He does not live away above the clouds in an impractical land of imagination, and this sincere, slugging politican is the one who comes in and looks the facts in the face, and does the job as it is possible to do it, thus, as it ought to be done. I am against this amendment.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said about the plight in which the railroads now find themselves, and I concede that in many instances the railroads are in distress. The steel companies, the automobile companies, the building concerns, and industry generally, including agriculture, are in a condition not greatly different from that in which the railroads find themselves. In an effort to verify this fact or to convince myself that I was wrong, yesterday afternoon I picked up the Wall Street Journal of that date and the day before and read at random. I quote:

NORFOLK & WESTERN'S NET IN HALF TO COVER $5 DIVIDEND REQUIREMENT

PHILADELPHIA.—With the substantial increase in gross revenues in June to about $7,000,000 from $5,541,232 in the like month of last year, as indicated by car loadings, it is estimated that Norfolk & Western Railway for the first 6 months of 1939 will show a net income of approximately $5.50 a share on common stock against $2.88 in the like 1938 period.

So that railroad is not bankrupt as yet. Then I find this:

Northern Pacific's June gross likely about $5,376,000. Substantially higher levels of gross revenues reported by Northern Pacific Railway for May was maintained in June. Present estimates indicate tht gross last month approximated $5,376,000, a decrease of only $8,000 from the preceding month when a considerable bulge occurred, and an increase of $794,000, or 17 percent, from June 1938.

Turning now to the various roads, I find that many of them are on the increase, and listen to this from the Wall Street Journal——

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I have so little time that I ask the gentleman to permit me to continue.

Logically related to it is the present physical rehabilitation of the railroads. In the first 5 months of this year the gross earnings of the railroads increased by 9½ percent, whereas transportation expenses—the sheer cost of movement, like the water that goes through the mill to move the wheels—increased no more than 1 percent. Their expenditures of the period for maintenance of way and of equipment, on the other hand, increased in direct proportion to the gain in gross revenues. Adversity has again, as so often before, taught a new skill in the economy of movement effort and cost. In kind, though not in degree or width of opportunity, the railroads have entered upon the same phase of the recurring cycle as that which began in the days when the Union Pacific was described as a streak of rust.

In other words, the railroads have begun to make money just as we have contended they would if and when conditions got back to normal.

From the Wall Street Journal of March 2, 1939, I quote:

The rail net for 1939 may reach the highest level since 1930. The projection of January results indicate a surplus, after charges of at least $130,000,000.

Now, gentlemen, in all candor and all fairness, if you can forget what the railroad lobbyists and railroad sponsors have said, I ask you if the railroads are not faring about the same as other industries in this country? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, the presence of the Pennsylvania delegation on this side of the aisle has caused some interest and excited some curiosity. May we digress from the seriousness of the situation of our legislative duties for a moment to direct the attention of the membership of the House to the fact that the dean of the Pennsylvania Republican delegation, Mr. WOLFENDEN, today celebrates his fiftieth birthday? [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, if we are to find a durable solution for this very irritating railroad problem, there are three things we must recognize. The first is that the days of railroad expansion are over. That is manifest from the fact that there are 17,000 less locomotives in operation today than there were 15 years ago. They are operating less track today than they were in 1918. Physical expansion is over.

Secondly, they are up against competition. Electric lines have gone out. The railroads have surrendered a great deal of their passenger service to busses and a great deal of their freight service to trucks. We must recognize that they are living in a competitive era.

To particularize, in the last 11 years railroads have lost 11 percent of their freight business and 23 percent of their passenger business. Meanwhile, pipe lines have gained 4.3 percent in business, bus traffic has increased by 32 percent, and transportation of freight by truck has increased about 4 percent.

All this but emphasizes the fact that we are living in a leveling-off period, when the transportation pattern has been definitely established, when physical expansion is over, when most communities are now served with some type of transportation, when competition is definitely a part of the problem, and when restrictions must be relaxed if the railroads are ever to obtain sufficient revenues to remain on the black side of the ledger.

Third, we must recognize also that railroads must go out and get business for themselves if they are ever to be rehabilitated and kept on a paying basis. That means that restrictions must be relaxed; burdens must be removed insofar as government can do it in order that they may have a full and fair chance to compete for the business which may exist.

The Government cannot make people ride. It cannot make them manufacture goods and ship them. Yet they will get out of this difficulty only in proportion as business is generated. There is a way to generate business, in my judgment. The first is that the rate-making rule ought to be revised. I think it is nonsensical and stupid to tie them up to the rate-making rule which embraces movement of traffic and which has been so narrowly administered. The second is that this highly stupid business of preventing them from abandoning lines ought to be stopped. There is no justification whatsoever, in my judgment, that a railroad company should be compelled to go through the rigamarole of long and expensive hearings in order to abandon an unprofitable piece of line. It is going to be reflected, of course, in increased earnings if abandonment of unprofitable lines were permitted, when it can be demonstrated that they are unprofitable.

Finally, there ought to be some modification of the fourth section. If the amendment that is pending on the desk will do what I think it does, then I am for it, because it will modify it in the interest of everybody and everything. For many years I have actively supported every effort to secure a modification of this inequitable provision of the Transportation Act.

Now, who are the parties in interest to a modification whereby rates can be reduced, so long as they are compensatory? The public will get the advantage of reduced rates if they can be reduced. If you consider it from the standpoint of the stockholders and security holders of railroad debentures, bonds, and notes, the language of the amendment is that it has to be compensatory. So that you are not selling them down the river.

Finally, it provides that all types of transportation shall have available to them the right to reduce rates if they can. So the competitors cannot complain; the stockholders cannot complain; the public cannot complain; because all of them are taken care of in this amendment. In my judgment it is one way in which business can be obtained and fair competition preserved.

Now, we can shout to the housetops and talk as long as we please, but the bill that is before us today is going to be a mere gesture unless business is restored to the railroads. That means that some element of competition, some flexibility, some freedom ought to be accorded so that they can go out and get a little business and put themselves on the black side of the ledger.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Does the gentleman think that the amendment before us will have the effect of repealing the long-and-short-haul clause?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe it will entirely repeal it, but in my judgment it will modify it somewhat. It will safely modify it, because the provision is that the rate must be compensatory, and that puts the burden of proof upon the carrier to show that it is compensatory, and thereby take care of the intrinsic welfare of the railroads, of the stockholders, and of the management.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. I spoke to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who said he was willing to accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] that it shall not affect the long-and-short-haul clause.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Personally, I favor the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause, but more than that I want to give the carriers a chance to get a little business. In the Middle West we are living in a land-locked empire. So much of our business goes to the coastwise trade. You can ship candy from Boston to San Francisco cheaper than you can from Chicago. The last time I checked the rate it was 90 cents per 100 pounds from Boston to San Francisco and it is $1.63 per 100 pounds from Chicago to San Francisco. You have us bottled up out there, and you have got to give our railroads a chance to get some of this business, or otherwise we are just making a gesture at the moon in this whole bill. [Applause.]

The time has come to recognize the essential fact that the railroads have grown up. They have reached maturity. Mileage is being abandoned instead of extended. There are no new communities clamoring for service. The highway pattern is not only here to stay but is being expanded by Federal and State governments. Trucks are here to stay, and nobody makes any pretense that they should be abolished or restricted. Water transportation is here to stay, and nobody would contend that it be abolished. The airways are well past the pioneering stage, and air travel has been reduced to a routine and commercial enterprise; it is here to stay..

Our job, therefore, if we are to solve the transportation problem, is to operate within this framework and permit all types of transportation to get the business if they can so long as the rates are compensatory and in the public interest. By that standard, I have no fear but what railroads will get their share of the business and develop new initiative. Such a rule would make it possible to develop new economies of operation and provide the incentives needed to get the railroads of the country out of their present slump.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

We give a great deal of weight to the experience and background of the Members on these questions, whether or not they have had committee experience and have studied the particular subject matter of the legislation pending. Senator WADSWORTH is, to my mind—and I say it with due respect to the other distinguished gentlemen on this committee—the outstanding member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in point of background, experience, and high intelligence.

Offered by him, this amendment should have added consideration.

This amendment cures the confused condition existing in the Interstate Commerce Commission. Edmund Burke once said that refined policy was the parent of confusion, and that is the situation in which our rate-making structure has come in America. It was stated here on the floor yesterday that Danville, Va., a small city, had a rate case which cost $50,000,000 to try. This amendment brings to an end for all time that type of mysterious procedure so completely encircled in red tape. It brings the daylight into this labyrinthian situation. I do not believe, as suggested here, that it will affect the fourth section. Rates must be compensatory. Instead of letting the Interstate Commerce Commission wander futilely and ineptly in the dark during the succeeding years, by their procedure hurting the transportation agencies, this bill gives them a definite and positive mandate, a mandate not for the railroads, not for the trucks, not for the waterways, but a mandate to consider the well-being, the transportation needs of the American people in these various fields, the single limitation being that it must be operated at a compensatory cost.

I very much trust that this situation of confusion which prevails in the transportation field to the detriment of all the people, of the railroads and other agencies of transportation will be ended by the adoption of this statesmanlike and epoch-making amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. [Applause.]

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. As I understand it, the gentleman favors the application of the compensatory-return theory to all rates made by carriers.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Would the gentleman favor that, then, for a long haul that otherwise might be prohibited under the fourth section?

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman is trying to drag a red herring across the trail. I said in my brief discussion that this amendment will not affect, in my judgment, the fourth section, because complaints as to the elimination of the fourth section were that the railroads cut the rates down below compensatory rates and then destroyed other agencies. So I do not believe that the question the gentleman has asked is illuminating, and I say it with all due politeness, for I admire the gentleman. I do not believe it is particularly pertinent.

Mr. HALLECK. If compensatory rate is good for one place, it ought to be good all other places.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman's statement is not sound, in my judgment. I am compelled to differ with the gentleman. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah is recognized.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURDOCK of Utah to the amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: At the end of the amendment strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That nothing in this bill shall be construed so as to affect the long-and-short-haul provision of section 4."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, after reading the committee report on this bill and giving it as much study as I have been able to, I had concluded that, so far as I was concerned, I was willing to accept the recommendations of the great committee which reported this bill to the House; but just the minute that the question of repeal or modification or amendment of the fourth section is dragged into the debate, even by implication, then certain specters and ghosts of the past immediately arise to harass and horrify the men from that great intermountain section which has suffered so seriously from discriminatory rates which were formerly imposed on the intermountain States before the adoption of the fourth section. After listening to the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], it immediately occurred to me that, at least by implication, it might be construed as an amendment, or modification, or in its administration the fourth section could be disregarded; and in talking to the gentleman from New York about that he readily agreed that in his opinion his amendment would not do that. If it will not do that, and it is not intended to do that, what objection can there be to the adoption of a simple amendment that says that nothing in this paragraph shall be construed so as to affect the long-and-short-haul clause of section 4? After talking to the gentleman from New York and submitting a tentative amendment to him, he agreed, with a couple of minor changes, that he had no objection to it.

When we find statesmen like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] getting up here and telling us that, in his opinion, the adoption of the Wadsworth amendment will modify or amend, or even repeal, the fourth section, and then another statesman from the Republican side, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN], saying, "No; it is not intended to do that; it will not affect it at all," can you condemn the Democrats on this side, Mr. Chairman, after such expositions by statesmen on the Republican side, of being a little apprehensive as to just what the Wadsworth amendment does? In order, Mr. Chairman, to obviate and to eliminate any question of any effect on the fourth section, this qualifying amendment can hurt no one, but certainly will satisfy those Members whose sections have suffered so much from discriminatory rates.

Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. MARTIN of Colorado rose.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Inasmuch as I mentioned the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, I yield to him first.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In order to keep the RECORD straight, I think I observed that I did not know whether it would repeal the fourth section or not; but I may say to the gentleman that so far as I personally am concerned, if it did repeal it I certainly would not care much about it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I know that is the gentleman's attitude, and for that very reason and to get away from any chance that the Wadsworth amendment may repeal or affect the fourth section, I am offering this amendment, as I am informed the railroads are not asking for any amendment of the long-and-short haul provision as it now exists.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman from Utah has expressed my apprehensions in the matter, and also my desire by his amendment to the amendment before us. I am for it. I, too, come from that intermountain country and am intensely interested in the continued operation of the long-and-short haul clause. While I am inclined to favor the Wadsworth amendment, I fear to vote for it without the Murdock addition. I just want to make the observation that I cannot agree with the statement that the amendment before us is comparable with the long-and-short haul clause. What we are trying to do by the pending amendment is to give a fair deal to both water and rail transportation, as well as the shipping public. Let us empower the I. C. C. to eliminate cut-throat competition.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The statements made by those gentleman referring to compensatory rates raise a question in my mind as to whether they know what they are talking about.

It has been said that it is difficult to determine what a compensatory rate is. However, it is well understood that it is higher than the out-of-pocket cost. In my judgment, if this amendment—the Wadsworth amendment—is agreed to, instead of freeing the hands of the railroads, they will be further hog-tied by being bound to a rule of rate making above the out-of-pocket cost.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion may I say that the author of the amendment has agreed to accept my amendment, and I think that should be sufficient evidence of its necessity.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, unless this is purely a railroad bill, to be passed in the interest of railroad monopolies; unless it is a bill to raise freight rates and further pile upon the backs of the masses of American people additional burdens they are not able to bear; if this measure is to do justice to the American people who pay the freight or even proposes to do justice to them, then by all means the Wadsworth amendment should be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I represent those people who pay the freight. I know we are being violently discriminated against in favor of water points. I know that we are being violently discriminated against by the North and South traffic rates. I know that we are paying more freight than we are able to bear now. As I said, if this bill is in the interest of the American people and it is proposed to do any measure of justice to the people who are already paying more freight than they can bear, then the Wadsworth amendment should be adopted.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Would the gentleman have the railroads placed in the same category that he would the public utilities, by having the Government operate all of them?

Mr. RANKIN. If you pass this bill without protecting the people, who pay the freight you will be driving toward Government ownership of railroads.

Mr. Chairman, let me say to those men who are so sensitive about the railroads, who are so much in favor of protecting the American railroads at all costs, that demand profits on something like ten to fifteen billion dollars of water which exists in their capital structure, you are doing more with legislation of this kind, if you vote down the Wadsworth amendment, to hasten the day of Government ownership of railroads than anything else that could be done. The American people are not going to stand these enormous burdens; they cannot bear them. It is said that the other transportation systems are subsidized. But it was stated here on yesterday that the railroads had been subsidized to the extent of 132,000,000 acres of land, one-tenth the area of the United States, or as much as the entire area of Pennsylvania, New York, Mississippi, and Alabama combined.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman mentioned 132,000,000 acres.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It was 132,000,000 acres by the Federal Government. In addition to that the States gave millions and millions of acres.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Texas is correct. I am talking about what the Federal Government did. I am not talking about the millions of acres given the railroads by the States.

They tell you all these other transportation systems are subsidized, and throw it up to us that the trucks are now running over highways constructed with public funds. That comes with poor grace. I have to dodge Pennsylvania Railroad busses every time I get out on the highway. The railroads are using the highways now and they are getting ready to put their own trucks on the highways in order to monopolize that traffic. Will they offer to pay for the building of those highways? No. They are seeking today to pile upon the American people, the ones who pay the freight, the highest rates the traffic will bear. They are seeking to go just as far as they possibly can.

This is going to be the dividing line. Those Members who are only interested in boosting railroad rates will vote against the Wadsworth amendment. The Members who are interested in the people who pay the freight, those Members who want to do justice to all concerned, will vote for the Wadsworth amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois for a question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I observe that yesterday the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]——

Mr. RANKIN. I did not yield for a long statement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. How about putting in the other side of the picture and showing the loss of revenue?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. The gentleman can have no objection to my clarifying amendment?

Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] is amply able to take care of himself on that proposition.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is not presenting the other side of the story.

Mr. RANKIN. I hope this amendment is adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, politics certainly makes strange bedfellows. I should think that when some of the supporters of this amendment hear the speeches of others that are supporting it they would come to the conclusion they are wrong in their position. Let me confess at the outset how little I know about the rule of rate making which this amendment proposes to amend. I say frankly I do not know what effect this amendment would have. I know we have discussed the rule of rate making over the years in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a great many times. It is a very complicated, complex subject. I do know that this amendment does not apply to the fixing of rates of water carriers only; it does not apply alone to the fixing of rates of motor carriers; it does not apply alone to the fixing of rates for the railroads; it applies to all three. It is proposed to write into this bill on the floor of the House a rule of rate making that I dare say no one outside of the gentleman who has introduced the amendment [Mr. WADSWORTH], and the gentlemen who signed their names to this letter which contains the proposal, knows what it will really do, and I have some doubt whether they do or not. We have no recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to it.

This rule of rate making as written in the bill for the water carriers is the same, with the exception of changing the language from "railroads" to "water carriers," as the rule of rate making in the Interstate Commerce Act for the railroads.

Let me say that I would favor writing into the bill a simple declaration to the effect that the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing the rates for water carriers should not consider the cost of transportation over the railroads, although I am convinced from a discussion of the matter in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that such a declaration is not necessary.

Let me call the attention of the Members to the language of the bill:

> In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates * * * the Commission shall give due consideration, among other factors, * * * to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient water transportation service at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable water carriers, under honest, economical, and efficient management, to provide such service.

I cannot conceive that the House without any further consideration than has been given this amendment will write into the law a provision which will change the rule of rate making for railroads, water carriers, and motor carriers, to what extent no one knows. No one knows what the effect of this amendment would be in the fixing of rates. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am against this bill as a whole, because I believe it was designed solely for the purpose of benefiting the strong railroad interests against the weak competitors in the form of water carriers. It is legislation designed for the benefit of the strong against the weak.

When this measure was brought on the floor last week I searched every page of it, and every sentence and every clause, and failed to find one single thing in the measure which would be to the interest of the consuming public as a whole or the people of the United States. Yesterday when the bill began to be read for amendment, of course, three or four amendments were adopted which will, in some measure, help the people of the country in general.

It seems to me the committee is in a rather awkward position in opposing this particular amendment because this amendment does nothing more than carry into effect the declaration of policy contained on the first page of the bill as rewritten by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, particularly when they state that the act shall be so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each, meaning each method of transportation.

We all know that the water carriers are in a particularly advantageous position to furnish cheap transportation and thereby lower costs to the consumer in the final analysis. The committee in opposing this amendment seems to be fearful that the water carriers will be given the benefit of the natural advantages which they should enjoy. It has been the experience in the past that when the Interstate Commerce Commission has any control over water rates, which they do whenever such rates are connected with rail rates, they always put the water rates up nearly to the rail rates, so we know in advance what will be the ultimate result to the consumer under this act.

It seems to me that the committee should accept this amendment when the Senate, of whose wisdom we all have no doubt, accepted this amendment unanimously. The author of the bill, the Senator from Montana, accepted this amendment without any objection. The committee chairman himself [Mr. LEA of California] said that the committee discussed the amendment and I get the impression there was much doubt in their minds for quite a long period of time as to whether or not this amendment should be kept in the bill. So I see no objection whatever to the inclusion of this amendment. It is one of the few things that will make the bill palatable. In other words, if this amendment is not in the bill I do not believe the bill will have a possible chance of ever getting enough votes to pass this House. So if the committee wants really to pass a railroad bill of some kind I suggest to them that they be gracious enough to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman has made the statement that because this amendment was in the Senate bill it should be accepted. Will the gentleman accept the Senate bill as it is now written?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I did not make the statement that because this was in the Senate bill it should be accepted. I made the statement that the Senate accepted it unanimously, and that is one good reason it should be accepted here.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman said that because the Senate had adopted it we should adopt it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I did not say that. I said that the Senate accepted it unanimously, and that the committee should have no objection whatever to it. In my opinion, the only chance this bill has of passage is to have this amendment written into it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman believe that the bill as it passed the Senate is far preferable to the bill as it stands without the pending amendment?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I believe the bill as it passed the Senate is more acceptable than the committee bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Would the gentleman from Oklahoma vote for the Senate bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; nor will I vote for the present bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, we are getting down to fundamentals when we consider this amendment of the gentleman from New York. We are really going to do something for the people of this country when we adopt this amendment, something the people have been hoping for and waiting and praying for since about 1887, when the Interstate Commerce Commission was first set up and organized, something which was intended to be done for the people of this country when the Interstate Commerce Act was enacted, and something which will also probably do away with some of the activities and duties of that commission, which is a thing a majority of the people of this country are talking about today because of the lack of action on the part of the commission in the interest of the common people, of the farmer, the shipper, and the consumer.

I think if a poll were taken of the people of this land, you would find that a majority of them would vote to do away with the Interstate Commerce Commission because of its failure to perform the function for which it was set up originally under the Interstate Commerce Act, that is, to protect the little fellow and the independent businessman, the farmers, and shippers from unfair and discriminatory rates such as were being granted by the railroads to their special friends and favorites at that time.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], when the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] introduced his amendment, brought up the point of laying rates on the subsidies which he insinuated the waterways and the busses have received or are enjoying. It seems to me that is the very thing the people of this country have objected to with reference to the railroad rates. They do not want rates based on the subsidies or on the free land, free rights-of-way which have been given the railroads, nor on their watered stock and inflated values; and they do not now want, if I am any judge of public sentiment, a water rate based on the subsidies which the gentleman from Michigan seems to think have been given. I am not sure any subsidy has been given to them, but I am sure that a great deal of subsidization has been done for our railroads, as I will now point out.

I have here a document which I have obtained from the Public Lands Division of the Department of the Interior, which gives the exact figures on the number of acres which have been donated or given to the railroads in the form of subsidy by the Federal Government, and this is for the benefit of the gentleman from Texas, too, who brought up this point a moment ago. I find that the total list running from back in 1853, when Stephen Douglas developed the idea, is 152,961,568.85 acres which were granted by the Federal Government to the railroads to assist them. In addition to that, of course, we know many States also granted large tracts of their territory.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Some of that was canceled for frauds.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Of these 153,000,000 acres, the total on which the railroads have taken out patents amounts to 130,389,960.08 acres.

I happen to come from a part of the country where the railroads enjoyed a great deal of benefit from this tremendous grant and subsidization, and I know of acres which were sold—and being in the real-estate business myself had something to do with it—in the years gone by from these grants on a basis when cut up into lots for as high as $300 an acre. When you consider this fact, plus the additional fact that it is reported, according to history, that upward of $1,000,000,000, was donated by the Federal Government in the form of cash to assist the railroads, subsidies which were donated through the action of Congress, you may get some small idea of the tremendous gifts, grants, and subsidies, which we the people of this country, have given the railroads.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. Is it not a fact also that the railroads now retain between twelve and thirteen million acres of land and there is nothing in this bill that says anything about ceding that back to the Government in case they cease to give the Government the benefit of rates?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The railroads now retain nearly 23,000,000 acres of that land, according to the figures I have here.

Mr. SOUTH. I will say to the gentleman that the title to part of that land is in question, but as to twelve or thirteen million acres of the land there is no question about that whatever.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman is correct, and I think it would be interesting if we had the time to go into a little of this history of the subsidization of our railroads, so we would understand that there is not a penny of money invested as far as the original organizers and promoters of the railroads are concerned. Also that thereafter the Wall Street manipulators and promoters sold stock based on the values created by our gifts and collected and pocketed more billions out of the earnings and savings of working people, of widows and orphans. Those things are matters of history.

We should also remember that thereafter during succeeding waves of depression and panic that even the value of this watered stock was wrung out and the stockholders in most cases lost it or sold it for a mere pittance to the Vanderbilts, the Harrimans, Goulds, and the Morgan monopolists in Wall Street, who, as a result, now own or control, or both, most of our important railroads today.

So now, in order to refresh our memories on these events, let us look at the record of history for a moment and by that means we may more easily and correctly determine what our present-day railroad owners merit and what our answer should be on this amendment and on this entire bill.

By 1853, the wily political orator Stephen Douglas had convinced everyone that the Pacific railroad should be built by private enterprise and that to encourage such construction large pieces of the public domain, all the western territories belonging to the Republic, could be detached and turned over to the railroad builders. These resources, John Quincy Adams had wished to retain for the nourishment and profit of the citizens at large. But the view that the untaxed lands of the Government should be turned over to private enterprise gained adherents in every quarter.

Inasmuch as these railroad lands, received without cost, could be disposed of at from $1.25 to $300 an acre by the promoters of "chains of cities", there was clearly room for private initiative and enterprise. But where the risks to capital were considered too great, the local, State, or National Government often underwrote the venture further by issuing bonds, which were an obligation upon the community or Nation thereafter, and turning these over to the railroad captains. William Z. Ripley, an authority in this field, estimates conservatively that three-fifths of the cost of the railroads was originaly borne by the Government, some $707,000,000 in known cash and $335,000,000 in land.

First, says Ripley, the railroad was organized by the "projectors" upon a blueprint, and a charter obtained, involving free land grants, sometimes in alternate sections running from 6 to 10 miles on either side of the line. Then a land company, owned by the directors of the railroad, was incorporated to develop and sell its lands. With the proceeds of the land sales, in addition to that from Government subsidies, and finally from the sale of mortgage bonds, building was begun. This in turn was done by a construction company, also owned by the directors, and with a characteristic abandon, a fearlessness of high cost of error, that the early railroad builders were famous for. Loss through extravagance by the construction company was borne with composure, since it affected nothing but the future of the railroad, whose capital stock usually represented nothing and cost the directors of the enterprise nothing.

Collis P. Huntington, the former watch peddler, who represented himself as the head of the Central Pacific Railroad of California, capitalized at $8,500,000, but with nothing paid in, whispered in corners to the friendly and interested Congressmen, chorusing their demands for lands, rights-of-way, and Government bonds, reporting the clamor of the settlers for railroad lines, estimating the fabulous profits through land and construction work which might be won, and promising much of these profits to those who entered the affair, whether they were plain citizens or Senators.

It was among these first comers that the railroad captains were recruited for the great cause. And the Congressmen who had the courage to help them at the start, afterward known as Railway Congressmen, were also ready to take their part, though not too publicly, and expected their rewards.

In short order the Pacific Railroad bill was passed, and the two companies which undertook the colossal affair were given Federal charters. The Union Pacific, building westward from the Missouri River, was granted 12,000,000 acres of unknown land, in alternate sections 10 miles deep, and also $27,000,000 in 6-percent 30-year Government bonds as a first mortgage. The Central Pacific, building from the sea eastward to meet the Union Pacific, was similarly granted 9,000,000 acres of land and $24,000,000 in Government bonds.

Soon afterward the enthusiastic lawgivers donated 18,000,000 acres of land to the group headed by Thomas Scott, who proposed to build the Texas & Pacific Railroad along the Mexican border; and 47,000,000 acres to another patriotic gentleman, Josiah Perham of Boston, who declared himself ready to build the Northern Pacific Railroad along the Canadian border. This and much more was freely given until 153,000,000 Federal acres were disposed of or more than most nations of the world in area, and all the coal, copper, oil, gold, and silver under them, all the timber and stone above them.

This recital of the facts of history gives a slight idea of the subsidies granted the railroads. Of course, we realize they would not have been possible without them, but when these railroad boys of today come in here and cry "Subsidy, subsidy, you are subsidizing the waterways and bus lines!" it comes with ill grace from the lineal descendants of the early-day promoters and monopolists who received such a golden hoard of subsidies. Shall we now turn control of our waterways and buses over to this gang to promote, and manipulate and dissipate as they have the railroads? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with considerable interest this afternoon to the discussion of the effect this amendment would have if adopted and the reasons offered as to why it should not be adopted. As a matter of fact, I am for this amendment. I would like to see this amendment in the bill, which might have a chance of passing and becoming law. My firm view is that, after all of the debate we have had here today, this bill, when passed upon finally by both Houses and sent to conference, will have only the beneficial effect of causing the conferees to think somewhat about the character of bill which they inevitably must draft and present back here for our consideration in the form of a conference report. I repeat that my objection to this whole proposition is based upon the fact that we are now dealing with a bill which proposes to control and regulate the entire major transportation facilities of this country, with the exception of the air. We are attempting to do that knowing, I repeat, what we are going to be called upon to vote on, and I took this time on this amendment to state that I am for it and will support it because of the beneficial effect it should have, at least, in future discussions of this rate-making proposition.

I find myself deeply concerned, Mr. Chairman, over the situation and I take this time to repeat my deep conviction that the only reasonable or constructive answer to the problem which confronts us, if we truly desire transportation legislation, is to recommit this bill, take it up in the light of the study it has received and go from there on early in the next Congress, looking toward consideration of a bill which treats the transportation agencies fairly.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman from Texas I regard as one of the fairest legislators in the House. Surely he is not committed now to a recommission of the bill before our deliberations are concluded and we have got to the end of what may or may not be in the measure.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's earnest interest in the passage of this particular bill through this body will, in my candid opinion, have little or nothing to do with the bill to be finally presented to this House in the form of a conference report. Every amendment placed on this bill, for instance, and voted on and accepted by a majority of this House may be discarded by the conferees in the new bill which under the peculiar parliamentary situation which confronts us will be the inevitable result of the conference.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. That will not happen if we pass the Wadsworth amendment.

Mr. KLEBERG. We might have the Wadsworth amendment and nothing else, and I am going to vote for it because of the salutary effect that it will have on this piece of legislation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And in connection with the gentleman's statement that this matter is to be entirely disposed of by the conferees, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Senator WHEELER in the debate on the floor of the Senate, when the Miller amendment was proposed, said he favored this and would do what he could to get it approved by the conferees, so that if we pass it it will be mandatory on the conferees to bring it back.

Mr. KLEBERG. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to go along with any plan that has for its purpose rehabilitation of the railroads without any cost to the taxpayers of the United States. I have always questioned the right of the Congress or of the Federal Government to involve themselves in the private capital structure of business. I do not believe there is any constitutional power delegated to the Federal Government which gives it the right to enter into the private business affairs of the Nation's industries. However, if it is possible to regulate or rehabilitate the railroads without cost to the people, then I am for it. I want the Committee to bear in mind one particular point, and it is the power that we give to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to underwrite all of the debts of these railroads and to act as a receiver for the railroads. It will involve considerable money to underwrite the railroad structure. If you take into consideration that the national debt in 1940 will be about $44,000,000,000, and that it is now estimated that the deficit for the fiscal year 1940 will be over $5,000,000,000 more, one can readily understand that we will accumulate a potential indebtedness by June 30, 1940, of forty-eight to fifty billion dollars. If you will look at the daily balance sheet of the Treasury, you will find that on the last of June 1939 the contingent indebtedness for the various private Federal corporations amounted to $13,145,886,194. That will make at least $62,000,000,000 indebtedness at the end of 1940. I do not believe that the taxpayers in this great country can repay such an indebtedness. It is quite true that we have paper assets against the $13,000,000,000, but the chances are that this will not be collected. If we underwrite the railroad indebtedness, it is difficult to say what the indebtedness might be at the end of the fiscal year 1941. Any business that runs along for 7 years and involves itself to the extent of $13,000,000,000 is not a sound business, particularly when it has only paper assets to balance such indebtedness. For that reason I say I would be very glad to go along with any plan which will rehabilitate or reconstruct the railroads or any other business in the United States, providing it does not cost the taxpayers any money. It is certainly very foolish for us to borrow money from the bankers, pay them interest on the money we borrow, and then take that capital and buy the bonds now held by the same bankers. In other words, we do nothing else but relieve them of their responsibility. We assume the indebtedness of the bankers and bondholders. We borrow the money from them; then we pay interest on the money borrowed and charge the losses and interest to the taxpayers of the United States. If anybody will prove to me that such business is sound, I shall go along with them. Otherwise, I shall oppose any plan that will place a greater load upon the taxpayers and business already overburdened with excessive taxes.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, it is my desire to compliment the Members on their attempts to solve our railroad-transportation riddle. I am sure that the bankers who are now holding worthless railroad stocks and bonds are waiting anxiously for Congress to come to their relief and take these worthless securities off their hands. Congress came to the bankers' rescue after the World War and through its kindness of heart, allowed the taxpayers to assume uncollectible loans made by the same bankers during that war. Congress is now about to engage in another charitable act, not to our people, but to the bankers, the same crowd that is now controlling not only the Nation's gold but credit as well.

The queer thing about this transaction is that we will borrow the money from the Federal Reserve banks, pay them interest on such money, and charge all the losses to the taxpayers of the United States.

As I look back, I wonder what has gone wrong with Congress. We have obligated ourselves to protect the people, and we are ourselves of the people, and must return to their ranks. Yet we sit here, spend money, and charge all the losses to ourselves and our own people. In 1934 Congress repudiated investments made by the people who sent them to Congress, deprived them of gold and sound security, and left them with inflated currency and a hopeless future. After listening to Members talking on this floor, I can readily understand how easy it is to solve the railroad-transportation problem which, under private management and under the Interstate Commerce Commission, has gone in debt more and more each year. Do the Members of Congress expect to handle this railroad problem? Certainly not. It will be turned over to expert Government professors, and theoretical planners, who have for 10 years demonstrated their superior ability in decreasing the national debt and starting the wheels of industry and business operating, to increase employment. They have succeeded so well that the national debt is now nearly $50,000,000,000, the Nation's industry and business are bankrupt, and we have 20,000,000 people on part-time employment or unemployed.

Look at our merchant marine, which is carrying cargo to every bay of the coast, in direct competition with the railroads. Our merchant marine is the apple of the taxpayer's eye, for is it not subsidized, and are not all losses charged to the taxpayers of the United States? Are not the maritime boards and commissioners, that have so successfully regulated the merchant marine, also paid by the taxpayers? Of course they are. And look at the profitable deal when the Leviathan was sold to England. The taxpayers do not know even now what became of the money or what losses they sustained. This Board is smart. They have fooled everybody all these years, and still Congress appropriates more money to keep them happy and prosperous.

Just take a squint at the Labor Department, and its regulation of docks and loading facilities for the merchant marine, in allowing massive strikes for the purpose of dispatching handling of cargo. The Secretary of Labor knows all about it, for I have been informed that she is well versed in the movement of water commerce in Switzerland, Ethiopia, and other large countries. Let us not forget the discipline maintained by the Labor Department in cargo movement and in allowing the officers to maintain ship's discipline. Why, the officers are just about in complete control of their ships, if the crew agrees to take orders.

The Labor Department should be medalized for its keen knowledge of ship regulation and ship discipline. For look at our merchant marine. Where is it? You tell me.

I can readily understand that it is not sound business to reduce taxes on railroads, for that might reduce operating costs and allow them to compete with coast-wise shipping. As a matter of fact, it might even rehabilitate the railroads, and thus restore their earning power. I apologize for making this statement, yet it might be well to bear in mind that reduction in overhead and operative cost is often employed to restore earning in business. Such procedure, of course, might give our new experts a headache, for it would upset their mental machinery.

Mr. Chairman, may I also compliment my colleagues who so clearly expound the legislation that may restore solvency to railroads and to the merchant marine as well. I am sure many of them, if they could be spared from Congress, would, if employed by the railroads, solve their problems promptly. Why not? Have not we had experience? Is it not easy to adjust profit and loss by legislation enacted by Congress? We have done this for years, and look at the results around us today. Is not that evidence it can be done? Here is the Interstate Commerce Commission. Just observe its success during the many years it has been in charge of transportation. Why, there is hardly a sound railroad today, and if you do not believe it, ask them.

The Members well know all we need is a little more legislation, regulation, and consolidation. And the trick is done. Railroad stock will be par overnight, and everybody will be happy.

May I call your attention to the success of Government operation of the air mail, when contracts were canceled a few years past? I am sure the Members well remember that, because it happened during President Roosevelt's administration. Why, in a few months, under efficient Federal management, the Army lost about 12 or 15 pilots, and many planes. Just imagine what might have happened if the administration had insisted on operating the air mail for 1 or 2 years. The chances are there would have been no pilots left—even for Hollywood movies.

I could sit here and enumerate one illusionary success after another, profit on paper, and abundance in conservation. What we should do now is to build an asylum for all these experts. Or maybe it would be better to consult Einstein and preserve all of them in his fourth dimension chamber.

I have always found it well to imagine myself in the other fellow's position. Today we are enacting legislation to care for bankrupt railroads, consolidation of them, regulation of rates between railroads and the merchant marine, and regulation of cargo. Could any one Member of Congress, if the opportunity presented itself, take charge of and operate a railroad or an ocean-going ship? Are there any Members in Congress who understand how railroads can be operated successfully? There is no evidence of it, for the Interstate Commerce Commission has been unable to produce legislation or regulation that permits profitable operation of the railroads. In view of all this failure, is it possible that any Member in this House believes that we are going to help the railroads by the bill, S. 2009, now under consideration? Personally, I am positive that it will be of as little help as similar legislation in the past.

Our national illness today is too much legislation, too much meddling by the Federal Government and its experts in problems they do not understand. If any of those who believe that our Nation's business, industry, and commerce can be placed on a profitable operating basis by legislation, he should be examined, because it takes common sense to operate business, little of which is found in present-day legislation.

The present administration has made no effort whatsoever to encourage business, or to allow the Nation's industries to operate on their own responsibility. As a matter of fact, it has done the opposite, for it is now actively engaged in active competition with private industry, and in such manner is destroying all those things that have made us strong and prosperous.

Mr. Chairman, what is the power of Congress? Let us not deceive ourselves, for we have no more power than that delegated in the Constitution of the United States. The real cause of the chaotic state in which we find ourselves today is due to the fact that Congress has not adhered to the Constitution, that the President has not seen that the laws are faithfully obeyed, and that the Supreme Court has failed in interpreting the Constitution correctly. If any branch believes that I am incorrect in this statement, I shall be glad to prove the contrary.

The Constitution provides that Congress shall have the power to "regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." What does this mean? It means exactly the same regulation of commerce as is employed internationally, with the exception that Congress may negotiate with a foreign nation, but only among the several States. In other words, Congress has no constitutional right to meddle in the capital structure of business, no matter whether it be that of transportation or any other private business. Congress should confine itself to the regulation of this traffic, for the safety of the passengers and for the safety of the freight.

It is the duty of Congress to adjust differences between the States, when such differences arise, and Congress may prescribe safe roadbeds, routing, and other traveling safety devices. The greatest factors of destruction are politics, fraud and intrigue among the bankers, chiseling business and irresponsible Members in Congress and other branches of the Government. Instead of adhering to and honoring their obligations, they have helped in partition of the Nation's wealth. It was such disgraceful condition that led to the adoption of the seventeenth amendment, which was a mistake. The Senators found guilty should have been called back home, relieved of office, and replaced by decent citizens.

The greatest problem the railroads are facing today is rot within their own structure, watered stock, and stock trading on the Exchange. I believe the railroads ought to be consolidated, not with the taxpayers' money but with the money of those who have run them into the gutter. There is no reason why the poor taxpayers in the United States should come to the rescue of the bankers, when they have made colossal mistakes in business. We have, I believe, four roads paralleling across the country. Let one or two of them, with the best road-beds, be set aside for modern, fast travel. There is no earthly reason why we should not have trains traveling at the rate of 100 miles an hour. If we had such transportation, many of those now traveling in automobiles and in airplanes would be passengers on such trains. The other roads could be used for slower passenger traffic and freight transportation. The trouble with the railroads is that they have gone backward, while all other transportation has gone rapidly forward. I am opposed to helping the money sharks or money changers in Wall Street, for they have never been fair with our people, our industries, or with our Nation. The taxpayers have assumed their obligations and have taken their losses many times, as we did in the World War. Why should the people now step to the front, and assume another obligation, a banker's obligation, that should be charged up to those who own and control the railroads. I recall the many worthless bonds held by many banks in the '20's, when the bank corporation chain system was organized. What was the purpose of this organization? It was for no other purpose than to cover up horrid mistakes they had made, in extension of unsound loans to foreign countries, and for which the bonds had been sold to gullible outlying banks. These banks were taken over in trades of stock, and for what purpose? To seal their lips by placing the Wall Street crowd in charge of them.

The ability of these bankers is clearly evident when we recall what happened to this stock, when it fell off the perch, had to be reorganized, and finally ended as a great loss to its investors. That was banking stock, if you please, held by the intelligent and smart bankers who have always lived and preyed upon the earnings of honest and sincere citizens. We now have chain banks that are of little help to the communities in which they are located, and they are little better than chain stores, and federally owned private corporations, which are now destroying our Nation's industry and business. I may say at this point that these banks are owned and controlled by those who are intimately related with or are a part of the invisible Government.

It strikes me that it is about time that Congress give just a little consideration to the people who are sitting back home and hoping that we will help them—to the people who have made this country great and prosperous by hard, honest, and sincere labor—to the people who are waiting for Congress to arouse itself and get rid of the money changers, the Communists, and all other "ists" and "isms" that are now destroying the Government of the United States. They are waiting for Congress to give orders to the intelligence departments to bring the Communists into camps, for this unhealthful gentry stands convicted by its own works.

What is the President waiting for? It is his duty to see that the laws are faithfully obeyed, and the Communist is the worst enemy that the United States has ever had to face. So why not eliminate this monster before we are annihilated by the Frankenstein that has been nourished by this administration ever since it came into power? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, this is another amendment introduced probably with good intention; but I am satisfied that many, many of you do not understand it and do not understand what will happen. One speaker just now said, "You do something to the people of the country." I admit that you will, because if this amendment is passed you will destroy competitive rates and put all rates upon a mileage basis. You will break down the entire competitive system of rates. You gentlemen may laugh about it, but when you go home you will find this is a serious proposition with your constituents. I say to you now that, of all the amendments introduced up to this time, this is the most serious of any that has come before the Congress. It will operate to prevent a carrier from reducing its rates below the amount which gives the carrier a compensatory rate, including full cost of performing this service. All costs must be considered under this amendment, whether related to transportation or not. As the cost accountants would say, "the fully allocated costs" must be considered in it. The cost of performance or operation is only one of the several elements in fixing the rates. The volume of movement, the value of the product to the shippers, market competition, are all considered. Let me remind you gentlemen from West Virginia that in your coal fields you have what is known as a market competitive rate. If your area for the mining of coal is 100 miles across, the point 100 miles west receives the same rate that a point 100 miles east receives to Norfolk.

I appeal to the lumbermen of Louisiana and to you men who ship cotton from the South, to the cypress growers of California and of Texas. Do you know what it will cost with this amendment? The Interstate Commerce Commission now has around 500 cases where railroads have asked for reduced rates. It will increase to probably 1,000 cases. They will have to employ 50 or 100 accountants annually on them, in order that these reduced rates may be carried into effect.

I tell you, and I tell you upon my responsibility as a Member of this Congress, that you will absolutely destroy the competitive system and put these rates on a mileage basis in the United States for the shipment of freight. Do you want it? Most assuredly you do not. Your shippers do not want it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] for 5 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, for a long time I had the privilege of serving on the committee that now brings in this bill. The longer I remained a member of that committee and the more study I tried to give to the great question of transportation, the more and more I felt like a child, and realized how little I did know or could know with the time that I had to devote to it. I have helped bring many bills to this House, always highly technical. Especially when you touch the rate structure of the country you get into water that is so deep that only a man after long study and one who has acquired ability to study it from a technical standpoint can understand it.

In 1920 we thought we were wise enough to write a rate-making section in the Transportation Act of 1920 that would for all time settle the question of the rate-making power of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We attempted to do in section 15 (a) of the Transportation Act of 1920 practically what is sought to do in the Wadsworth or so-called Miller amendment today. We tried to instruct the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix rates based upon value, and within a few years the Interstate Commerce Commission found that that brought in so many elements that were impossible for them to determine, that they recommended the abandonment of section 15 (a), and the Congress in its wisdom repealed it and went back to the rule of rate making practically as it is carried in this bill.

Now, you can talk about your friendship for the shipper. You can talk about making it easy for one group or difficult for another group. If this amendment is adopted, it does not go to conference where they may have an opportunity to iron it out after argument by both Senate and House conferees. When it is adopted here it is the law, unless the President of the United States were to veto it. It would delay time out of mind every rate dispute that is brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission and it would add untold expense to the groups of people who appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission seeking to have rates in their immediate section of the country readjusted.

After the experience I have had with technical railroad legislation, I feel that I know it is a dangerous thing for the House in Committee of the Whole to accept amendments that have not been seriously considered by somebody like the committee.

I plead with this Committee this afternoon that before overturning a committee which is practically in unanimous opposition to this amendment, taking that position after 5 months of consideration of this bill, you had better think twice before you do it, because I know in dealing with as sensitive a thing as the railroad-rate structure of this country you are likely to do a violent thing—a thing you do not intend—by adopting far-reaching amendments in the Committee of the Whole. I do trust that in the interests of good legislation this amendment will be voted down and this whole subject be allowed to go to conference, where in an atmosphere of quiet they can deliberate in a sane way on this tremendous proposition of rate regulation, of rate structure, and of rules of rate making. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, while our beloved leader on the majority side has been in this House legislating for the last 20 years along the lines of transportation, I have been on the paying end, I have been paying freight, I have been studying the rates, I have been a victim of the rates; and my object in taking these few minutes is simply to say that if the rate structure we have now is the result of all that legislative effort, it is a mighty poor showing for the work this House has done. There is no justice, there is no equity, there is no reason in these rates.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. We have heard a great deal about the declaration of policy in this bill. If this declaration is to mean a single thing, what possible objection can there be to writing into the law this function of the rate-making structure?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Absolutely none. I am delighted to know that the author of this amendment, for which I am going to vote with all my heart, has accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK]. The Murdock amendment corrects one point that particularly worried me—fear that the long-and-short-haul clause might be modified.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I am also advised by the gentleman from North Carolina that he, too, has no objection to my amendment to the Wadsworth amendment.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The only question running through my mind as I listened to the reading of the Wadsworth amendment was, Does it affect the long-and-short-haul clause? For years I have felt the injustice of that clause; I have felt it personally. I remember one year when I was in the power business I bought a car of copper in New Jersey from the Roeblings, shipped it to the coast, 3,000 miles, and the freight was $720 to tidewater at Portland. The back haul from Portland to where I lived, 300 miles, was one-tenth of the distance. I paid $480 for that back haul. The copper did not take the joy ride to Portland. When it came to North Powder, where I used it, they took it off the car by permission of the railroad; yet I paid that extra $480 because of the right of the railroad to charge more for a short haul than for a long haul. It went into the capitalization of my company, affecting the rate structure. I sold the business and carried that freight charge along with it, and I presume my poor friends there are still paying on it in electric rates to compensate for the long-and-short-haul clause.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I take it that if the gentleman had any apprehension at all about the Wadsworth amendment modifying or repealing the fourth section, he would be against it, but with my amendment to the Wadsworth amendment he is for it.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Yes; that brushes aside the last possible objection. The authors of this bill should not object if they mean to carry out the declaration of policy in the bill. If they mean to give a chance to shippers from the Mexican line to the Canadian boundary, a territory 1,000 miles wide where we have no water, where we cannot use trucks very much on these long hauls, where we are at the mercy of the railroads—if they mean to help us they will include the amendment. And how they do pile on the freight charges! They pile them on until they take almost more than the product is worth. I have seen wheat in my home city sell for 23 cents a bushel and seen the freight rate 20 cents a bushel for a haul of 300 miles.

I am for the Wadsworth amendment, and I am delighted that we have a chance to vote for it with the Murdock amendment which has been accepted by the author. I hope both these amendments will be adopted if it is the intention of the authors of the bill and the committee to carry out the purpose of the bill as expressed in its preamble.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Murdock amendment may be again read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Murdock amendment.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Wadsworth amendment may be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Wadsworth amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the Murdock amendment to the Wadsworth amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided; and there were—ayes 122, noes 107.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BULWINKLE), there were—ayes 131, noes 129.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. LEA and Mr. WADSWORTH to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 147, noes 119.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAVENNER: Page 253, after line 15, insert:

"(e) Without limiting the power and authority vested in the Commission, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by water by means of coercion (whether directly or indirectly, or through the medium of an agreement, conference, association, understanding, or otherwise) to prevent or attempt to prevent any other such carrier from serving any port accessible to ocean-going vessels, situated on any improvement project authorized by the Congress, or through it by any other agency of the Federal Government, lying within the limits of the United States, at rates not unreasonably or unjustly discriminating against ports so situated."

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to restore a provision which originally appeared in the committee bill as subsection (e) of section 305 of the bill. As I understand it, the provision originally had the recommendation of a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission and was included in the bill by the committee until the final print came out. It was then dropped from the committee bill and since that has happened my colleague and myself as representatives of the seaport of San Francisco have received telegrams from the State Board of Harbor Commissioners of California, the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco and other bodies urging that this provision be restored to the bill.

They pointed out that the elimination of this provision would leave in effect the following provision of the Intercoastal Shipping Act of 1933:

And it shall be unlawful for any such carrier, either directly or indirectly, through the medium of any agreement, conferences, association, understanding, or otherwise, to prevent or attempt to prevent any such carrier from extending service to any publicly owned terminal located on any improvement project authorized by the Congress at the same rates which it charges at its nearest regular port of call.

It was pointed out by the State Board of Harbor Commissioners of California, and by the local bodies interested in the commerce of our port that the existing provisions of the law which I have just read to you have operated to the detriment of large seaports on the Pacific coast, of which San Francisco is the most important, and have been a source of considerable friction with up-river points, including a number of the interior small ports of California. It was pointed out that the phrase I have just read to you "at the same rates which it charges at its nearest regular port of call" is indefinite, and since the old Shipping Board once ruled that the level of the rates cannot be measured by the depth of the water, there is no limit to the application of this phrase. It might conceivably be used by an ocean carrier to make through rates in connection with a river carrier far up some navigable river which had been improved by authorization of Congress.

Under such interpretation, for instance, when the Central Valley project is carried out, and after completion of the Shasta Dam, it might be feasible again to navigate the Sacramento River as far up as Red Bluff, and it is conceivable that Red Bluff might demand the same rates as are applicable to San Francisco by water lines in the intercoastal and foreign trades.

This is rate making by legislation. The propriety of extending so-called terminal rates to inland or some small outports should be left to the discretion of the regulatory body charged with administering the act.

I would like to point out again, I am merely asking to restore to the bill a provision which the committee originally approved, and a provision which is designed primarily to make it unlawful for any common carrier by water, by means of coercion—I would like to stress that this amendment is designed to prevent the employment of coercive methods by any water carrier, directly or indirectly—to prevent or attempt to prevent any other carrier from serving such a port as I have described.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] speaks of this amendment as an effort to "restore" certain language, I want to assure the Members it is an effort to destroy what is the present law.

The present law was read to you correctly by the gentleman from California. It is section 205 of the Merchant Marine Act. It was originally included in the Intercoastal Shipping Act of 1933 and it provides:

> Without limiting the power and authority otherwise vested in the Commission, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by water, either directly or indirectly, through the medium of an agreement, conference, association, understanding, or otherwise, to prevent or attempt to prevent any other such carrier from serving any port designed for the accommodation of ocean-going vessels located on any improvement project authorized by the Congress or through it by any other agency of the Federal Government, lying within the continental limits of the United States, at the same rates which it charges at the nearest port already regularly served by it.

This has been the law since 1933. It has been interpreted and shippers and carriers know what it means. The language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California means nothing except that the old subject of water-carrier transportation from and to the smaller ports must be opened up again and litigated to some conclusion. No one, not even the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] can say what the words, "not unreasonable or unjustly discriminating against ports so situated" would mean as interpreted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The amendment must be defeated to protect small ports against what is virtually a conspiracy to raise the rates that they now enjoy and destroy the work that has been done over the past 6 years.

Mr. Chairman, this is not solely a California proposition. There are some 30 ports along the Atlantic coast, as well as the Pacific, that are affected. Among these, and I want to call the attention of my Republican colleagues who represent these ports in Congress, are the following: Providence, R. I., New London, Conn., and Bridgeport, Conn.

Albany, N. Y., is also involved in this proposed amendment; Olympia, Bellingham, and Grays Harbor, Wash.; Astoria, Oreg.; San Diego, Sacramento, and Stockton in California. These small ports, by virtue of the Allin amendment, as it is commonly termed, which was adopted first in the Intercoastal Shipping Act of 1933, have been enabled to obtain equitable treatment in comparison with the great ports of San Francisco and others of that size.

When the Federal Government has spent, as it has, for example, at the port of Stockton, over $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 in developing a port, it wants to see traffic pass over those docks, and traffic will not pass if the steamship lines, through the conferences which they have and which are exempted from antitrust monopoly prosecution can get together and say, "No; we will not serve you except at a higher rate."

Steamship lines are now allowed to act more or less in restraint of trade for self-regulation of the industry through these conferences. The Allin amendment, which is the present law, is the only safety valve through which automatically small ports may receive protection in the matter of blanket rates as against the rule of steamship conferences. The law as it stands makes it unlawful for any water carrier to prevent or attempt to prevent another water carrier from serving one of these small ports at the same rates that it already serves the nearest port of call. That is right and fair, and any other rule would result in discriminatory treatment of these small ports.

Let me tell you also, Mr. Chairman, that this whole proposition has been litigated through the United States Maritime Commission, and this attempt to put this language in the bill is only an attempt to evade the decision of the Maritime Commission rendered on September 13, 1938, in the cases of the Sun Maid Raisin Growers' Association against the Blue Star Line and the Stockton Port District against the same line, in which it was held that the exaction of rates on cargo voluntarily lifted at Stockton higher than those contemporaneously maintained by them on like traffic from their terminal loading ports is unduly and unreasonably preferential and prejudicial and unjustly discriminatory. The amendment is an attempt to undo that decision and to undo the sound and carefully expressed thought of Congress enacted 6 years ago on this particular matter. As I said at the outset, it is an attempt to destroy.

As to the history of this question, the gentleman from California states he wants to restore a provision. Let me state to you that the exact language of section 205, which this amendment would emasculate, is now contained in the Senate version of this bill and was contained in H. R. 4862, the version that the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] introduced here.

The subject matter of those provisions was taken up with Mr. Eastman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It received his approval. The wording as found in S. 2009, Senate version, and H. R. 4862 was carefully gone over by his technical adviser, Dr. Morgan, who also approved it. Somewhere later along the line some influence induced another representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission to suggest that this language the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] offers might be better and it was inserted in committee print No. 2 of this bill. It might be better for someone, but not for the 30 ports that are involved, and it is for their cause that I plead here today.

I am happy to say that when I called the attention of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the language they used in their committee print No. 2 they were quite willing to remove it and leave the language of the law as it exists at the present time, section 205 of the Merchant Marine Act, for the protection of these small ports.

I ask you to vote down this suggested amendment because it will wreck the commerce which has now been developed and which is being developed at these smaller ports, and will overturn through back-door methods a decision which has been rendered, after due notice to all parties and after participation by all parties, by the United States Maritime Commission. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER], because I believe it is a just and fair amendment. As was stated by him, it was in the original draft of this bill.

I wish to call the attention of the Members of this committee to the fact that you do not find the members of the committee here opposing this amendment. The only opposition offered so far has been from another good friend and colleague of mine from California, who has an undue advantage at the present time by reason of the state of the law. This amendment simply rectifies that situation. I presume if I had the advantage he has I would desire to maintain it as he does, but I am going to appeal to the fairness of this committee this afternoon and ask you to vote to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER]. [Applause.]

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, because this amendment is in the interest of San Francisco and that is why he is offering this amendment. Regardless of the wording of the gentleman's amendment and the wording of section 205, this is what it means. Before 1933, whenever a ton of freight was shipped to the west coast of the United States, and vice versa, to the east coast, the shippers were permitted to charge an extra $2 per ton unless they delivered the cargo at one of the big ports, the big ports being, of course, San Francisco and the like. So my little port of San Diego had to pay an extra $2 differential. The result was that shipping just about disappeared from the port of San Diego. We finally corrected that situation, and the bill as it stands at the present time does not permit this discrimination of placing an extra $2 charge, or whatever it may be, on the traffic going into the smaller ports. Whether they are inland ports or outports of small size does not make any difference. So that when you vote down this amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco you are simply doing this—you are making it impossible for the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit discriminatory tariffs in favor of the big ports and against the small ports.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WELCH. Will the gentleman explain to the committee why he is not opposing an amendment which prevents coercion and makes it unlawful for any carrier to serve a small port?

Mr. IZAC. I may say to the gentleman that the practice was in the past that the steamship companies were perfectly willing to go in wholly to the big ports because then they did not have to pay anything for the small amount of freight that they had to deliver to the smaller ports, and naturally they were amenable to that type of legislation; but we are talking in the interest of the consumers and the shippers, and they are not in favor of continuing to pay a differential of $2 simply because their port happens to be a small one.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DARDEN. The gentleman stated at the outset that the shippers charged an additional amount. It is the carriers.

Mr. IZAC. It costs the shippers an extra $2 because that is the tariff charged, the $2 extra tariff per ton of freight.

Mr. DARDEN. By the carriers.

Mr. IZAC. By the carriers; yes.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAVENNER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has read the language of the amendment which provides that it shall be unlawful for any carrier or group of carriers to employ coercion to prevent any other carrier from serving a port of the kind the gentleman is referring to.

Mr. IZAC. Oh, I do not think they use coercion. I think they just have a conference and all the big ones get together and say, "If we can soak these little fellows another $2 a ton let us do it."

Mr. HAVENNER. But this amendment prevents that.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. As a matter of fact, the law as it stands at the present time makes it unlawful to prevent or attempt to prevent such a requirement.

Mr. IZAC. That is right. The law as it stands at the present time is all right.

Mr. BUCK. And the addition of the words "by coercion" means nothing.

Mr. IZAC. Absolutely nothing, as I can see.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to explain the situation of the committee with reference to this amendment. During the preparation of this bill the committee printed two or three prints such as you might call trial prints. We wanted as much criticism from those familiar with the facts as we could get. In one of those prints we had the amendment offered here from the floor. After its language was disclosed, opposition arose and we found it developed a live controversy. The committee had not had time to consider properly the merits of that conflict. The amendment was not essential to the purposes of the bill, so we concluded to eliminate the amendment and leave the law stand as at present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KITCHENS: On page 241, line 18, after the word "itself", insert the word "not."

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I tried to strike out the word "not" at one place in this bill in order to equalize all modes of transportation and procedure before the Interstate Commerce Commission and was defeated. I now ask you to insert the word "not" in line 18, page 240, so as to equalize in a small way charter, leasing, and exchange rights of the different modes of transportation under the law, and give water carriers the same privileges and exemptions as other carriers are given in the bill.

You will notice, on page 240, subsection (d), of section 302, there is a provision which protects railroads, express companies, and motor carriers when they do transfer, collection, and delivery services on water in terminal areas. They are specifically excluded from regulation, and from line 15 on page 240, to line 2, on page 241, you will find an attempt to make assurance doubly sure by a further provision excluding the railroads and motor carriers from regulation when they use water facilities in their terminal areas.

My amendment is to place the word "not" after the word "itself" on page 241, line 18. The paragraph begins "for the purposes of this paragraph a person which, under a charter, lease, or other agreement, furnishes a vessel to another person, for compensation for use in the transportation of property of such other person shall itself be considered to be engaged in the transportation of such property as a contract carrier by water." This is clearly a discrimination and an intended discrimination against contract water carriers in favor of other carriers.

It reads a little further on that "the performance of services within terminal areas, and so forth, so far as contract water carriers are concerned, are banned unless authorized and regulated by Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. Chairman, most barge line operations are more or less seasonal. It is a common practice of every barge line, when its particular business is dull, to lease a number of its barges to some other operator or shipper during the dull season. The same is done with towboats. Surplus equipment is freely leased for long and short periods of time under an open market which has been developed in certain navigation centers.

This bill would absolutely destroy this practice by contract carriers in that it specifically provides as to contract carriers that wherever any person leases or charters any equipment such as barges, towboats, or other vessels to another person for use in the transportation of the property of such other person it becomes a carrier engaged in the transportation of the property and subject to all of the regulations set forth in the act. That this is utterly unfair is best illustrated by the fact that no such provision exists in the law today with respect to facilities of railroad carriers and motor carriers. Railroads have always been free to lease surplus equipment without such leases or such operations becoming subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a common occurrence for industrial plants to lease locomotives and other equipment of railroads and for railroads to lease such equipment to one another. However, when it comes to providing regulation for water carriers this bill imposes such onerous restrictions upon it as to make this practically impossible in their case.

For example, a barge line may want to lease a towboat to some private company for a period of six months. Under this law it would automatically become a carrier subject to regulation as to the property which may be carried for such company. It would be responsible for the operations and its charges for leasing the equipment would be subject to regulation by the Commission. If it should lease the towboat to another carrier it would apparently be responsible for the acts of such carrier. The bill is capable of interpretation to the effect that the charges of the lessee for performing these services and responsibility for its operations would also be the responsibility of the lessor. This is done by the language in sections 302 (d) and (e).

Under the present law railroads can and do frequently make contracts with lighterage and floatage owners in various port terminals by which the other contracting party agrees to make delivery of goods for the railroads. They also employ local trucking or cartage companies for the same purpose. They also make contracts for handling of properties over wharves and docks by private stevedores and handling companies. These are all matters of private contracts which the Commission does not regulate. If the services are being performed directly or indirectly by a shipper patronizing such railroad, then the law provides that allowance for the service shall be no more than is just and reasonable, and the Commission, upon complaint, may determine what is a reasonable allowance. The same thing may be done by motor carriers under the Motor Carrier Act. However, under the proposed bill the services performed by the agent for a water carrier becomes subject to regulation, and the agents in such cases would have to file tariffs and make these subject to the regulatory act.

To illustrate, a local lighter operator might have a contract with the Pennsylvania Railroad to perform lighterage service. They can make this contract under such terms as they please, and the Commission would have no jurisdiction to regulate it. However, if they made a contract to make local hauls for a water carrier, they would have to file tariffs and become subject to regulation. The obvious unfairness of this is typical of a number of things that may be found in this bill.

Numerous commodities are transported by contract carriers by water on the Great Lakes moving to seaboard for export and most of these are fully exempt from regulation under the bill. However, the inland-waterways operation on the Mississippi River and its tributaries and also other inland waterways are also engaged in handling commodities of the same character in competition in the markets of the world with the commodities handled by the Great Lakes carriers. All these would be made subject to the regulatory provisions of the bill with some few exceptions which may be able to come within a very narrow definition of bulk carriers in section 303 (b) of the bill. This not only would affect the competitive producing areas but also producers of commodities in areas remote from the Great Lakes. As an example, the products of Kansas and Oklahoma which are today available for barge transportation through Kansas City and by rail barge through St. Louis and Memphis; nearly all of these would be regulated. Their ability to compete in the world markets with such commodities will certainly be affected by the regulation to the extent that it imposes burdens which are not imposed upon the Great Lakes carriers.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHENS. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. In other words, this is just another example of the discrimination and partiality that runs all through this bill. A man with a little barge who rents it to someone else is treated as a common carrier, while the railroads have a right to lease and rent their cars at will.

Mr. KITCHENS. Absolutely, and it justifies and is in line with the statements and efforts of the gentlemen who are in favor of this bill who admit that the main object of it is not necessarily to help the railroads but to remove the special, private difficulties of the water carriers, protecting them from their own destruction, the competition among themselves. They say that the water carriers are cutting their throats by their own competition, and they must be saved by coordination, a sort of liquidating appeasement. That is what Japan says about China and that is the declared reason Japan has gone into China—to clean up, protect, regulate, coordinate, and unify China for China's good, and keep Chinamen from cutting their own throats. Such humanitarianism savors of Mussolini in Ethiopia, and smacks of the Czechoslovakian Munich. This bill on every occasion strikes at, attempts to stifle and shackle water carriers and discriminate against them.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHENS. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. LEA. I will state to the gentleman that I have no objection to his amendment. I concede that this provision, as it stands, goes too far, and the gentleman's amendment will help to adjust it.

Mr. KITCHENS. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PITTENGER: Page 245, line 3, after the word "time", strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, however, That nothing in this part shall apply to contract carriers by water of commodities in bulk when such contract carriers transport, on open deck or otherwise, as incidental to their main cargo or cargoes, automobiles for common carriers by water."

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, under the present conditions—and I am talking now about the Great Lakes—contract carriers who carry bulk commodities, or who carry commodities in bulk, have developed the practice of carrying automobiles on their open decks for common carriers. The purpose of subsection (b) on page 244 is to exempt contract carriers by water of commodities in bulk from the provisions of this proposed law. The purpose of the amendment is to make certain that those contract carriers can continue to carry automobiles on the open decks without subjecting themselves to the provisions of this law that might bring them under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. If they do not carry these automobiles as the present practice obtains, then the people who ship the automobiles, and the pepole who handle the automobiles, the people who unload them at the terminals, and the people who buy them must all pay an increased price, because they have lost this economy. The amendment simply provides that the present practice of these carriers of commodities in bulk may continue so that they may carry automobiles without making them subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission if this bill becomes a law. I offer this amendment on my own responsibility, because not more than a couple of days ago a dozen automobile dealers wired me calling attention to the fact that unless this provision is put in they may not be able to continue the arrangement they now have, of having the automobiles shipped on the Great Lakes where freight rates are economical, to the advantage of the people who buy these automobiles, to the advantage of those who handle them, and last but not least, to the advantage of the men who are employed at the terminals in unloading and taking care of them. I hope, in the interest of these people, that this amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced after careful consideration of this matter that this amendment should not go into the bill. As the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] has pointed out, it frequently happens that on the Great Lakes a bulk carrier of coal would be going up the Lakes, say, to Duluth. If at that particular time some automobiles have been gathered up that cannot be handled in the regular boats provided for that purpose, a deal will be made by the person undertaking to transport the automobiles with a bulk carrier on the Lakes to put the automobiles on the top of the deck of the bulk carrier and haul them to the port of destination.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. In a moment. The exemptions for bulk carriers which have been written into this bill are all predicated upon the proposition that their operations are not in substantial competition with other carriers. Lake carriers of bulk commodities, as, for instance, coal, grain, stone, and ore, charge rates very much less than could be charged by other carriers, and there is no substantial competition. There is no reason to regulate them. But the carriage of automobiles is highly competitive. It is in direct competition with other carriers that transport automobiles by rail and by highway. To my mind the extension of this exemption to permit the carrying on of that operation would be directly contrary to the whole policy of the exemption of bulk carriers laid down in the bill.

I know that it may be said that the purchaser of these automobiles will be injured if this amendment is not put into the act. My information is that the man buying an automobile is generally charged a freight charge that is based on the rate by rail, so I seriously doubt whether or not any saving would be reflected to the purchaser of the automobile. But whether that be true or not, this amendment, as I said before, gets clear outside of any justifiable exemption based on a lack of competition, and for that reason should not be included in the bill.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. RYAN. Does the gentleman realize that his amendment provides for an exemption only in case the bulk carriers carry for common carriers, and that the common carriers who employ the bulk carriers to do this carrying are all under the regulation and subjected to the same regulation as other common carriers carrying automobiles in the same way on the Great Lakes and, therefore, the gentleman's argument falls to the ground, that they are not subjected to regulation now?

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, I do not agree with that. The carrying of these automobiles on any sort of vessel is the action of a common carrier. The purpose of the amendment is to exempt the carriage of these automobiles, and the effect of that would be to take that carriage operation out of the regulations of the act.

Mr. RYAN. But they are regulated now as common carriers because these bulk carriers would be employed by the common carriers.

Mr. HALLECK. That is not the purpose of the amendment. There could be no other purpose for offering the amendment than that the transportation of these automobiles would not be subject to the control of this act. It is sought to exempt them and to have the automobiles carried even as coal would be carried, without requirement for minimum-rate regulation provided in the act.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment of the gentleman from Duluth because throughout the history of the Interstate Commerce Commission its major policy has been to increase rates—not lower them. We know if we give them control over shipping on the Great Lakes it will increase our rates in the Northwest, not only to the farmer but to the businessman in general, to the shipper, and thus to the consumer.

Visualize with me the incongruity of this Commission increasing rates 10 cents per ton on low-volatile West Virginia coal—this is something which you men from the East are interested in—when one of the carriers in the East experienced great difficulty, with the best of bookkeeping, to keep its earnings below 20 percent on its stock.

Before these increased rates were made effective, the Chairman of the National Bituminous Coal Commission, Mr. Hosford, gave due warning of their effect to this feeble body, the Interstate Commerce Commission, in these words:

> The power to propose variations in rates, to place fuel orders, and to dictate the prices for fuel coal, in too many cases in the past have been exerted to extract from a bankrupt industry the very last penny which could be exacted to fill the coffers of the railroads.

But what Mr. Hosford has said about coal has been repeated time and again in respect to the farmers of Minnesota and the businessmen of Minnesota and the Northwest. Minnesota farmers pay a 110-percent higher rate than the Canadian wheat grower, situated just a few miles north, across an invisible boundary line. This is the same Commission which lends its approval to these notorious excesses and abuses and now wants to take control of water transportation and busses.

Listen to these variations in what the farmer in Canada pays for freight on wheat and what the farmer in the Northwest pays: From East Grand Forks to Minneapolis, a distance via the Great Northern Railroad of 328 miles, the cost is $4.52 per ton, or a ton-mile cost of $0.0137.

From Winnipeg, Canada, to Port Arthur via the Canadian Pacific, 424 miles, or nearly 100 miles farther, the cost is $2.80 per ton, or a ton-mile rate of $0.0066, or 110-percent higher rate for our farmers than for the Canadian farmers, and we want to turn, or rather they and the railroads are asking us to turn control of water rates over to them, too.

It should occasion no surprise, with such distorted freight rates throughout the Nation, set up by the Interstate Commerce Commission, that our business has dried up. In my own district in Minneapolis the flour-milling business has gone down 5,000,000 barrels per year because of these high and unfair rates, and business is moving out, with increasing relief rolls, economic unrest, and bankruptcy, both private and public, staring us in the face. This is hard to understand in a land as favored as ours with its fertile soil, its forests and minerals, and wealth of natural resources.

Between the year 1924 and the year 1933, or a period of 10 years, United States wheat exports shrunk 1,333,000,000 bushels as compared with those of the Dominion of Canada. Think of it! Little Canada outshipping us 1,333,000,000 bushels.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not a fact that the Canadian farmer carries his grain from Saskatchewan, in the western country, to the seaboard at about one-half the cost that the American farmer pays on our railroads?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; at less than half the cost. As a result of these pyramided freight rates the farmers of the United States, principally those resident in the State of Minnesota and the Northwest, including Nebraska and Kansas, were driven out of the European grain markets after the 1932 scourge overtook them. The value of these lost wheat exports was in excess of one and one-quarter billion dollars per year. Still we argue for such a bill as this, which would continue that situation and, what is more, would make it worse if allowed to pass without these vital and needed amendments.

Minnesota and the Northwest could easily pull out of the slump we are in if we were not hamstrung by the Interstate Commerce Commission; if we were allowed to utilize our matchless wealth of raw materials and natural resources; if we were not hung on the altar of greed and avarice, first by this Commission, then by the Pittsburgh-plus plan, and now by what is known as the multiple-basing-point system of price fixing on iron-ore products, of which we have a virtual monopoly, but have not been smart enough to make use of advantageously. A pertinent question for the people of the Northwest, and especially of Minnesota, to ask would seem to be, "Where were our Congressmen and Senators when these plans and programs were being formulated? Why were we allowed to be so hamstrung, and how much longer are we to suffer in silence while our great natural advantages and resources are drained and dissipated?"

As an illustration of our situation, allow me to quote just one item and to show how the rates and regulations set up by the I. C. C. serve to bankrupt our citizenry and to deprive the eastern coal operators and miners of much business, because of the excessive prices we are forced to pay for their products, thus making the use of substitutes necessary.

You know the price of the Pocahontas varieties of stove-sized coal ranges from $3 to $3.20 per ton at the mine, whereas the residents of Minneapolis are forced to pay $14 per ton at our residences, or an increase of about $11 per ton between the mine and the consumer. What becomes of the difference?

The railroad freight tariff quotes a rate of $2.06 per ton from both the New River and Pocahontas mining regions to the lake transshipping ports of Toledo and Sandusky; plus 8 cents per ton for delivery to the lake steamer. The average distance from the above mining regions to the lake ports aforenamed is 400 miles. In railroad parlance this figures out a little more than 5 mills per ton-mile. Now I have a letter received from one of the steamship operators on the Great Lakes, quoting a rate of 45 cents per ton in full vessel load quantities. Now the expense of transfer at Duluth, reloading in railroad cars and including the railroad freight to Minneapolis and St. Paul, aggregates $1.81 per ton, or a total charge from the mines to the Twin Cities of $4.40 per ton.

What becomes of the difference? Well, theoretically, the difference of nearly $7 per ton goes to the railroads, because the I. C. C. has said the coal dealer must charge a price for his coal which is based on the all-rail freight rate from the eastern coal fields to Minneapolis, no matter what the actual cost of getting it up there is, so if the coal company happens to own the shipping and distributing facilities, as many of them do, they simply pocket the difference and neither the railroad stockholders nor the railroad employees get any benefit from the spurious artificial rate which is set up by the I. C. C. in the name of justice. If this is justice, then it is time we were praying to the Lord for a few new ideals or ideas in this great and good land of ours. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes, and I would like to have those 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] stated very clearly the reasons for the exemption provided in this bill, and why automobiles should not be made an exception.

At the present time there is regulation of the common-carrier service on the Great Lakes. There is no reason why a bulk carrier who is entirely exempt from regulation, should be permitted to destroy the service of the common carrier. The bulk carrier does not conform to any schedules. He goes when it is convenient for him. He takes automobiles through contract with the common carrier, and the buyer of the automobile usually pays the common-carrier rate. So there is a profit that does not go to the consumer.

But the main thing involved is that we have established here a consistent, logical line of distinction between exempt carriers and common carriers. In this case in which water transportation is unquestionably cheaper than rail transportation, we have provided for an exemption. In other cases where there is substantial competition, we have provided for regulation. There is provision that the Interstate Commerce Commission, on the application of a carrier who shows his transportation is without substantial competition, may bring himself within the exemption. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 245, line 8, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add: "Provided, however, That this subsection shall also apply to both cotton, tobacco, and other agricultural commodities."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an important amendment and of vital interest to many members of the committee. The section under consideration provides for the exemption of contract carriers of bulk commodities from the provisions of title III of this bill. Contract carriers who carry oil and coal would be exempt from the provisions of this bill. I come from the cotton section of the country. Under the terms of the bill, baled cotton is not exempt, yet it can be carried on barges just as well as coal. Rice, sugar, and tobacco are not exempt, yet they may be carried on barges by contract carriers. I quote from the section:

This subsection shall apply only in the case of commodities in bulk which are (in accordance with the existing custom of the trade in the handling and transportation of such commodities as of June 1, 1939) loaded and carried without wrappers or containers and received and delivered by the carrier without mark or count.

In other words, contract carriers of coal, for instance, are exempt from the provisions of this act; but cotton baled in packages of 500 pounds on the average, which carry just as easily on barges, because it is wrapped, would not be exempt; neither would sugar nor rice nor tobacco, and there may be other agricultural commodities of like character.

As a result of the ruthless policy pursued by the railroads, the steamboats disappeared from the Mississippi River in the 1880's. During the World War we found we needed the river traffic and there was instituted the barge line. The barge line has gone along and has carried more and more freight—and I speak particularly with respect to the Mississippi River and the Ohio River. Now many municipalities and many communities have erected their barge-line facilities and terminals. If cotton is not exempt from the provisions of this bill, the small dealer would be discriminated against in favor of the large cotton buyer. Alexander Clayton and other large cotton buyers own their own private barges. The Standard Oil Co. owns its own private carriers, and the oil they carry is exempt.

Thus we are placed in the anomalous situation of appropriating millions of dollars for the improvement of our inland waterways, mostly for the benefit of the private carriers and bulk-contract carriers. The great steel companies, and rightly so, the great coal companies, the great oil companies use these facilities and are exempt from the provisions of this bill. Contract carriers of bulk commodities use them and are exempt from the provisions of the bill. Together they carry about 90 percent of the water traffic. The average citizen, the small-business man, as the gentleman from New York said the other day in speaking against the water provisions of this bill, will be discriminated against. I do not know whether they can carry cotton in every case by contract or not; I do not know whether they can carry sugar, rice, and other agricultural commodities, but my point is that if the coal operators, if the steel operators are permitted to carry cargoes in bulk by their own private boats, there should be no discrimination against the small-business man who is unable to have his own carriers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes in order to answer questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I see no harm that can be done by giving the right to the contract carrier, if he wants to make such a contract, to carry cotton and other agricultural commodities. If he does not want to make a contract, he cannot be forced to make it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I merely want to observe again that the gentleman from Mississippi has pointed out another example of favoritism and discrimination in shipping against agriculture that runs through every line and paragraph of this bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I agree with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that millions of pounds of wool produced in southwestern Texas shipped by water to Boston, Mass., cannot pay the rail rates; but even wool, packed in those huge sacks weighing two or three hundred pounds, will not come under the provisions of this bill. They ought to be included along with the commodities the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Wool should be included in the amendment. I may say further that freight rates are reflected to the consumers. If we can get a cheaper rate by water to the factories of North Carolina, South Carolina, and the ports of New England the consumers of the country would be benefited and protected. The same would apply to the consumers of sugar, rice, and other agricultural commodities.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman tell me how he is going to get a cheaper rate by water to the factories of North Carolina?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I answer the gentleman by saying that since the barge line was instituted, unquestionably we have gotten better rates on cotton, better rates on sugar, and better rates on rice, and I want to preserve the benefit of these facilities.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. I may state that the Alexander Clayton Co., one of the largest cotton concerns of the world, has its private barge line. They transport cotton for $1.25 a bale from Camden, Ark., to New Orleans. The railroads, for the same haul, charge $3 a bale. The farmers should get the same benefit.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As I stated, the private operator, the large carrier, is exempt from the provisions of this bill. We place ourselves in the indefensible attitude of allowing these privileges to these private concerns, but denying them to the farmers and the public generally.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. Chairman, the reason why cotton should not be excepted is the same as the reason given in reference to automobiles. We have a logical distinction between bulk carriage which usually involves particular equipment, so that traffic is not in substantial competition with the products carried by common carriers or contract carriers.

The bulk carriers on the Mississippi and elsewhere are largely privately owned and are not subject to regulation. That is true of the Standard Oil Co., for instance. May I call attention also to the fact that the Inland Waterways Corporation on the Mississippi River came into being on account of legislation which was enacted by this body. We believe it has done as well as circumstances permitted. It is a common carrier engaged in the carriage of cotton and other products of the South. It deserves the protection that this bill gives. If there are sufficient facts to support a decision for the exemption of cotton, that may be granted under section (e), page 246, of the bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Does the section to which the gentleman refers repeal the previous sections where it is stated that the products cannot be marked, baled, or wrapped?

Mr. LEA. No. Section (e) is not subject to that limitation. It provides an additional method of exemption. If the contract carrier can show that there is a requirement for special equipment and that the shipment in bulk is not actually and substantially competitive, it is entitled to the exemption. There is no hardship in not granting this exemption to any commodity. The Inland Waterways Corporation and others are giving good service there now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITTINGTON and Mr. WARREN) there were—ayes 48, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRINGTON: Amend Senate bill 2009 by striking all of section 309, beginning on page 268, and entitled "Certificates of Public Convenience and Necessity and Permits."

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to protect the interest of the little fellow who wishes to engage in water transportation. The present language of the bill requires that he obtain a "certificate of public convenience and necessity" from the Interstate Commerce Commission before he would be licensed to operate. On the face of it this may sound simple and reasonable enough, but you know and I know it is a most difficult and expensive proceeding. It takes time, lawyers, and money—something the little fellow is never long on.

Let us see just what the little man is up against. First, he consults his local lawyer and writes in for an application blank. The burden is on the applicant to show cause why he should be licensed. Therefore, he must submit a brief setting forth his ability to serve the shipper and also the need of the shipper to be served. His application goes into Washington and then the fun, or the agony, begins.

Under the practice of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the railroads are advised that a new man wants to get into the transportation field and have they any objections. It so happens that the railroads maintain a high-powered battery of attorneys right here in Washington, hired by the year, for the purpose of objecting to any and all newcomers in the transportation field, and let me assure you they are expert objectors. They go into action, file protests, and demand hearings. It becomes a game of fire and fall back, of protesting and stalling, and the railroad attorneys are past masters of this technique.

The fight for his certificate develops into a long and expensive undertaking for the little man. The chances are that eventually, after practically exhausting his resources, he will be denied permission to operate, and if he should happen to win he probably has not enough money left to go into business anyway.

My friends, I ask you to support this amendment for two reasons: First, to relieve the little man of all this expense and agony before he is allowed to operate in competition with the billion-dollar railroad monopoly; second, to maintain the freedom of our inland waterways. These waterways are God-given, if you please. They belong to the people. Why in the name of justice should we pile up a mountain of red tape and difficulty and expense before the people are permitted to use their own precious heritage? [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON].

Mr. Chairman, from the first speech made in opposition to this bill on last Friday it has been characterized and successfully so as a railroad bill. Every word in it is in their behalf, and the bill has been presented, I am sure, just like they would like to have it.

Apropos of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON] I wish to read to the committee a concrete case that has come to me in an unsought letter, dated July 22, from a prominent attorney in my district, Mr. Dink James, of Greenville, N. C. He says:

> I have just read in today's News and Observer the report of your speech in opposition to the placing of water transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission. I certainly hope that you will succeed in your efforts to prevent this. If the people in the South and other sections know anything of the technical workings of the Interstate Commerce Commission, they would realize that in supporting a bill of this kind they are cutting their own throats.
> I am registered to practice before the Interstate Commerce Commission and know something of its procedure. I recently applied for a franchise for a small bus-line operator. While I am sure that this man's operations would not in the least affect any railroad or any other bus operator in this section, when I appeared at the hearing I was amazed to find nine of the highest-paid lawyers in the State appearing for various bus and railroad companies which protested the granting of the franchise. I learned from my contacts with these men that it was now the policy of the railroad and bus companies to protest every application. I am sure that they will fight every application for grants of authority to operate on waterways. The small-business man cannot stand this sort of opposition. The result of this attitude on the part of transportation agencies, and I believe the purpose now, is to create an iron-clad monopoly. The public and particularly the "small man" would be the sufferer.

Mr. Chairman, talk about securing a certificate of public convenience and necessity to operate, as the gentleman from Iowa said, on the God-given natural resources of this country! The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] read to the House a few days ago where in the very Articles of Confederation it was solemnly proclaimed that the waterways of this Nation would be free to all. I beg you to pause here this afternoon and visualize what we are doing when we set up here for the benefit of the railroads a monopoly on every single form of transportation that will finally strangle and engulf the producers and consumers of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON].

Mr. Chairman, if it could have been said when consideration began that this was a bill for the benefit of the railroads, at the rate it is being loaded down with amendments and emasculated, it looks to me like when the House gets through with it, it will be a bill for the benefit of the water carriers, plus a whole lot of exemptions for agriculture.

Nature has not been very even-handed in the distribution of her favors. I live in a State that is a thousand miles from any deep-water port. We are shut out of those ports. We cannot get our products into San Francisco, Los Angeles, Houston, and Galveston, and we are almost shut out of Chicago. We have to depend wholly on rail carriers and the rail carriers are hog-tied to such an extent they are unable to put into effect rates that will get our products to the market.

The instance I am about to give you is a common one. We have in my home city the largest steel company between Chicago and the Pacific coast, owned by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

A few years ago in anticipation of the railroad company running from my own city to Houston, the Colorado Southern, getting fourth-section relief, the railroad company having filed such an application, the steel company built a large warehouse in Houston to house the steel products which it expected to be able to ship to Houston when the railroad company got fourth-section relief to meet the water rates into the port of Houston from the Atlantic seaboard. After the application had been pending for 2 years it was denied. The steel company had to close its warehouse at Houston and withdraw clear up to Fort Worth and Amarillo in northern Texas before it could get away from the cheap backhaul of the water rates.

That is the story of the whole intermountain West. I want to say to my western friends here whose religion is opposition to repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause that we are absolutely shut in from the world. You have these cheap rates at the water ports, and are concentrating the population of the United States at the deep-water ports; 55 percent of the population living within 50 miles of them. You are drying up the interior of the country simply because our railroads are not permitted to meet the water rates. Our industries are going to the coasts.

There has been a lot of talk here about the long-and-short-haul clause today. Let me say that while I have no license to speak for the railroads, I undertake to say that if you offered the railroads of this country a choice between putting water transportation under joint regulation with them under the Interstate Commerce Commission, or repealing just one sentence of the Interstate Commerce Act, the long-and-short-haul clause, there is no doubt on earth which choice they would take. They would say, "Repeal the long-and-short-haul clause." On the other hand, if you made the same proposition to the water lines of this country there is no doubt about what they would do. If you put them up against the choice of joint regulation with the railroads or just having the long-and-short-haul clause repealed they would be running here to Congress with their tongues out to be put under joint regulation.

You talk about cheap water transportation. It is the greatest myth in this country. Inland water transportation in this country is the dearest form of transportation. It would be impossible if it were not for the fact that the bulk of cost of inland water transportation is paid for out of the Federal Treasury. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, it is true that we have heard from the opponents of the bill about this being a railroad bill. Those gentlemen first started out citing Secretary Wallace, but when we cited the President of the United States they dropped Mr. Secretary Wallace.

In the two speeches we have heard in favor of this amendment we have heard about the small man being driven out of business, yet under the provisions of this bill, which apparently my friends have not read, the small companies come in under what is known as the grandfather clause if they were in business on July 1. That is a fair illustration of the opposition to it. I say to you that whether a man is a small man or a large man, if he goes into the public business of hauling passengers and hauling freight, he must have financial responsibility.

With our friends on the opposition is my good friend from Virginia, Judge BLAND, who comes up here with a bill similar to this, putting the water carriers under regulation.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. I would not say "similar to this" by any means. It relates only to inland carriers and puts them under the Maritime Commission.

Mr. BULWINKLE. What other provisions are there affecting the inland carriers?

Mr. BLAND. It has no provision with respect to certificates of convenience and necessity.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Would the gentleman just let anybody haul? Would he just let anybody go loose at any time?

Then there is the gentleman from New York, who always opposes regulation.

Now another situation has arisen. All of a sudden yesterday the gentlemen who will vote against this bill in any form discovered that they ought to do something for labor and, therefore, they wanted to do something for labor. Now we have gotten down to doing something for the small man.

There possibly will be consideration of the wage and hour bill introduced by my colleague from North Carolina if the Rules Committee reports it out. Let us see what happens to that. That does something to labor. Let us see how they stand on it when it comes up here in the House, and I would like to check up on them.

Mr. Chairman, you can talk all you please about the railroads doing this but I say to you that the President of the United States and other men who have studied this question are the ones that did this. You can put all the demagoguery you please into it but that does not make one particle of difference in the end, for sooner or later the citizens of this country will realize that where you regulate a carrier it is but fair and just that all doing a competing business be regulated or else that regulation be taken off entirely. So, I say to you who voted for that amendment a little while ago, when your shippers at home find out what the additional freight will be they will be lobbying, too, not in the interest of the railroads but in their own interest. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 309, beginning on page 268, and entitled "Certificates of public convenience and necessity and permits."

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TERRY. This amendment refers only to water carriers as far as eliminating the certificates of convenience and necessity is concerned?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment refers only to section 309, which has to do with water transportation.

The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARRINGTON) there were—ayes 46, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: Page 240, commencing at line 15, strike out the paragraph ending on page 241, line 2, and insert, "persons acting in the capacity as agents for common carriers by water, subject to this act, in providing towage, floatage, lighterage, car, ferry, or transfer or terminal operations, shall not be deemed common carriers by water, but each such operation shall be deemed to be that of the carrier for which it is performed."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may I state to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee and the members of the Committee of the Whole that I propose to offer three amendments here, all of them directed toward the practical application of regulation of water carriers on the inland waters. They are intended—and I hope the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee will believe it—to relieve these carriers of utterly useless, needless restrictions now contained in this bill, restrictions placed upon them such as are not placed upon any other form of transportation.

Now let us consider this first one. On page 240, commencing at line 15, you will find language which relates to the performance of delivery service by water within terminal areas. It permits transfer, collection, and delivery services by water in terminal areas, but by a very, very clear implication it does not permit them outside a terminal area.

Now, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this situation and see if I am wrong about it. I doubt if the committee ever gave it any consideration. I will have to cite an example of the practices of inland water carriers. For example, A and B are both common or contract carriers, as the case may be, subject to this act. A has a tow of barges bound downstream on the Mississippi River, and that tow is delayed by weather conditions. It may be a couple of days late. This same A also has in New Orleans Harbor a tow of, we will say, six barges already laden, waiting to be forwarded north-bound by the powerboat which is bringing the downstream barges with it, and which is 2 days late. A does not want to delay the upstream voyage of the barges he already has loaded in New Orleans.

He has no other towboat of his own except the towboat which is bringing downstream barges, which is 2 days late. What does he do? He communicates with another carrier named B, who has an idle towboat at New Orleans, and he contracts with carrier B for the use of that towboat to start those barges, already laden in New Orleans, upstream to get them going on time. Then when the upstream load of barges meets the downstream load of barges the two towboats interchange and B's contracted towboat takes the downstream-bound barges back to New Orleans and the other towboat goes on upstream with the barges which left New Orleans on their way upstream.

This bill prevents that, and why it does I cannot understand, for this bill provides that B's towboat, which is contracted for by A, is itself a common carrier. As a matter of fact, it is merely hired for a special purpose for a short time, and things like that are happening on the inland waterways hundreds and hundreds of times.

My amendment proposes to strike out this language, substitute new language which will limit the regulation at least within reasonable bounds, and it reads:

Persons acting in the capacity as agents for common carriers by water, subject to this act, in providing towage, floatage, lighterage, car, ferry, or transfer or terminal operations, shall not be deemed common carriers by water, but each such operation shall be deemed to be that of the carrier for which it is performed.

I cannot understand why anybody should object to this.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I think we must realize the practical necessity of the section of the bill which the gentleman proposes to strike out. This simply provides for the regulation of those who take part in terminal-area delivery. We have express companies, for instance, who have their own vehicles for delivery, the railroad companies, who may have pick-up-and-delivery service in the terminals, the water carriers, who may also have delivery, and the motor vehicles. It is important to place regulation of those various carriers so that there will not be duplication of the regulation of each type. For instance, if a man operates for the express company, he comes under part 1; and, if for the water company, under part 3. That preserves the same regulation for the carrier and its terminal delivery. It is just a convenience, and it is in accordance with the present practice of the railroads and the express companies, and will be true of these forwarding companies. It is a convenient method of handling a practical situation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman deny that this particular provision as applied to water carriers inflicts on them a grave inconvenience and prevents them from carrying out a perfectly sound commercial practice?

Mr. LEA. It is purely optional. They are not required to do this service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, well; in effect, you forbid them.

Mr. LEA. Oh, no; it is optional. They can do as they please.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the case I cited, what is the contractor to do. He cannot hire the towboat from B because that towboat under your provision becomes a common carrier.

Mr. LEA. That towboat service is exempt in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The towboat belongs to another carrier who has it surplus for the moment. It is a practice that obtains all the time. One of the virtues of water transportation is its flexibility, and this bill is written to destroy its flexibility.

Mr. LEA. I am advised by the drafting service that this bill does exactly what the gentleman wants to have done. This provision is a practical, desirable arrangement to facilitate business as actually conducted today. There is no innovation about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the gentleman is confining his remarks to terminal areas.

Mr. LEA. Then, if you go beyond the terminal area——

Mr. WADSWORTH. This towboat which I mentioned has to go 200 miles up the Mississippi River.

Mr. LEA. And, therefore, it is subject to regulation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it is hired by another man and the other man is the carrier. He is the bill-of-lading man, not the B towboat he took over. Why should you have two common carriers doing the same operation?

Mr. LEA. I hope we do not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You do under this bill.

Mr. LEA. I think not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The B towboat becomes a common carrier when it leaves the terminal area.

Mr. LEA. I have had no opportunity to read the gentleman's amendment. On account of interruptions I have heard little of what he said. That is one of the difficulties we have. Amendments, technical in nature, are passed up to us before we have any opportunity to examine them. Ordinarily, as in this instance, the amendments are not presented for inspection before offered. The committee desires to consider carefully every question brought before it, but we are at a disadvantage here when amendments are thrust on us and we are asked to pass on them in a moment. If the Committee of the Whole will stand by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, we will do everything we can to bring just and practical legislation out of this bill. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. Yes.

Mr. PATRICK. I have asked this time from the chairman of the committee so that I may ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who is an industrious member of the committee, if in these months the committee has been considering the bill he has ever pointed that out and brought it to the attention of the committee until this moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had no chance to. I was not a member of the subcommittee. I had no chance to study this thing at all until the bill was prepared. I was comparatively ignorant of inland water transportation, but information has come to me pointing out one thing after another which discriminates against the flexibility of inland water transportation, and this is one of them, and I have tried to correct it. That is all.

Mr. PATRICK. Did not the gentleman from New York have every opportunity that every other member of the committee had?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The subcommittee held no hearings that were printed, and I dare say never studied the subject.

Mr. LEA. Indeed we did study it. I have asked a representative of the drafting service, and he advises me that what the gentleman's amendment proposes is already taken care of in the bill. I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEA) there were—ayes 56, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: On page 241——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I intended to offer on page 241 was the exact complement of the amendment which has just been rejected. The amendment which was just rejected applied to common carriers. Had it carried I would have offered an amendment on page 241 which would have produced the same result with respect to contract carriers. So I ask permission to withdraw that amendment, and I offer another amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment referred to will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: Page 247, line 24, after the word "harbors", strike out the remainder of the paragraph ending at line 2 on page 248, and insert "or (2) to transportation by small craft of not more than 100 tons carrying capacity or not more than 100 indicated horsepower, or to vessels carrying passengers only and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers, or to ferries, or to the movement by water carriers of contractors' equipment employed or to be employed in construction or repair for such water carrier, or to the operation of salvors."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph, found on page 247, is one which authorizes the Commission to exempt from the provisions of this regulatory act certain types of vessels.

My especial interest begins in the language at line 24, at the bottom of the page. An examination of that language discloses the fact that a 50-ton vessel is to be exempted, or a vessel carrying passengers only, and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers.

May I again call the attention of the gentleman from California to the situation that exists in life on the coasts and on the rivers, which I think, with all due deference, the committee does not understand. I contend that the language is faulty and brings under regulation carriers which it is inconceivable the Congress should desire to regulate.

I call attention particularly to the provision, "or by small craft of not more than 50 tons carrying capacity, or to vessels carrying passengers only and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers."

This will leave under strict regulation a mosquito fleet of literally thousands of small luggers on every lake, bay, sound, river, bayou, and canal in continental United States. Many of those boats are what are known as family boats. They may exceed 50 tons capacity. They are the sole property and means of livelihood of hundreds of families. Father and son navigate them together and propel the craft. It would also include little power boats of 50 horsepower or less, which do not carry any freight at all, but which do tow the barges of others in what are termed "short trades." Those would include luggers towing oysters from beds in Virginia to Maryland ports, small towboats towing oil or sugarcane to refineries, boats towing pulpwood to paper mills, and a thousand other small trades generally accessories to local industries. Many of those boats operate wholly within a State, but are in competition with others that move across State lines and occasionally they themselves make an interstate voyage. They offer little competition to common carriers by railroad or motor vehicles or other water carriers. Their inclusion would burden the administration of the law without commensurate public gain. In fact, there would be no public gain.

I propose that there should be exempted small craft——

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman yield? There was so much confusion that I did not understand what the gentleman was saying. I wanted to find out the purpose of the amendment. Is one purpose to change the exemption to 100 tons?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To 100 tons; yes.

Mr. LEA. And what is the other?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Transportation by small craft of not more than 100 tons carrying capacity or not more than 100 indicated horsepower, or vessels carrying passengers only, and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers, or to ferries, or to the movement by water carriers of contractors' equipment. That latter does not go in commerce. That is a private operation—not commerce.

Mr. LEA. Of course I have no authority from the committee to concede that amendment——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are the heavens about to fall?

Mr. LEA. The chairman is willing to agree to that amendment. I think that a larger exemption is justified.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I faint! I swoon! [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is agreed to.

There was no objection and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SOUTH: On page 238, beginning in line 20, strike out all of title II, part III.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Does the gentleman desire to reach an agreement as to time on this amendment?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that an agreement as to time cannot be made at this stage because there has been no general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. An agreement can be reached by unanimouse consent.

Mr. LEA. I would be pleased if we could limit debate to 1 hour on this amendment, to be divided equally between those for and against the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think we ought to have some understanding as to the number of speeches to be made within the time. To be limited to 2 minutes is hardly worth the effort of rising.

Mr. SOUTH. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I am going to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. I do not know whether it will be granted, but I am going to submit the request.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be limited to 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, that is to be divided equally between the proponents and the opponents?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will use its best endeavors to see that the time is divided equally.

The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from California that 20 Members have already requested time.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from California that time be limited to 2 hours.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, after canvassing the situation I wonder if the gentleman from Virginia would not agree to 1 hour and 40 minutes.

Mr. BLAND. That would be agreeable to me.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour and 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not if the same privilege is granted to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

The CHAIRMAN. I do not believe we can couple the two requests.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, I think everyone understands in the first place that the amendment I am offering is not a committee amendment, although I am a member of the committee. I think everyone understands also that the purpose of this amendment is to strike from the bill title II, part III, which is the part having to do with water transportation, or placing water transportation under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This is the sole purpose of the amendment.

It is true that the Wadsworth amendment was adopted after it had been amended by the Murdock amendment, and I voted for it. I and others who view this problem as I do voted for it because we did not, of course, know what the final outcome of this amendment to strike out the title would be, and we felt that it would improve the bill if water transportation finally were left in.

As I said a while ago in my brief remarks, railroads have not fared quite so badly as they would have you believe, although their plight is an unhappy one, just as is the plight of steel, the building industry, agriculture, and other industries in this country. They will get well, so to speak, if and when other industries get well. They will all come out together or they will all sink together. Do not forget that. If you undertake to make agriculture foot the bill, as the Secretary of Agriculture, and many others from farm sections, including myself, believe will be the case, if you take from agriculture, already sick and depressed, in order to make railroads completely well, you are going to leave agriculture in a deplorable condition. Following the line of thought just a little further as to how railroads have fared, I find in Barron's, the National Weekly, of July 24, 1939:

Railroad gross revenues for June were 12 percent ahead of gross for June of 1938, according to preliminary reports from 91 class I railroads. Freight revenues were up 13.9 percent and passenger revenues up 9.4 percent.

As to the condition of agriculture, in yesterday's Washington Evening Star, looking through it at random, I found the following headlines all on one page:

Lower prices reduce farm-buying power.
Farmers' cash income declines 3 percent from year ago.
One percent drop from May level reverses usual trend.
Downward trend shown by trade in cotton futures.

Mr. Chairman, what is the situation? The railroads that are asking the farmers to bail them out are improving rapidly. Their receipts are 14 percent over last year, as shown in this statement. Agriculture, that you are asking to bear a large portion of the burden, is constantly going downward and, as stated a while ago, we have seen lower prices recently on some farm commodities than have been seen for many years.

They tell us that if the railroads are to be regulated, all forms of transportation must be regulated. That will not hold water, for this reason: The railroads were regulated beginning in the 1870's for one reason, and that was because they had been guilty of abuses such as rebates, discriminations, and overcharges, until it became necessary in the interest of the public to regulate them. No one will deny that. The water carriers have gone along attending to their own business and charging fair rates. I sat on the committee throughout weeks and weeks of hearings and not a shipper came in and said, "We must have relief from abuses or high charges by the water carriers." Who asked for this? The railroads of the country demanded this regulation and in my opinion for one purpose, in order that they might get at least a substantial part of the traffic that is now going to the water carriers. How can they do that? There is only one way by which they can get it, Mr. Chairman, and that is to raise the cost of water transportation. It does not take a smart man to come to that conclusion.

I remember when I was a boy my daddy had three Jersey milk cows. One of them had to be regulated? She was breaking into his fields and the neighbors' fields and pasture, so we had to make her carry a heavy yoke. The other two cows were not regulated; yet they were competitors for every blade of grass and every bundle of cane we threw out. It is true that the cow carrying the heavy yoke was sometimes last to get there, but that was a condition which she brought about herself. Nobody ever suggested that we put a yoke on the other two cows to place them all on a fair competitive basis. [Applause.]

And so it is in this case. If the railroads had not been guilty of flagrant abuses, they would not have to be regulated and certainly it would be unfair, unwise, and unjustifiable to place a ball and chain, as it were, upon the water carriers of the country, with the result that the farmers, ranchmen, and shippers generally will have to pay a higher transportation cost.

Here is another fallacious argument. They tell you with great eloquence that competing forms of transportation have free highways and free waterways, no part of which the railways enjoy, but that is not so. I read again from the Wall Street Journal of July 24:

> The Interstate Commerce Commission has approved an arrangement whereby the Seaboard Air Line Railway will utilize motor trucks for the transportation of less-than-carload traffic on a large part of its system.
> Receivers of the Seaboard were given Interstate Commerce Commission permission to operate in interstate and foreign commerce as a common carrier by motor vehicle on various routes in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Florida.

Who built these highways? The railroads did not, any more than the trucks and busses. The truth about the matter is the railroads now own a great many of the busses and trucks and they are running over the same roads they howl about their competitors using.

I was amazed at the information furnished by my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], who probably knows more about the water question, including water carriers, than any other man in Congress and who, incidentally, is vigorously supporting this amendment, when he showed me figures as to the amount of train-ferry traffic handled in the ports of this country.

When he called my attention to it, I recalled the arrangement at the New York harbor. They do the same thing at many other ports throughout the United States. Thus the railroads are using ports that are improved and maintained at Government expense, just as the water carriers are doing.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I call attention to the fact that 4 years ago the train ferry traffic in the port of New York was valued at $14,560,590,000.

Mr. SOUTH. Fourteen and one-half billion dollars in New York alone.

Mr. MANSFIELD. While the traffic handled by all ocean bottoms combined, of this Nation and all nations of the world, was $13,224,034,000.

Mr. SOUTH. I thank the gentleman. This shows you that the railroad crowd who are now crying for help—the men who are responsible for the appointment of the Committee of Six, composed of three members of railroad management and three members of railroad labor, have not given us a fair picture of the existing situation. I heard a great deal about the Committee of Six from the time the hearings opened until they closed. Some of the sponsors of this bill had the audacity to ask the committee to adjourn until the railroad bill was finished and placed before the committee. Not a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will deny that statement. So I say to you that this is a railroad bill. The newspapers freely referred to it until quite recently as "a bill for the relief of the railroads."

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Was there any gentleman amongst the six who was a member of the merchant marine organizations of the Nation?

Mr. SOUTH. Not a man, I may say to the gentleman from New York, who was not connected with the railroads. There were three from railroad management and three from railroad labor.

Mr. Chairman, they tell you something else that will not hold water. I do not blame my colleagues for wanting to hurry this bill through as quietly as possible. We ought to have a day to discuss this amendment alone. They tell you that water traffic wants to be regulated.

Senator WHEELER, who sponsored this legislation in the Senate, said in debate on May 22:

> The water carriers do not want any regulation at all. They want everything thrown wide open. * * * Generally speaking, the industry has almost universally said, whenever we talk regulation with them, "We do not want regulation. It will be more detrimental and costly to the consuming public if we have regulation."

It is true that General Ashburn, president of the Federal Barge Line, did not oppose regulation when he appeared before our committee, but the general had this to say about the railroad lobby:

> Now, who wants this Federal Barge Line sold? The railroads and the railroad employees.
> Well, they have passed their propaganda around to such an extent that it is pitiful. I want to say this to this committee, that if the railroads got the Inland Waterways Corporation; if they got all of the profits it made, it would not pay them the cost of the propaganda that they put out to kill it. They have been spending millions of dollars, just throwing them away, and poisoning the mind of all whom they can reach by any method whatsoever. * * * They do not know that we made $1,105,000 last year, a nice profit for us, but immaterial to the railroads.
> The railroads have spent double that amount of money trying to put us out of business, and if they had the $1,105,000 it would not be a drop in the bucket. * * * All of these resolutions are prepared, in my opinion, by the Association of American Railroads.

As pointed out in Secretary Wallace's letter to Speaker BANKHEAD:

> The Transportation Act of 1920, the Motor Carriers Act of 1935, and the bills now before Congress together reflects a new departure in public policy from that which prevailed before 1920. The basic purpose of regulation, as embodied in the granger legislation of the 1870's and in the act to regulate commerce of 1887, was to protect the public against extortionate rail rates, unjust discriminations, and undue preferences. This policy of preventing abuses was continued for many years without significant modification. With the passage of the Transportation Act of 1920, however, the public began to assume responsibility for the financial condition of the railroads.

I seriously question the wisdom of this departure, which has been an invitation to the railroads to come to the Government for protection and assistance, rather than to improve their service and meet legitimate competition, as other industries have been forced to do. I submit also that we need less regulation, now that additional forms of transportation have developed, particularly motor carriers, and a greater mileage of inland waterways, than was the case in the 1870's when the regulations of the railroads was first undertaken.

To my mind, one of the most important phases of this subject, and one which I fear is often overlooked, is the lessening of the amount of goods shipped when rates are increased. This is especially true as to many perishable agricultural products, which cannot be moved at all where rates are prohibitive. In other words, by an attempt to insure the railroads a large profit on each shipment, we force the price of the article so high as to prevent its moving in commerce. Thus all forms of transportation must suffer by a lessening of traffic, and producers and consumers suffer also.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, all during the last session of Congress the proposition grew that there must be some relief for the railway structure of this country if it is to be saved from bankruptcy. The proposition was well founded on the fact that more than one-third of the railway systems in this country were then and still are in bankruptcies and receiverships and that many of them are not making their naked operating costs. The chief work of this session of Congress, as announced by the administration and by the newspapers of this country, was to be a transportation reorganization bill which would rescue the railways of this country from the plight in which they found themselves and stabilize them, if possible, and put them on a self-sustaining basis.

I may say here that if we fail, some day Uncle Sam is going to have thrown into his lap a $25,000,000,000 railroad structure. If this ever happens, it is going to cost the Federal Treasury not less than $1,000,000,000 a year to sustain that railroad structure and keep it going.

The first consideration with which we are confronted is that the railways of the country, which still carry 90 percent of all the freight traffic in the country and can carry the other 10 percent without buying another engine or freight car, are not only the chief and only indispensible agency of transportation in this country and not only in normal times but even more so in an emergency, as was amply proved during the World War, but they represent an investment five times larger than that of all the water lines, all the bus lines, and all the truck lines combined. The American people have $25,000,000,000 of their savings invested in this railway structure, which was not built and maintained, like the waterways and highways, at a cost of billions of dollars to the taxpayers.

After a blare of trumpets all last year about the vital necessity, above all other things, of there being passed by this Congress a law to reorganize and stabilize the railways and include all forms of transportation under one joint regulation, here we are in the last days of this session considering a bill which is being emasculated and hamstrung against the railways, with Members vying with each other on the floor in abusing and condemning them. If we keep it up, by the time we get done with it, it seems to me, the best way to help the railways under this bill would be to strike out the enacting clause.

Listening to a lot of the speeches made the last 2 days, one would conclude they want to destroy the railroads, not save them.

The railways will agree to your striking the enacting clause out of this bill, as I told you a little while ago, if you will repeal three lines in section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act which have them hog-tied and hobbled so they cannot run their own business. You cannot compare the railway systems of this country with any other industry—automobiles, steel, oil, or anything else—as is being done by Members, because it is the only industry of the country that has nothing whatever to say about running its own business, while all the others go scot free and soak the customers for all the traffic will bear. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I expect to support this bill. I want to congratulate the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, one of the great committees in the House, for what it has accomplished in bringing out this legislation for our consideration. I think it is a good bill and that it should receive the support of all who are sincerely interested in solving the transportation problems of this country, insofar as they can be solved by legislation.

I have been surprised during the course of the general debate at the emphasis which has been placed upon one particular section of the bill, namely, that relating to the regulation of some types of water carriers. This is only one of many important provisions of the bill, and it seems to me that the discussion has magnified its importance very greatly. I certainly have nothing but the friendliest of feelings for water transportation and for our inland waterway system. The greatest threat which has been offered to that system, as far as legislation is concerned, was the Pettengill bill, which has been passed twice by this House during recent years. I think that if the Pettengill bill had been passed it would have greatly crippled, if it did not entirely destroy, our inland waterway system.

I am one of a comparatively few Members of the House who spoke and voted against that bill on both occasions when it was before us. I felt, when the Pettengill bill was before us, that we ought not to permit the railroads to use unfair methods of competition against the waterways, and today it seems to me equally important that we do not permit the waterways, through a lack of regulation, to offer unfair competition to the railroads. Yet I find that many of those who opposed the Pettengill bill in order to protect the waterways are unwilling to give the railroads an opportunity for equal protection against unfair water competition. It seems to me that this bill is perfectly fair to both rail and water carriers; and I am supporting the provisions relating to the regulation of water carriers on that basis.

Another feature of this discussion which has surprised me somewhat has been the attempt to bring farmers into this picture. I represent a purely agricultural district; and my farmers, like all other farmers, are intensely interested in transportation. As far as water transportation is concerned, however, I think it can safely be said that farmers are less interested in it than any other group of our population. And yet many who have opposed the regulatory provisions of this bill, as far as waterways are concerned, have tried to make us believe that this is a matter of great concern to farmers. No evidence has been offered in support of this proposition, and none can be.

Aside from a comparatively small number of farmers who have access to waterway transportation for nonperishable farm products, there is no farmer who derives any direct benefit from water transportation, or any indirect benefit except such as may accrue to the country as a whole.

In the first place, there are only a comparatively few of the many farm products of this country which can be shipped by water; and by that I mean particularly by our inland-waterway system. The producers of fruits and vegetables, of dairy products, of livestock and livestock products are not interested in waterway transportation, because it is too slow and out of date.

I do not know to what extent cotton may be carried by water from local shipping points to terminal markets, and am, therefore, not going to make any observations on that particular subject.

Aside from cotton, however, the only class of farm products which can be transported and which is being transported on our inland-waterway system is grain. The transportation of grain by water carriers, however, is done in bulk, and, therefore, there is nothing contained in this bill which would in any way deprive a grain farmer of any advantage which he may have today through his ability to transport grain by water.

Furthermore, as already indicated, unless a farmer happens to have a local grain market which has access to water transportation to a terminal market, there is no way by which he can directly profit from water transportation. I mean by that that there is no way by which he can receive any better price for his product. The price of grain is determined at terminal markets, such as Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapolis, Duluth, Chicago, and St. Louis. The price which the farmer receives at the country elevators is the price at the terminal market less the freight.

There is no possible way by which even 1 percent of the grain in this country can be carried from local marketing points to the terminal markets by water. Whatever may happen to the transportation of grain after it gets to the terminal market is not ordinarily of any concern, as far as the price to the farmer is concerned. However, even if it should be assumed that some markets have a definite advantage and can pay a little higher price than would otherwise be the case because of the facilities for water transportation for export or to milling centers, that advantage would still be unaffected by this bill, because such transportation is in bulk, and, therefore, not subject to regulation.

In view of the foregoing, I am unable to understand how any farmer, excepting possibly the cotton farmer, and for whom I am not attempting to speak, can be adversely affected by the provisions for the regulation of water transportation contained in this bill.

On the other hand, any measure which tends to help the general transportation problem of this country is of benefit to the farmer. In the main, the farmer is dependent upon rail transportation for the marketing of his products. To some extent he is dependent upon highway transportation. This bill will not injuriously affect highway transportation and will help rail transportation. To the extent that it will permit railroads to continue giving good service on their existing mileage, it will be beneficial to farmers.

Many Members representing agricultural districts have had some experience in recent years when railroads attempted to abandon branch lines. I know that in every such case which came to my attention farmers generally were very much distressed and disturbed about this loss of transportation facilities, and in many cases opposed in every way possible the abandonment of such branch lines. I know that in other cases the abandonment of these lines has very adversely affected the marketing facilities of farmers.

One more thing I would like to mention, and that is that in every rural community traversed by a railroad the railroad is the largest taxpayer. It contributes its share to the upkeep of schools and highways and other governmental functions, and to that extent takes something away from the crushing burden of taxation on farm land. This is an additional reason why the farmers generally are interested in the welfare and prosperity of the railroads.

I sincerely hope that no one from the agricultural sections of this country will be misled by arguments which have been advanced to the effect that the provisions of this bill regulating water transportation are adverse to the interest of the farmer. On the contrary, if the passage of this bill strengthens our transportation system, it will be of great direct benefit to the farmer. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to my distinguished colleague from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] when he called attention to the fact that the farmers are not interested in water rates. It would be highly interesting, if the fears of a great number of us here were to be realized and this bill would be passed, to see how my good friend would explain to the farmers the increase in rail rates which inevitably would occur when the one legitimate club the farmer has over increasing rail rates would be taken away from him.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest and attention to a colloquy which occurred between two members of the committee, my distinguished and beloved friend from California, Mr. LEA, and my equally distinguished and beloved friend from New York, JIM WADSWORTH, concerning a very simple little matter which was referred to by one of the gentlemen as being technical, and by this auditor considered as being highly practical.

As a matter of fact, an analysis of what will happen if this amendment is not adopted is best to be found in what might result if I were to ask some distinguished Philadelphia lawyer or New York banker who had been reared in the environs of a great city to come down and attempt to operate the ranching enterprise with which I have been so long connected.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered here to strike this from the bill, if this were a bill that we were going to be called upon to finally vote upon, would be eminently satisfactory to me and would be satisfactory to all those who want to see every single kind of major transportation means given a fair trial and an opportunity to live, and I am for this amendment in the faint hope that these fellows will keep rushing this thing and in the conference will come to their senses and bring out a railroad bill and let water alone.

Mr. Chairman, if there is any agency qualified to undertake rate making in connection with water carriers, it is the Maritime Commission now in existence, and why this great committee has not considered, in view of the fact it wants to regulate waterways, the high propriety of putting water transportation under a commission which understands it, as contradistinguished to a commission which certainly does not understand it, I cannot understand.

When we get down to brass tacks with reference to this situation, I have come to the conclusion that we have spent an awful lot of time without going into the practical matters which will inevitably ensue if this amendment is not adopted. This bill is shot full of pernicious and noxious provisions which will hamper and annoy and, finally, destroy water transportation of various kinds. Five minutes will not permit me to go into all of that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, to say I was surprised at the statement of my good friend from Kansas that the farmers of the country are not interested in freight rates, puts it mildly.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman certainly misunderstood me if he understood me to say that the farmers are not interested in freight rates. I said they were not interested in water transportation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentleman does not understand that the matter of water transportation involves freight rates, I am sure he does not appreciate the importance of the legislation under consideration. If there is anybody in the country who is interested in reasonable freight rates, I think it is the farmer, and I believe that the growers of wheat, corn, cotton, rice, sugar, and tobacco, the so-called major commodities, are interested.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would like to make a statement——

Mr. HOPE. Just for a short question.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I want to reply to your statement in which you said that no farm commodities are transported by waterways, by calling your attention to the fact that as a result of modern refrigeration, the people of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington are enabled to utilize the magnificent fruits grown on the Pacific coast that are transported on our intercoastal waterways through the Panama Canal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration contains three parts, one with respect to the regulation of railroads, the second with respect to motor carriers, and the third with respect to the regulation of water carriers.

I think the members of the committee must have assumed that there would be opposition to the regulation of waterways. The proposal was made in 1920 and it failed. So this bill has been formulated on the theory that the so-called regulation of waterways may be eliminated from this measure without in anywise emasculating all the provisions for the regulation of railways and motor carriers.

Now, who is asking for the regulation of waterways? Certainly not the farmer. Are the inland-waterway carriers asking for the regulation? The only reasonable argument for their regulation that has been presented by the members of the Committee is that in some cases, in intercoastal traffic, there are some unfair practices. That traffic is under the regulation of the Maritime Commission. This Commission knows about water problems. The remedy is not to take it away from that Commission and put it under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, whose docket is already crowded—it sometimes takes them years and years to make an investigation—but to amend existing law and provide for the regulation of such traffic by the Maritime Commission.

No one who speaks for the inland waterways has asked for the regulation of water traffic and, concretely, there have been exempted from the provisions of this bill 15 percent of the inland-waterway traffic. The contract carriers of bulk commodities and the private carriers have been exempt. Now we propose to regulate the remaining, substantially 3 percent, of the traffic, and, in my judgment, this would not be in the interest of either the producers or the consumers of the country. We have had too much regulation. We tried to regulate the coal industry and we must admit that we failed. There is no demand for the regulation of our inland waterways and I respectfully submit that the provision should be stricken from the bill. [Applause.] In extending my remarks, as I have stated, title III, which is part III of the bill, should be stricken. It undertakes to solve the problem of the railroads by regulating waterways. As I have just stated, regulation is not always the remedy, and when it is invoked the remedy is frequently worse than the disease.

If the regulation of waterways is included, railroads would not be benefited. This is not my view, but it is the view of outstanding transportation authorities, including Mr. Eastman, of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Again I repeat that the farmers of the country, and especially in the Mississippi Valley and Great Plains, are more interested in rates than almost any other class of our citizens. For years they have pleaded for the improvement for navigation of the lower Mississippi River, the upper Mississippi River, and the Missouri River. They know that the construction of the Panama Canal has adversely affected transportation rates in the great bread basket of the Nation. I dissent most emphatically with the view that farmers are not interested in water transportation. They are interested in cheap rates, reasonable rates; they are interested in low rates; they are interested in fair and just rates.

The lumber markets of the Pacific Northwest, the fruit markets of Oregon and California have been promoted by cheap coastal water rates. Refrigerated vessels provide for the transportation of fruits from the west coast to the east coast. Vegetables are also transported by boats. A shipload of watermelons arrived in Washington just a day or two ago. Not only the farmers, not only those engaged in agriculture, but the consumers of the country get the benefit of low rates. Water rates mean low rates. The control of waterways mean high rates; it means the elimination of waterways.

THE ADMINISTRATION

It is said that the administration favors the bill. I shall not repeat. I have heretofore, in the general debate, pointed out that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Chairman of the Maritime Commission oppose the regulation of waterways. They were appointed by the President; they constitute an important part of the administration.

INLAND WATERWAYS

Congress has appropriated something like $250,000,000 in the improvement for navigation of the Ohio River and its tributaries. Millions of dollars are being spent now in improving the upper Mississippi River for navigation. Large sums are being expended primarily at the request of the Western States in the improvement of the Missouri River for navigation. All know that the demand for these improvements was cheaper transportation.

I emphasize that some 18 percent of the traffic of the country is water-borne; 15 percent is exempt from the provisions of the bill; private carriers are exempt; contract carriers of bulk products are exempt. Only 3 percent of the water-borne traffic remains and it is said that only this 3 percent will be regulated. Congress appropriates for all water carriers. If only 3 percent, the individual farmer, the individual businessman, are subject to the regulation of the pending bill, Congress would be in the attitude of continuing appropriations for improvements for navigation for the benefit of those who are able to own their own carriers and the contract carriers of a few favored commodities. I believe in equal treatment for all commodities whether manufactured, agricultural, or raw materials.

REGULATION

There is probably some competition in the radio industry, but there is no demand for the regulation of that industry. Regulation should be in response to a public demand. There is no material demand for the regulation of the inland waterways. The Government has heretofore subsidized inland waterways in an effort to restore river traffic along the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Regulation would thwart the intent of Congress and the will of the people.

As I said a few moments ago there are those who believe that regulation is the solution of all economic problems. The coal industry was in difficulties. Regulation was advocated. We passed not one coal bill, but two bills for the regulation of the coal industry. It is generally admitted that a monumental mistake was made. It should always be remembered that the aim of those who advocate the regulation of waterways is the raising of rates and the raising of water rates means the elimination of water traffic.

Contract carriers of bulk commodities and private carriers are eliminated in the pending bill, but the real bill will be written in conference. I remind the Representatives of the Great Lakes to "beware of the Greeks bearing gifts."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, every amendment that has been offered, every speech that has been made, demonstrates the fact that this waterway section ought to be stricken out of this bill or the whole bill sent back to the committee for further study. There is one objectionable phase of this bill that has not yet appeared in debate or in any of the amendments that have been brought to the attention of the Committee. There has been a repeated statement on the part of the proponents of this bill that it has nothing to do with foreign commerce. I said in my first extension of remarks that a gentleman connected with a prominent shipping company had advised me that upon reading this bill and trying to determine what it did and how extensive its scope was he was compelled to admit that he could not determine. He said that his company could not prepare to go further into building vessels for foreign commerce until there had been determined what regulations are to be imposed, with full information as to the extent to which American vessels engaged in foreign commerce will be affected. I call attention to the fact that the uncertainties faced by water carriers are recognized by the bill draftsmen themselves. They are confessedly unable to tell what part of existing law is abrogated by the bill, what part modified, or what part remains in effect. They repeal specifically only a few provisions of existing statutes. The carriers must guess as to what laws apply to them and which commission has authority in the premises. Uncertainties and confusion arise with respect to vessels engaged in foreign commerce. Some of these uncertainties will be due to the fact that some vessels at the same time will be carrying both foreign and interstate cargo, and in some respects the cargo will be subject to laws administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission and in some respects to laws administered by the Maritime Commission. Furthermore, a carrier who may engage in foreign commerce will, as to the transoceanic part of his commerce, be subject to the Maritime Commission, and as to the intercoastal part he will be subject to the administration of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He will be faced with the duty of complying with two different forms of regulation, which will either mean increased expenses to him or will mean that he will decide to engage only in strictly transoceanic service. These matters cannot help but have profound effect on the export and import business of the United States, touching the business of producers and the pocketbooks of the consumers in every part of the United States.

Let this bill be studied to find out what is in it before we carry it into law.

It is claimed that the bill is not intended to affect carriers in foreign trade. In fact, these carriers will face many uncertainties in connection with this legislation. These uncertainties will continue for long periods. The effective date of title II of the bill is postponed, and may be further postponed by the Interstate Commerce Commission until July 1, 1941. In the meantime, and for a long period thereafter, the shipping industry will be uncertain as to its duties and its rights, its responsibilities and its burdens, under the new legislative set-up.

No one can foresee the exact effect on foreign-trade carriers of placing domestic water carriers under one regulatory body and the foreign carriers under another.

Section 302 (i), page 243 of the bill, limits the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over coastwise and intercoastal carriers to traffic between ports of the United States. Under decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, interpreting similar language in the Interstate Commerce Act, such carriers will be prohibited from establishing transshipment rates with carriers in foreign commerce. Shipments now moving under such transshipment rates will move under combination rates which, in all instances, will be higher than the rates of direct lines. The result will be that such shipments will be transported by the direct lines, which are largely foreign-flag lines. The business will be lost by our coastwise and intercoastal carriers. The result will be that while the coastwise carrier is in a protected trade, he loses his business to a foreign-flag carrier just the same as if the foreign-flag carrier were admitted to the coastwise or intercoastal trade.

Section 302 (i) (3) (B) provides that the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission in case of a movement to a place outside the United States shall apply only insofar as the transportation by water takes place from any place in the United States to any other place therein prior to transshipment at a place within the United States for movement to a place outside thereof, and, in case of a movement from a place outside the United States, shall apply only insofar as such transportation by water takes place between places in the United States after transshipment at a place within the United States in a movement from a place outside thereof.

The American carrier in foreign trade cannot know whether transshipment will be interpreted as meaning delivery to or from the custody of the carrier, its agents, or terminal in foreign commerce, or as meaning the placing of goods on board vessel or the discharging of goods from the vessel in foreign commerce. Section 17 of the Shipping Act, 1916, places jurisdiction of terminal operations in the Maritime Commission. The carrier, at least until after long experience under the new legislation, will not know to which Commission he is subject in connection with terminal operations involved in transshipment.

Furthermore, such carriers in foreign commerce handle considerable cargo under through bills of lading between foreign ports with transshipment at ports in the United States. Will it be contended that since such shipments move under through bills of lading issued by the foreign-trade carrier but involving domestic transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission will have jurisdiction of the carrier engaged in foreign commerce. In such cases there is obviously involved the question of jurisdiction over trucking and lighterage from the pier of the initial carrier to the pier of the on-going line.

The trans-Atlantic carriers and the intercoastal carriers, which by arrangement for through rates are able to compete with the lines operating directly between the ports on the Pacific coast and Europe, will be uncertain as to their ability to continue such competition. As stated above, unless transshipment rates can be continued, traffic will be lost to direct foreign-flag lines. The intercoastal and trans-Atlantic carriers will not know whether they can effect a proper division of the through rates, transfer charges, or customary brokerages. They will not know whether they can have any proper basis for settlement of damages for joint account in connection with such through operations. Furthermore, they cannot know whether they will be able to meet direct competition which takes on certain classes of freight collect.

Intercoastal and foreign-trade carriers, under existing law, must file rate agreements for approval under section 15 of the Shipping Act, 1916. They are in danger of great confusion as to what will happen to these agreements in connection with the pending bill. Their business activities will be disrupted and they will lose business to direct carriers pending the working-out of the legislative plan. For example, it may be that only pooling agreements will be subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission under the bill while other agreements of carriers—including interstate carriers—may, at least to some extent, remain subject to the jurisdiction of the Maritime Commission. These are not necessarily questions which can be solved by more detailed drafting of the pending legislation. They cannot be fully solved except through long experience, and meanwhile the shipping trade suffers by the continuing uncertainty.

As stated above the uncertainties and confusion also arise because the same vessel will at the same time be carrying both foreign and interstate cargo. In some respect the cargo will be subject to laws administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission and in some respect to the laws administered by the Maritime Commission. Furthermore, a common carrier by water subject to the bill, who may be engaged in carrying foreign commerce will, as to the transoceanic part of the carrying, be subject to the Maritime Commission, but as to the intercoastal or coastwise part of the carrying be subject to the Intersate Commerce Commission He will be faced with the duty of complying with two quite different forms of regulation, which will either mean increased expenses to him or will mean that he will decide to engage only in strictly transocean services. These matters cannot help but have profound effects on the export and import business of the United States, touching the business of producers and the pocketbooks of the consumers in every part of the United States.

A carrier transporting goods in foreign commerce is subject to the reparation provisions of section 22 of the Shipping Act, 1916. Insofar as the intercoastal or coastwise portion of that foreign trade is concerned, such carriers will be subject to the provisions of section 307 of the bill, which covers not only the interstate commerce by water but foreign commerce by water when it takes place within the United States.

I have stated that the uncertainties faced by water carriers are recognized by the bill draftsmen themselves. They are confessedly unable to tell what parts of existing law are abrogated by the bill, what parts are modified, and what parts remain unaffected. They repeal specifically only a few provisions of existing statutes and by general language in section 320 (a) repeal other provisions of existing law not specifically designated. No one can tell what law will be applicable to any particular carrier or to any particular transportation until after a long period of experience. This in itself indicates the dangerous plan of the legislation. The carrier must guess as to what laws apply to him and which Commission has authority in the premises. At best, the carrier will be subject to two regulatory agencies with respect to much of the transportation conducted by it. To make the uncertainty more complete, the bill contemplates that the Interstate Commerce Commission conduct its activities without respect to the different types of transportation concerned. The water carrier will have no definite agency, not connected with railroads or motors, on which to depend for authoritative interpretation or information.

S. 2009 in section 302 (i) (3), page 243, limits the scope of the rate regulation of water carriers so far as foreign commerce is concerned only to that portion taking place within the United States before and after transshipment from the vessel that actually operates in the foreign trade.

Thus, if merchandise moves in continuous transit from San Francisco to Liverpool, if it were to be transshipped at New York, the rate from San Francisco to New York would be subject to regulation but not the rate from New York to Liverpool. If the cargo moved without transshipment, no part of the rate would be subject to the proposed regulation.

In the example cited, the undoubted effect of such regulation would be to deprive the domestic water carriers of their participation in favor of the unregulated transportation without transshipment.

In the example cited, also, there is no American line operating from San Francisco to Liverpool, the only direct lines being under foreign flags.

There are a number of American lines that operate principally in the foreign trade but carry some cargo between intermediate American ports. If they are subsidized, they have to refund the subsidy on the domestic revenues. Take, for example, the American President Lines' round-the-world service. They transport considerable cargo between New York and San Francisco. If their rates are regulated upward so that this business is diverted to other forms of transportation, the continuance of their round-the-world service is made even more difficult.

Attention is directed to section 313, page 274, which would give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to prescribe uniform accounting methods, require reports, financial statements, and so forth. This requirement is more extensive than rate regulation, because it is administered so as not to be limited to the regulated part of the carriers' business, but if any part of a company's business is regulated, all of its activities, whether or not relating to shipping, become subject to the uniform accounting requirements. See I. C. C. v. Goodrich Transit Co. (224 U. S. 194), wherein such records were required even of amusement parks owned by a carrier.

Section 304 (d), page 250, recognizes that American producers that have to supply American markets on a regulated rate will be at a decided disadvantage in competing with foreign producers shipping upon an unregulated rate. Take, for example, wood pulp, the production of which in the Southern States is now being encouraged but which must compete with pulp from Sweden. The foreign producer already has the advantage of lower production costs, and it is questionable whether the American industry could survive against further disadvantages in the transportation rate. Similarly affected would be newsprint paper, china clay, and so forth. Furthermore, the foreigner would know exactly what it cost the American producer to market his product and could undersell him every time. It is true a permissible exemption is provided, but before this could be invoked, the market might be lost, and it is questionable whether the American consumer would go to the trouble to try to obtain and retain the exemption when the foreign product is available without such trouble.

There is nothing proposed in the bill that would prevent any large consumer from owning its own ships to transport its own raw materials and finished products, but only the larger companies have the volume to make this practical. Thus the large companies would operate under what would amount to an unregulated rate, and their smaller competitors would have to patronize the regulated common carrier. The larger companies would know exactly what it cost the smaller companies to market their product, but the smaller companies would not have the same advantage. Already several large companies are considering buying ships to avoid the increased costs anticipated from the proposed regulation. Such a trend would injure all forms of transportation.

The least that could be done would be to grant a permissive exemption by amending section 303 (e), on page 246 of S. 2009, by inserting after "water", in line 7, "when such transportation is competitive with a private carrier or carriers or."

It has been asked, if all these things are true, why do some water carriers favor S. 2009?

The answer is simple. All water carriers were unanimous that the repeal of the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act would put them out of business. They are now told that if they do not let S. 2009 pass, the old Pettengill bill will be revived and passed.

The railroads regard S. 2009 as equivalent in effect to the repeal of the fourth section. Some water lines believe they could live longer under S. 2009 than if the fourth section were repealed; the remainder do not believe Congress can be persuaded to do either.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I regret I must differ with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and its distinguished chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], with reference to some of the provisions of this bill.

With the exception of part 3, it is a meritorious measure, particularly the provision granting assistance to the railroads from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We all realize that the railroads are in bad financial straits, and, regardless of who is responsible for their present condition, the security and economic stability of the country make it imperative that the railroads continue to operate. But, Mr. Chairman, while conceding the necessity of assisting the railroads, we should not adopt the policy of robbing Peter to pay Paul. The stabilization of the railroads of the country should not be made at the expense of our domestic water-borne commerce and indirectly to the foreign commerce of the country. I do not believe this matter has been studied with a view to the actual harm and irreparable damage this bill will do to our intercoastal, coastwise, and inland water carriers under the provisions of part 3.

With all due respect to the committee, it is not just to the Members of Congress or to the people of the country to bring a bill of this magnitude covering many complicated questions and dump it on the lap of Congress to study it in a brief 24 hours before its actual consideration. In all fairness to the Members of Congress, they should be given more time to study it, and the people should be given an opportunity to know more about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the statement that no inland water carrier was interested in this legislation or wanted the legislation, I read from the statement of Mr. Clemens, who was the vice president of the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co., and next in importance on the Mississippi River to the Federal Barge Lines. He states as follows:

> At the present time the Commission is without power to establish minimum rates where one of the carriers in a joint through rate is a water carrier, and this bill proposes to add that power to the existing power of the Commission. In this respect we believe that it is only fair. That is to say, if the all-rail rate between Columbus, Ohio, and Memphis, Tenn., for example, is subject to a minimum rate power on the part of the Commission, we have no objection to the grant of similar power of the Commission in respect of joint rail and water service between those points contemplating the use of our line in conjunction with the rail line. In fact, we think that sort of regulation would be helpful to our operation.

Further on he said:

> We believe that such a grant would be very helpful in stabilizing rail and water rates and in the prevention of destructive competition or anything like discrimination among various shippers or localities.

Previously to that it was stated that two-thirds of this common-carrier business was joint rail and water, and that the other one-third was not regulated, and he would not be averse to that being regulated.

As stated the other day when I was before the committee, on this Mississippi River System, 63,000,000 tons are handled annually, and of that, 5,000,000 is handled by common and contract carriers. Half of that, or 2,700,000 tons, is handled by the Federal Barge Lines and the balance distributed among a number of smaller carriers. Two-thirds of it is evidently already regulated. This bill proposes to bring in the other one-third of the common-carrier traffic and the contract traffic that is not bulk in character, and that is what the fight is about.

It does not amount to much, so far as the total tonnage is concerned, but it is believed just and equitable that it be included. I do not see that there is any particular reason for anybody to get excited about this portion of the bill. I cannot see why it is being fought so bitterly unless there is some peculiar advantage the gentlemen fear to lose. As far as tonnage is concerned, it is not very great. I read a letter the other day to the committee from the Baker Tow Boat Co. of Alabama in which they were complaining about certain competitive practices of the Federal Barge Lines. By bringing them all under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so far as minimum rates in interstate commerce are concerned, this phase can be eliminated, and these small companies can have a better chance to survive. It is my present belief that this bill will do more good for the small water carriers as well as the larger water carriers than any other similar piece of legislation that can be produced by this Congress, and I think the motion to strike out should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] is recognized.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the railroads of the country are indispensable. We must have them. We must have them not only in peacetime, but we must have them in wartime. They are in financial stress. We are either going to give them a square deal with other means of transportation, or they will go into the hands of the Government and we will have Government ownership. We can take either one horn or the other.

As the very best evidence of what the Government thinks of their financial condition I want to read to you a statement made by Jesse Jones, which appears in Barron's, the national financial weekly:

> A new plan to reduce railroad fixed charges, with the aid of Federal loans, has been proposed by Jesse Jones, Administrator of the new Federal Loan Agency. Under the Jones plan, an offer would be made to holders to turn in their bonds in return for a cash payment, plus an amount of preferred stock, which along with the cash would equal the par value of their bonds. For example, the cash offer might be $600 for each $1,000 bond, in which case $400 of preferred would complete the offer. The cash payment would be loaned to the railroads by the R. F. C. on the security of new 4-percent bonds. While permitting a reduction in fixed charges, the plan would not result in any reduction of total railroad capitalization.

Now, when the Government recognizes the fact that the railroad companies are in that condition where stock is absolutely worthless and bonds are worth only 60 percent of their face value in cash, it is time for Congress to commence to take notice.

I am not defending the railroads. The present operators of railroads are now compelled to answer for the sins of their fathers committed 60 or 75 years ago when they exploited this country, but nevertheless we are confronted with a condition which demands action to protect not only employees but innocent investors as well.

In addition to that, I want to call attention to the fact that these railroads throughout the United States employ over a million men and women who do the work. They wear your cotton, I will say to the distinguished gentlemen from the South. They eat flour from the North. They eat beef, pork, and mutton from the West, and they eat corn products from the Middle West. We must maintain these railroads so that they can be continued in employment, and besides we need the railroads.

I will say this to the gentleman from Texas—he referred to the Northern Pacific Railroad, that its earnings had increased 12 percent over last year. The gentleman is correct, but its earnings before and now are still in the red, and its common stock is selling from $9 to $10 a share, when the par value of the capital stock is over $100 per share. Now, all people are not suckers. If this stock was worth any more than $9 or $10 a share, they would be buying it.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. Will this regulation result in higher rates? If not, why do the railroads want it, and if it will, who will pay it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Here is the point. It is up to the Government to put all transportation systems into one and regulate them all. Raise a little here and lower a little there.

Mr. WARREN. Why did they not put air in here?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not write this bill. Here is the point. Give the railroads a chance for existence. This transportation can always be depended on; airplanes crash, trucks get stuck, but trains carry on.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is recognized.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in reply to my colleague from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] that the railroads not only run their own business but they come mighty near running the State and the Nation. It has been said that they run the State from which the gentleman comes, too.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They do not.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The essence of this whole thing is to freeze this water into the capitalization of the railroads and make it possible for them to earn dividends on it. When the gentleman talks about the stock of the Northern Pacific Railroad being worth 100 cents on the dollar at one time, I am amazed. It is said to be all water, not representing any investment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. It is the only aggregation in this country that has not been shaken down during the so-called depression.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Sure. The original act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission was passed for the benefit of the railroads. The farmers did ask for it, but they did not get much out of it. The only thing that the shippers got out of the Transportation Act of 1920 was the long-and-short-haul clause, the fourth section. The rest of it was for the benefit of the railroads, to freeze into the capitalization ten or twelve billion dollars. That has been repeated a hundred times everywhere, and it is true, and they would have got away with it if the trucks had not come. Now the trucks have come, and the railroads have reached out and put them under the Interstate Commerce Commission. If they can wipe out the water transportation also, what will be their plan? Why, to increase the rates on water transportation, as they have on trucks, clear up almost to the railroad rates. They have put on their own truck lines and their own passenger-bus lines. They control the transportation of this country and put rates on sufficiently high so that they can earn dividends not only on the actual investment but on all the water frozen in, with the consent of the I. C. C.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. Does the gentleman know that out in the western country where railroad rates are high, for reasons sufficient to the railroad companies, but unsatisfactory to the people, the trucks are tied to that railroad rate and they are today paying 58 percent more than they are paying in this congested country in the East where it is hilly and there are many curves, and the traffic density is great on account of the density of population, as opposed to that traffic in the Great Plains area of the West?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Precisely.

Mr. SOUTH. And that is because the railroad rate is the yardstick.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Precisely. If they can make a yardstick out of the railroad rates and put it in force on the trucks and the water lines——

Mr. SOUTH. That is what they are doing.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. If they freeze all that water into their capitalization they have got to earn their dividends on it. That is the heart of the problem. The essence of this bill was actually before us when the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Arkansas that provided that the capitalization under these consolidations should not exceed the actual value. We voted down that amendment. It should have been accepted in fairness to the shipping world. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON].

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have theoretically four classes of water traffic: Inland water traffic, coastwise water traffic, foreign water traffic, and bicoastal water traffic. The foreign traffic is of aid to the railroads and is a type of water traffic we should help and encourage by acquiring foreign markets, because in so doing we provide more commerce for the railroads. All forms of water traffic except the bicoastal traffic is old, and has existed ever since we have had water traffic. The inland water carriers aid the railroads and have never given them trouble. The coastal traffic is in about the same position; it is an aid to the railroad carriers, it carries merchandise from one point to another on the coast, for consumption in the port to which such cargo is carried, or for reshipment or transportation into the interior.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman is making a very fine statement, and I dislike to interrupt him. Does the gentleman not agree with the Secretary of War who says that under the provisions of the pending bill water carriers can easily be regulated and taxed out of existence without the recapture of enough tonnage to affect railroad earnings appreciably?

Mr. THORKELSON. I may say to the gentleman that I do agree with that statement of the Secretary of War. They have always been regulated more or less by a special commission for inland water carriers, and a maritime board for foreign commerce.

The only water traffic that has really given any trouble to the railroads is the bicoastal traffic, and we have only had that since the building of the Panama Canal. Previous to that time, transportation by water from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast was routed through the Strait of Magellan or around Cape Horn. This, of course, was too costly, so the railroads carried most of the transcontinental freight.

The point involved in this is the long haul of the railroads. That is really the issue for consideration. In my opinion the railroads ought to have the right and the privilege to regulate the rates from one coast to another in such manner that they might compete with the water traffic from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. I believe this is what the railroads would like to do, and it is my opinion that they should be permitted to operate under a transcontinental rate so that they may compete with water traffic. It is only fair that the railroads should be allowed to compete with bicoastal water commerce and if they are allowed to do so, that in itself will permit rehabilitation because of increase of earnings from long hauls. The merchant marine should in reality carry freight from all ports to foreign countries instead of engaging in competition with railroads by carrying freight in bicoastal trade. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I preface the few remarks I shall make at this time by reading a paragraph from a letter I recently received from one of the great organizations of the city of Pittsburgh. This letterhead bears a list of the names of many of the great men of Pittsburgh and vicinity, which lends a great deal of weight to this statement I am about to read. This is the paragraph:

> Low-cost water transportation has made and kept Pittsburgh the steel center of the world, and regulation such as you are attempting would take away its inherent advantages. Industry intentionally located on our rivers—the Monongahela, Allegheny, and Ohio—to take advantage of water transportation.

I submit this for the information of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania and neighboring States, who imagine they have a bonanza in the making in promoting this bill.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am sorry; I cannot yield in the 3½ minutes' time allotted me now.

It may be interesting in connection with the amendment under consideration for a few minutes to consider what and to whom we propose to turn our water transportation facilities over. I have, therefore, gone to Who's Who in America to find out just what sort of men the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission is composed of. It is interesting to note the background of the members of the Commission. I know you are all familiar with this news article I have here, which appeared in the Washington Post a couple of days ago regarding the new member who was appointed, and whose picture is also attached, Mr. W. J. Patterson. The article starts out by saying that he was a director of the Interstate Commerce Commission Bureau of Safety, and a former railroad brakeman, switchman, and conductor, just appointed to the Commission to replace one of the members who has resigned.

Now, going on down the line, Clyde B. Aitchison, and I am not casting any aspersions or reflections on the reputations or the honesty or integrity of any of these gentlemen; I am only pointing out to you that you are attempting to turn over a competing transportation facility to men who are inherently interested in and whose background comes as a result of and through their interest in railroads, railroading, and allied lines. Clyde B. Aitchison was a former railroad commissioner of Oregon from 1907 to 1916, and then solicitor of the National Association of Railway Commissioners.

Joseph Eastman was counsel for the employees of various street-railway companies, Federal Coordinator of Transportation.

Frank McManamy was United States Chief Inspector of Locomotives at Washington, D. C., Assistant Director of Transportation of the United States Railroad Administration, and chairman of the Committee on Design of Standard Locomotives and Cars for United States Railroads in charge of all construction and maintenance of all railroad equipment during Federal control of railroads.

And so on down the line with almost the entire list. Is it not too much to expect that a group of men such as this list, comprising as it does mostly former railroad men and those whose vocation has been allied with that particular transportation activity, would be the find of the century when it comes to the protection of our competitive transportation facilities?

I am in favor of this amendment because I am fearful of the results and consequences if we turn complete control over to the railroad commission.

We are just beginning to realize some savings in the Northwest from the river waterways. I want to quote from a letter I have recently received, showing the possibilities as to one item alone—coal and coke—if we can further develop this facility. The letter is as follows:

> The Twin Cities are beginning to receive some direct results of the river "low freight" schedule, and this season there will be a large saving, not only of the actual saving in freight, but larger still the threat which it holds over its larger competitors.
> For instance, Koppers coke is selling for the lowest figure that it has ever been delivered here in the Twin Cities, $11.60 per ton for stove and nut size. Last year this same coke sold for $12.90 per ton and 2 years ago the price was $13.90, or $2.30 more, and this was due in part to the coke we brought from Pittsburgh a year ago by the rivers (Ohio, Mississippi).

It is said that similar savings are soon to be realized on coal, of which we use about 2,000,000 tons per year in Minneapolis alone. It would be quite a nice saving to the consumer up there if we could go on and fully develop and utilize our river highways, would it not?

Another item on which we are realizing definite and actual savings is binder twine, which is an important element of farm costs to the great grain farmers of the Northwest. At the twine factory at Stillwater, Minn., which is in my own district, they have had to save on their overhead costs here and there as the price of twine has been forced down with foreign competition from a high of 22 cents a pound to a present price only slightly over one-third that amount. Over $141,000 has been saved in their freight costs by shipping their raw material up the river by barge from New Orleans. Here is the chart showing actual yearly savings:

Actual saving in transportation charges on fiber tonnage consigned to the Minnesota State prison, received via the Federal Barge Lines—all-water route—through the Stillwater River terminal, from New Orleans, La., to Stillwater, Minn., against the rates applicable via the all-rail routes

Season	Weight	Rail rate	Water rate	Saving
	Pounds	Cents	Cents
1929	4,270,039	0.58	0.445	$5,764.55
1930	2,365,347	.58	.445	3,193.22
1931	12,276,424	.58	.445	16,573.17
1932	13,974,644	.59	.455	18,865.76
1933	7,141,381	.59	.455	9,640.86
	8,351,205	.59	.445	12,109.25
1934	1,844,239	.58	.435	2,674.15
1935	3,435,334	.58	.435	4,981.23
	2,594,216	.6206	.4756	3,761.61
	7,819,513	.6206	.474	11,463.41
1936	11,410,827	.6206	.474	16,728.27
1937	10,165,121	.58	.435	14,739.43
1938	1,651,236	.58	.44	2,311.73
	11,654,961	.64	.48	18,647.94
Total	98,954,489			141,454.58

Other similar savings are being realized on gasoline and oils and on grain shipments and other bulk goods. It will be one of the crimes of the century if these benefits to the shipper, the farmer, and the consumer are denied by this ill-advised piece of legislation. I hope the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

COLUMBIA RIVER PORTS, NATION'S LARGEST GRAIN EXPORTERS. COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION GIVES RAIL SHIPPERS 8-CENT DIFFERENTIAL ON WHEAT LOANS OVER WATER SHIPPERS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, on July 14, this year, the Associated Press carried the following news item:

SHIPMENTS OF WHEAT LARGE

PORTLAND, July 14.—Portland and the Columbia River exported 26,422,764 bushels of grain during the cereal year ending June 30, the merchants exchange reported Thursday, the greatest annual water-borne export since 1929.

While figures for other wheat-shipping ports were lacking, the exchange hazarded the statement that the big shipment made Portland and neighboring river ports the Nation's largest grain exporters.

The figure exceeded by almost 11,000,000 bushels the 1937-38 total of 15,830,304 bushels.

Europe, principally the United Kingdom, took the bulk of the foreign-shipped grain—18,628,766 bushels.

From this it will be noted that the port of Portland, through the Columbia River and its tributaries, is perhaps the largest shipper of grain of any port in America. Transportation is of strategic importance in the merchandising of grain. Water-borne traffic on the Columbia River has been a material factor in the development of the port of Portland trade territory. The Federal Government has expended large sums throughout the years in improving the channel of this second largest river in the United States, and the State of Oregon and local port authorities have added to this investment in the development of the port and facilities for handling water-borne traffic. However, the Commodity Credit Corporation, a governmental agency, has penalized water shippers of this immense product. It has placed a 73-cents-per-bushel loan on wheat delivered at Portland if shipped by rail, and if shipped by river boat or truck there is a penalty of 8 cents per bushel or a net loan price in Portland of 65 cents. I recently took up with the Commodity Credit Corporation this unjust discriminatory regulation affecting water and truck shipments, but no relief has been forthcoming. In answer to my letter I received from the Commodity Credit Corporation the following reply, together with the attached enclosure:

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION,
Washington, July 6, 1939.

Hon. HOMER D. ANGELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ANGELL: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 5th with reference to the differential of 8 cents per bushel on wheat stored at Portland under the 1939 wheat-loan program between wheat shipped by rail and wheat shipped by boat or truck.

The same differential applies to all designated terminal markets. The 8-cent differential is neither a penalty on nonrail shipments nor a premium on rail shipments. The 8 cents is allowed only in those cases where the original shipment was by rail and the paid-in freight bill has been registered for transit and made available to the Corporation in the manner stated in section 1 of 1939 C. C. C. Wheat Form 1 (Supplement 1), a copy of which is enclosed. The 8 cents is intended to reflect the average transit balance with respect to registered in-bound freight bills made available to the Corporation in connection with loans made upon wheat moved to terminal markets by rail.

Very truly yours,

JOHN D. GOODLOE, Vice President.

The foregoing schedule of loan values applies to wheat delivered to any designated terminal market in carload lots which has been shipped by rail from a country shipping point to one of the designated terminal markets, as evidenced by paid freight bills duly registered for transit privileges and other documents as required under the instructions (1939 C. C. C. Wheat Form 1): Provided, That Commodity Credit Corporation will accept in lieu of such bills warehouse receipts on which a legend, signed by the warehouseman, has been stamped or typewritten in the following form or certificate of such warehouseman containing such an undertaking:

"The wheat represented hereby was received by rail freight from ---------- point of origin, as evidenced by original paid freight bill which has been officially registered for transit and will be held and kept alive, within statutory limitations, for the benefit of the holder hereof.

(Town) (County) (State)

----------"

(Warehouseman)

Otherwise a deduction of 8 cents per bushel shall be made.

2. Amount of loan at country points:

(a) Except for the States and counties hereinafter set forth, Commodity Credit Corporation will determine the loan value on wheat in storage on the farm or in country warehouses by deducting from the designated terminal market value an amount equal to 3 cents more than the all-rail interstate freight rate (in effect on May 1, 1939) from the country warehouse points, or the shipping point designated by the producer, to such terminal market; except that in the appropriate counties of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, and Wisconsin such rates shall be computed on the basis of the average freight rate from all shipping points other than subterminal markets in each county to the appropriate terminal market.

Each approved warehouse will be advised as to the loan value applicable to wheat stored in such warehouse. Producers may obtain from the county committee the loan values applicable to wheat stored on each farm and in the public warehouses. Loan values will be published in C. C. C. Wheat Form 1, supplement 2, for each State.

The loan value of eligible wheat stored in approved subterminal warehouses (approved warehouses other than those situated in the designated terminal markets that have executed the terminal warehouse agreement, 1939 C. C. C. Wheat Form H), which was shipped by rail may be determined by deducting from the appropriate designated terminal market loan value an amount equal to the transit balance of the through freight rate from point of origin for such wheat to such terminal market; provided in the case of wheat stored at any railroad transit point, taking a penalty by reason of out-of-line movement, or for any other reason, to the appropriate designated market, there shall be added to such transit balance an amount equal to any out-of-line or other costs incurred in storing loan wheat in such position as determined by Commodity Credit Corporation. Arrangements have been made for the railroads to indicate transit balance of the through rate on the inbound paid freight bills on a basis of 100 pounds. To obtain the loan value as determined above, the warehouse receipts, in addition to other required documents, must be accompanied by the original paid freight bills duly registered for transit privileges: Provided, That Commodity Credit Corporation will accept in lieu of such bills, warehouse receipts on which a legend, signed by the warehouseman, has been stamped or typewritten substantially in the following form or certificate of such warehouseman containing such an undertaking:

"The wheat represented hereby was received by rail freight as evidenced by original paid freight bill which has been officially registered for transit and will be held and kept alive, within statutory and tariff limitations, for the benefit of the holder hereof. The aforementioned original paid freight bill carries notation thereon by the railroad agent showing transit balance, if any, of through rate from _____ (Town) (County) (State)
point of origin, to _____ (Basic loan terminal market) of _____ cents per 100 pounds.
_____ _____"
(Address) (Warehouseman)

(b) Separate schedules of loan values will be issued for the States and counties hereinafter set forth:

Idaho: All counties south of Idaho County.

Utah: All counties.

Colorado: Alamosa, Archuleta, Chaffee, Conejos, Costilla, Custer, Delta, Dolores, Eagle, Fremont, Garfield, La Plata, Mesa, Moffat, Montezuma, Montrose, Ouray, Pitkin, Rio Blanco, Rio Grande, Routt, Saguache, San Miguel.

Wyoming: Lincoln, Sublette, Sweetwater, Teton, Uinta.

All counties of Indiana except Lake, Newton, Benton, Porter, Jasper, White, La Porte, St. Joseph, Marshall, Fulton, Elkhart, Kosciusko, and Starke.

Michigan.	Virginia.
Ohio.	Maryland.
Kentucky.	Delaware.
Tennessee.	Pennsylvania.
West Virginia.	New York.

The loan value of eligible wheat stored in approved subterminal warehouses in the foregoing area (approved warehouses that have executed the Terminal Warehouse Agreement, 1939 C. C. C. Wheat Form H) which was shipped by rail in the movement of natural market direction as approved by Commodity Credit Corporation, shall be determined by adding 3 cents per bushel to the county loan value for the county from which the wheat is shipped and an amount equal to the transit value of the freight paid from point of origin to markets designated by Commodity Credit Corporation. Lending agencies and county committees are advised that in each instance such transit value must be verified by the agency manager of the loan agency of Reconstruction Finance Corporation serving the area. In such cases the loan documents must be accompanied by the original paid freight bills or certificates of the warehouseman and other required documents as set forth in section 2 (a) above. If eligible, loan wheat is stored in approved subterminal warehouses located at transit points, taking a penalty by reason of back haul, or out of line of natural market movement, such penalty or other costs by reason of such movement, as determined by Commodity Credit Corporation, shall be deducted from loan values as determined above.

I have taken up with the Inland Empire Waterways Association, with headquarters in Walla Walla, Wash., a large grain-producing community, the matter of the unwarranted discrimination against water and truck carriers in favor of rail shippers, and received, under date of July 18, 1939, a letter which is of interest in the consideration of this important subject. The letter follows:

INLAND EMPIRE WATERWAYS ASSOCIATION,
Walla Walla, Wash., July 18, 1939.

Hon. HOMER D. ANGELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ANGELL: I have read with a great deal of interest the letter of Mr. John A. Goodloe, vice president and general manager of the Commodity Credit Corporation, sent to you in answer to your letter concerning the 8-cent differential applied to all wheat loans on wheat not moving to Portland by rail.

I am distinctly at a loss to understand Mr. Goodloe's letter for apparently he is attempting to lead us to believe that the 8 cents is a milling-in-transit charge made by the railroads. The actual milling-in-transit rate is 1½ cents per hundredweight and with 60 pounds to a bushel, that would mean a charge of 9/10 cent per bushel.

Last year the Commodity Credit Corporation in their contract made a 4-cents-a-bushel differential. This year that has been jumped 100 percent to 8 cents. The only comforting thought was that last year only a small percentage of the wheat from this area was actually under Government loan.

It is my understanding that the Commodity Credit Corporation is applying a Nation-wide average. In other words, what the experience has been over the entire country on interior markets as well as coast export markets. They are asking that the export markets take up some of the cost of milling-in-transit privileges occasioned by the interior markets.

One cannot reach any other conclusion than that this is a gross discrimination against wheat from the Pacific Northwest. In support of my contention that this 8-cents-per-bushel differential should not apply to an export terminal market, attached you will find copy of news article under date of July 14, wherein it is stated that Portland and neighboring Columbia River ports are the Nation's largest grain exporters. Also, I am enclosing an article appearing in the paper as of July 14, where the railroads released a statement that the ruling of the Commodity Credit Corporation this year is a distinct aid and advantage to the rails in handling the wheat from the Pacific Northwest.

The milling-in-transit rate has not increased during the past year, and if 4 cents a bushel was right last year, why the 100-percent jump to 8 cents this year? Also, if the Northwest market, namely Portland, is principally an export market and the largest export market in the Nation today, why should the farmers of this area be asked to absorb the cost of milling-in-transit privileges from other markets that are principally interior markets where the reshipment of grain for milling purposes is a major part of the business?

The 73-cents-a-bushel loan value is not predicated to absorb 8 cents a bushel milling-in-transit charges and Mr. Goodloe's statement is inconsistent in this regard for if 95 percent of the milling-in-transit privileges are not exercised then the 8 cents per bushel is not applied and one can only reach the conclusion that a direct discrimination is being made against other forms of transportation.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has taken an arbitrary viewpoint in forcing the farmers of the Pacific Northwest to use rail service, which we do not believe is fair or just. The farmers are making elaborate plans to use river transportation extensively; and while I do not believe this will deter river shipments to any appreciable degree, it is more of a psychological disadvantage rather than a practical one, and it is my understanding that many of the old-line companies are contracting to buy wheat from the North Pacific Grain Growers cooperatives, especially from this immediate area, granting the privilege to these cooperatives to use barge service. Bulk loading facilities have been established at The Dalles, at Arlington, and two facilities have been established at the river bank in Walla Walla County.

I can appreciate that the Commodity Credit Corporation does not like to back down from a regulation they have issued. However, I do believe you are justified in inquiring as to why Portland, principally an export market and the largest one in the Nation today, should be placed on the same footing with interior markets.

The further thought occurs to me that if by administration we cannot get recognition of our particular problems in the Pacific Northwest, that we should by legislation make certain we are protected. Any application of a national average, particularly on wheat, works to our disadvantage. The Department of Agriculture has consistently refused to recognize Portland as an export wheat market and give to Portland its natural inherent advantages.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely,

H. G. WEST,
Executive Vice President.

The United Press, under a Portland date line of July 14, carried an announcement of particular interest with respect to this development, as follows:

RULING IS AID TO RAILROADS—DECISION GIVES ADVANTAGE IN FIERCE COMPETITION FOR GRAIN BUSINESS

PORTLAND, July 14.—Rail routes, in fierce competition with barges for the grain-shipping business in central Oregon, appeared Friday to hold a decided upper hand after two preliminary skirmishes, from which the farmers themselves may stand to benefit.

The rail routes were aided by a decision by the Commodity Credit Corporation, which announced from Washington that they will deduct 8 cents, instead of the 4 cents a bushel of last year, from the terminal loan value of wheat that is shipped by barge or truck, in order to cover transit privileges.

Previously, barge shippers, in an effort to attract the business, had announced they would give farmers the same transportation rate for bulk shipment of wheat that had applied heretofore only on sacked wheat. The differential had been 2 cents a hundredweight.

With rail shippers freed from the 8-cent transit deduction set by the Federal wheat lending agency, they will receive a long value of 73 cents a bushel on their wheat, while barge or truck freighters will get only 65 cents.

In direct shipping rates from The Dalles to Portland, where most of central Oregon's wheat is stored, the river route has a slight edge in rates, charging 7 cents per hundredweight to 7½ by the rails.

Because of this differential, water-route shippers had made plans greatly to increase wheat tonnage at The Dalles, building a new bulk-grain elevator to handle the wheat with a capacity of 1,200 tons.

The Oregon Journal on July 20, 1939, had the following editorial with respect to this discriminatory regulation affecting water transportation:

IT'S A QUEER PLAN TO AID NAVIGATION AND TO DESTROY IT

There may be half-a-dozen technical explanations of the arbitrary increase from 4 to 8 cents a bushel in the transit-privilege deductions made by the Commodity Credit Corporation on Federal-loan grain moving to Portland terminals by barge and truck from eastern Oregon and Washington.

But the fact remains that it is a body blow at Columbia River transportation of grain from The Dalles, Walla Walla, Port Kelly, Wasco, and Grass Valley, just at a time when growers are in position to use it effectively. It is discriminatory.

Worst of all, it creates an anomalous situation, in which one agency of government spends millions to make cheap Columbia River transportation possible, and the other promptly wipes out all its advantages.

True, growers who repay their C. C. C. loans, when and if they can, will get a refund. Or they can hold their grain in the country and get full value. Or they can use the railroads. But if they try to move it by water, to save money, as the Wasco County grain growers moved 250 tons in bulk from the port of The Dalles recently, they are docked 8 cents a bushel, their loan value is cut from 73 to 65 cents.

The Government might as well say, "Now that we've built Bonneville Dam and made the Columbia Channel usable, you can use the railroads—or else."

Mr. Chairman, I am calling this matter to the attention of the House at this time, as it has an important bearing on the railroad legislation we are considering. Throughout the years the Federal Government and local authorities have expended large sums in the improvement of our waterways and port facilities, the purpose being to maintain these natural facilities for transportation for the benefit of all the people. The railroads are privately owned and are not subject to the same free use by all of our citizens as are these great waterways. We should continue to maintain intact the policy we have followed in the past in keeping these waterways free and untrammeled. It would be a mistake to place them under joint regulation with railroads in the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. As disclosed by the regulations involved in commodity loans, the water shippers are placed at a disadvantage where conflicts arise between the two methods of transportation.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JONES of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXCHANGE OF SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Rept. No. 1317), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 273

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2697, an act to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

AMENDMENT TO PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT, 1921

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 4998, an act to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, with Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY]?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. DOXEY, Mr. KLEBERG, and Mr. HOPE.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

The SPEAKER. On account of the lamented death of the late Representative McReynolds, of Tennessee, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Chair makes the following announcement:

Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 53, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as a member of the New York World's Fair Commission, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday, tomorrow, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement on the handling of the strike situation by Governor Murphy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

THE LATE CHARLES FREDERICK SCOTT

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, since the adjournment of the Seventy-fifth Congress last year one of the ablest men who ever represented Kansas in our National Legislature passed to the great beyond, to that "undiscover'd country from whose bourn no traveler returns." I refer to the late Charles Frederick Scott, who served with great distinction in the House for 10 years, 6 years as Congressman at large and 4 years from the Second Congresisonal District, which I now have the honor to represent.

During the last 4 years of his service he was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. He was the solitary man from Kansas who served as chairman of an exclusive committee. The late Hon. Daniel Anthony was eligible to be chairman of the Appropriations Committee, but his health prevented him from active service in that capacity. It was during Mr. Scott's service as chairman of this great committee that the Farm Bureau was established in his effort to secure and establish closer contact and cooperation between the farmer and the Department of Agriculture.

Charles F. Scott brought to the public service in the House of Representatives one of the finest and clearest minds that Kansas ever furnished the Nation. In his relatively short service he made a deep impression on all who were Members at that time. It has been 28 years since he completed his service in the House and there remain at present only two men in the House who served with him, but each of these men have a distinct recollection of his outstanding ability as well as his greatness of heart. They are Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH, of Illinois, and Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado. Mr. TAYLOR declared that Mr. Scott was one of the very ablest men among the many distinguished statesmen who had served as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. Mr. SABATH spoke with enthusiastic warmth of Mr. Scott's virtues as a statesman and a gentleman. The fact that so few remain of the nearly half thousand who served with him at that time illustrates again the transitory character of our service here and the relations with our fellow Members.

Of the 434 men who greeted me December 1, 1924, when I first came to the House to fill the unexpired term of the late E. C. Little, less than 50 remain. I have served under six different Speakers, four of whom have gone to the land of their dreams. Of all the Members from Kansas in the Senate and House, only Senator CAPPER remains in the Senate, and I am the lone survivor in the House. Of the roster of the Senate and the House at that time, Curtis, Anthony, White, Sproul, and Strong have passed away.

All this illustrates the changes even such a short time makes in official life here in Washington. But the crowded intervening years have hurried on with incredible swiftness, leaving but a dim and vanishing image of the scores who have shared a common service in our branch of the legislative department fashioned for us by our fathers in the Constitution. Today we are here exhilerated by our combined struggle to solve the problems of our unhappy country, but delighted with the incomparable associations and historic surroundings—and tomorrow we will be but memories. Mr. Scott knew and understood this and he crowded into his decade of service surprising achievements which built for him an enviable record of accomplishment of which his State and country can well be proud.

Mr. Scott was a master of good English. His masterful editorials and eloquent speeches all attest this fact. They all reflected brilliant and fastidious diction and meticulous rhetoric. Had it not been for his innate goodness of heart and his generous charity for those less gifted than himself I should have always been embarrassed when speaking in his presence, for I well knew how every awkward expression and familiar liberty taken with the King's English must have grated on his sensibilities. But, knowing his prodigality of forgiveness, I felt no timidity however lame my rhetoric and faulty my logic. As a writer of pure English and faultless editorial style, he probably had no equal, certainly no superior, in the State of Kansas, noted as it is for its galaxy of brilliant newspapermen.

Mr. Scott was an outstanding leader in whatever capacity that engaged his varied and unusual talents. In the past half century he often served on the board of regents of his beloved alma mater, the University of Kansas, whose interests were always very close to his heart. From his graduation in 1881 to the last, he gave the best of his counsel and energy to its prosperity. The first time I ever saw him was when he represented the university regents in accepting the keys of the Physics and Electrical Engineering Building at the Kansas University the fall of 1895 from John Seaton, who got tangled up in the name of the building; and we all admired Mr. Scott's agility in extricating Mr. Seaton from his futile efforts to unscramble the name of that building which good old John, a member of the building committee of the State legislature, was delegated to turn over to the board of regents.

Mr. Scott was one of the organizers of the Kansas State Editorial Association and remained one of its most influential members to the day of his death. He was also one of the organizers of the Kansas Day Club, which still is a potent force in the Republican Party in Kansas. His vital interests covered a wide and varied range. He was a political leader of national repute, an educational leader of high rank, a religious leader of power in his church, and a civic leader in his community whose interests were always very dear to his heart. In all these various activities, he always gave the best of his rich endowments, and his fine work will long leave its deep impression upon his State and community.

The Iola Daily Register was Mr. Scott's absorbing interest, and to it he gave all of his fine talents and transcendent editorial ability. He was intrinsically and fundamentally an editor. While he was no doubt familiar with every department of his paper, his talents found their perfect work on the editorial page, which was eagerly read by thousands, not only for the sound and illuminating matter it contained, but also for the faultless and trenchant English he was wont to employ.

You scarcely ever found an error of any sort in the Register because everything from misspelled words to slips in rhetoric had to pass under his critical eye. It was Mr. Scott's delight to catch his editorial brethren in some ancient and honorable blunder in the misuse of some familiar word such as "flout" and "flaunt." All this was done in the sweetest good humor, as some dear old teacher like "Mr. Chips" would have corrected one of the boys at Brookfield. And everybody enjoyed the experience, even the victim of the criticism.

In the editorial gatherings in Kansas Mr. Scott for many years was a most conspicuous and popular figure and his sound and wise counsel was always welcomed. He became an enthusiastic devotee of golf and some of my most pleasant memories of recreation in Washington are the games at the Rock Creek golf course with Mr. Scott when years ago he was with the National Republican Committee in Washington. I was told by the late Herbert J. Cornwell of the St. John News that Mr. Scott was one of the first members of the Kansas State Editorial Golf Tournament and one of its most consistent players.

Mr. Scott was a statesman rather than a politician. The tricks and game of politics were beneath his taste and his frank, outspoken sincerity. He depended upon logic and persuasion rather than the arts of logrolling and trading. Illustrating Mr. Scott's intellectual and political integrity is the fact not widely known but none the less true that his support of William Allen White for Governor on an independent anti-Klan ticket in 1924 cost him the office of Secretary of Agriculture in President Coolidge's Cabinet.

I was elected to Congress November 4, 1924, to fill out the unexpired term of the late Col. E. C. Little. On the morning of the 5th of November a reporter of the Kansas City Star called me up at my home west of Kansas City, Kans., very early and told me that it was rumored that a Kansas man might become Secretary of Agriculture and asked if I had any comment. I immediately replied that the second district had two men eminently qualified, Charles F. Scott and Samuel B. Haskins. The Associated Press carried this in the Washington papers and immediately Chief Justice Taft called at the White House and told President Coolidge that if he (Taft) had been elected in 1912 he would have appointed Scott as Secretary of Agriculture. Secretary of War Weeks had served with Mr. Scott in the House and told the President that in his opinion Mr. Scott was the best Republican west of the Mississippi River. Frank Hitchcock came down from New York and testified to the splendid qualifications of Mr. Scott and President Coolidge was sold on that appointment.

Some post office matters left unsettled by Colonel Little required my presence in Washington so on November 10 I came here and went to the office of the late Vice President Curtis, then the senior Senator from Kansas. The first thing Mr. Curtis said was that President Coolidge had it in his mind to appoint Mr. Scott Secretary of Agriculture and though there was no one he would rather see appointed than Mr. Scott, it would never do politically on account of Scott's support of an independent candidate for Governor.

When Congress met in December I made my first appointment with a President to inquire what the President's desire was, as it was then known that Kansas was to have the appointment. President Coolidge frankly confirmed what Senator Curtis had told me, and what Taft, Weeks, and Hitchcock had said of Mr. Scott, and that he would gladly appoint Mr. Scott if the Kansas delegation would request it. Soon after that the delegation met and passed a resolution endorsing Mr. Jardine. While to my knowledge there was no objection to Mr. Jardine, every Member of the Kansas delegation preferred above all others Mr. Scott, but for this political reason saw fit to vote as they did. On such slender threads does destiny sometimes hang. It seems unfortunate that this man, an unswerving party adherent, should just once bolt his party ticket at the cost probably of his life's ambition. But he did it upon what he conscientiously considered exalted fundamental principles, and I have no doubt that with all this known to him he would have acted the same.

Two officers of the House are yet here who were attached to the personnel of the House when Mr. Scott was a Member, the doorkeeper, Mr. Sinnott, and the assistant clerk, William Tyler Page. Both remember Mr. Scott as one of the strongest debaters in the House. He spoke rarely, but with great force and eloquence, for he always thoroughly understood his subject which gave him the close attention of the House whenever he spoke.

During Mr. Scott's busy life he became the author of several books among which were Letters written while in Mexico and Europe, History of Allen and Woodson Counties (Kans.), and In the Far East. Mr. Scott accompanied the Kansas relief ship to Belgium in 1915, at which time he visited the western front, being conducted by German officers.

Too high eulogy cannot be pronounced upon Mr. Scott as a man of upright character, exemplary life, and unimpeachable integrity. As neighbor and friend, as coworker in every good cause, as an unswerving contender for what his conscience and judgment convinced him was right, Mr. Scott had no superior.

Along with Mr. Scott's devotion to his paper was his supreme interest in his home and family. Here he was very happy and fortunate. He was the father of three sons and one daughter, all well established in life, and one taking his place as editor of the Iola Register. He left as a priceless legacy to his posterity an honored and distinguished name, a life filled with unselfish devotion to his family, his State, and his country.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 5144. An act to authorize the board of directors of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf to dedicate a portion of Mount Olivet Road NE. and to exchange certain lands with the Secretary of the Interior, to dispose of other lands, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6076. An act to provide for the registry of pursers and surgeons as staff officers on vessels of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2065. An act to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes;

S. 2139. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the American Friends Service Committee, a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania for religious, educational, and social-service purposes;

S. 2150. An act to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act; and

S. 2666. An act providing for the exchange of certain park lands at the northern boundary of Piney Branch Parkway, near Argyle Terrace, for other lands more suitable for the use and development of Piney Branch Parkway.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 26, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Commmittee on Indian Affairs on Wednesday next, July 26, 1939, at 10 a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 793, H.
